Campus Code Debate Set By Di Senate

The Campus Code will be the topic for discussion at tonight's meeting of the Dialectic Senate.

The senate will decide whether a code of individual rights will be more exacting and effective than the present Campus Code, which reads, "Under the Campus Code you are bound on your responsibility as a gentleman to conduct yourself as such at all times, and futher to see to it, insofar as possible that your fellow students do likewise.

Senator Curt Gans introduced the bill last Tuesday on the senate floor. Several senators viewed the Code as irrelevant and worthless because it cannot be defined in detail. Senators said this factor prohibits a fair court trial should a student be charged with offense of the code.

Student Party Names 10 Fall Candidates

By STAN FISHER

The Student Party, in a meeting which saw the introduction and defeat of a proposal to forego party nominations in Town Men's districts I and II, last night nominated part of its candidates for election to the Student Legislature.

At the suggestion of the Advisory Board a motion was made and passed to appoint a committee to draw up a party platform for the fall election. Appointed to this committee by Party Chairman Leon Holt were: Roger Foushee, Gary Greer, John Brooks, and Martha Morgan.

The suggestion to no longer nominate candidates from Town I and II was made by Roger Foushee, chairman of the party advisory and grew out of advisory board discussion. In making the suggestion Foushee pointed out that SP had failed to have one of its candidates from these districts over a period of time in spite of running capable candidates.

Foushee also brought out the fact that it was hard to get candidates to run from these districts because of the improbability of election on the SP ticket.

However, Foushee's bill met with almost unanimous disfavor after Joel Fleishman addressed the group, stating that failure to run SP candidates from these districts would not give residents of these districts an opportunity to express themselves in favor of SP and that the only way to finally win in a district was to keep running candidates.

Nominations for the various campus dorm districts were as follows:

Dorm Women's II — one year seat: Anne Lucas. Because of the absence of candadates a one year seat and a six months seat will be filled at the next meeting in this district.

All other dormitory districts were held over either because of the absence of nominees or lack of representation of the incumbents.

Display Fires At Two Dorms Mar Weekend

Spencer, Alexander Lose Paper Exhibits In Mystery Blazes

By CHUCK FLINNER

Homecoming displays caused two dormitory fires over the weekend.

The first of the two fires destroyed the Spencer homecoming display and threw "sparks all over the place." The Chapel Hill fire department was called in to extinguish the blaze which began about 7 p.m. Saturday evening. No serious damage was reported.

A crepe paper homecoming display burst into flames about 2:30 a.m. and ignited a window shade in an occupied second story room. Not a single fire extinguisher could be found in the dorm to aid in getting the fire under control.

Dorm occupants rushed to the scene to fight the blaze but the crepe paper burned rapidly leaving only the wire-mesh frame of the display. Heat blistered the paint on the front door and charred the brick. Windows near the fire were broken and the frames were damaged.

The origin of the fire was not determined.

'Excellent' Rating Given Long At Debate

Tom Long achieved a 4.0 average out of a possible 5.0 at the University of Virginia discussion tournament last weekend. His average was rated as "excellent."

The debate was attended by more than 100 persons.

The topic of discussion was: Resolved: that further development of nuclear weapons should be prohibited by international agreement.

Meters Coming; Installation Now Underway

Over 400 Meters Are Being Placed On Village Streets

Chapel Hillians may be paying for their parking within the week.

Town Manager Thomas D. Rose said today that 405 meters, the purchase of which was approved Sept. 10 by the Board of Aldermen, may be installed "within four or five days."

The Dual Parking Meter Co., Canton O., which was awarded the contract, will install the meters.

The first step toward a new era in downtown parking here was taken over the weekend, when the Shaw Construction Co., Decatur, Ga., which specializes in the field, installed 213 posts for the meters in the downtown area.

It took the Shaw firm only two days to complete the job.

The meters will be automatic, dual-type. The dual meters will be used except when a single meter for a space is required because of the area. The dual machine was chosen by the Aldermen from seven investigated. The contract calls for a total expenditure of $24,806.50 for meters installed at curbside.

Opposition to the meters was voiced by local merchants initially, but the Aldermen passed the ordinance last summer.

New Program At Planetarium Is About Mars

"The Mysteries of Mars" will open at the Morehead Planetarium tonight at 8:30 and run through Nov. 24.

The program is being presented coincident with a world-wide effort of amateur and professional astronomers to unravel some of Mars' secrets during the next 26 days when the planet will be in its best observing position in years.

The Morehead Planetarium program points up some of the mysteries, including the so-called canals, changes in its polar caps and the existence of "life" on the palnet.

University Party To Hear Goldsmith

Al Goldsmith, former student body presidential nominee, will speak to the University Party tonight on issues in student government. The meeting will be at 7:15 in Roland Parker Lounges I and II.

Prospective members must obtain membership cards at this meeting in order to be eligible for party nominations, according to Jack Lawing, UP chairman.

Nominations will be made Oct. 27 and Nov. 4.

Shelling Of Quemoy Area Resumed By Red Chinese After Short Quiet Period

Student Union Or Gym? Former Favored In Poll

A random poll of 300 members of the student body revealed that Carolina students are overwhelmingly in favor of a new student union rather than a new gym.

Ninety per cent of the group polled favored a new student union.

Results from the first poll of the Polls Committee of GMAB also showed that; 50 per cent of those polled favor the present method of securing books from the Library circulation desk; 60 per cent are opposed to graduate students teaching on University level.

Inadequate dormitory space for women due to the increased women's enrollment was also revealed in the polling.

Dissatisfaction with the unpperclassmen counselors living on freshmen men's halls was also noted. 55 per cent report that the system is not being advantageously used, possibly due to the ignorance of its existance.

Ninty per cent of the students favored the formation of a Student Government committee to solve football game problems, including the high cost of date tickets, seat reservations and the method of getting to one's assigned seat.

A new cafeteria was suggested as an answer to the long lines and space accomodations of our present facilities by 80 per cent of the students included in the poll.

Dee Donroe, chairman of the committee, reports that the demand for more cultural entertainment and activities is being answered by the forming of a dance group to meet twice a week this semester.

At the request of Student Body President Don Furtado the Polls Committe recently polled all organizations concerned with inadequate space, and channeled the information to the proper authorities.

Donroe asked that any student organization, individual student or group that desires information, contact him at Graham Memorial. He also extended an invitation to those students interested in polling to join the Polls Committee.

Red China Recognition Is Phi Topic

Bill Says Cold War Contrary To Peace; Slowing Economy

U. S. recognition of Red China will be one of the major points debated by the Philanthropic Literary Society tonight at 8 on the 4th floor of New East.

The bill states that this recognition should be the first step toward a more conciliatory U. S. policy toward the Communist bloc.

he resolution states that continuance of the cold war is contrary to world peace, that the people of the U. S. are weary of the constant struggle and its cost has impeded the economic progress of the world.

The bill goes on to add that a constant threat of war accompanies this struggle and that war would mean the end of civilization as we know it.

Adoption of the bill by the Phi would mean it would go on record as favoring a more flexible U. S. Foreign policy toward the Communist bloc than has recently been assumed, "in the hope of reducing tensions and eventually breaking down the artificial barriers in existance today between East and West."

Renewed Bombardmen Lays New Situation Before New Meeting

By GENE KRAMER

TAIPEI — (AP) — Red China's siege guns barked out an end to its self-imposed cease-fire around Quemoy yesterday, laying a grave new situation before Secretary of State Dulles in his talks with Chiang Kai-Shek.

Dulles was due in Taipei at 9:30 this morning (8:30 p.m. Monday) after a trip across the top of the world in a jet tanker from Rome.

At a stopover in Fairbanks, Alaska, Dulles termed it a tragedy that the Communists had decided to return to a "warlike disposition."

The reds broke their 15-day ceasefire by pouring in more than 11,000 shells on Quemoy and other islands in two hours and 45 minutes. Later their guns turned to the Tan Islets, a few miles off the Red island bastion of Amoy.

Nationlist supply ships caught at Quemoy beaches when the barrage opened were slightly damaged, the Nationlists said.

The reinforced Nationlist garrisons on Quemoy answered the Red fire. There was no report, however, on the intensity of the return fire.

The Communists tried to blame the end to the cease-fire on the United States. A Peiping broadcast said U. S. warships escorted Nationalist supply vessels to Quemoy in violation of the set of rules set up by the Communists in establishing their cease-fire.

There is widespread feeling in Taipei that the Communists used the presence of an American LSD in the general area as a ready-made excuse to resume bombardment on the eve of Dulles' arrival.

The Nationalist Chinese have called all of the Red actions a campaign to drive a wedge between the United States and Nationlist China.

Nationalists see the cease-fire termination as putting a crimp in U. S. talk of persuading Chiang to reduce Nationlist troop strength in the offshore islands as a means of coaxing Red China to make the cease-fire permanent.

The Communists originally proclaimed a one-week cease-fire to begin Oct. 6, provided U. S. Warships did not take part in Nationlist convoys. Later they extended it for two weeks under the same conditions.

Student Union Is Step Closer After Meeting

Plans for a proposed new student union building for UNC took another step forward last week, when top Consolidated University officials met with the State Board of Higher Education's Finance Committee.

The request for the 2 million dollar structure was included in the regular biennial "Capital Improvements Program" presented to the committee by University President William C. Friday, Vice President William D. Carmichael Jr. and Business Officer and Treasurer Alexander H. Shepard.

Included in the program are plans for University expansion and development through 1965 or 70, according to President Friday, enrollment on the Chapel Hill campus alone will be swollen to an estimated 11,000 students.

The next step toward the appropriation for the union is the current deliberation of the committee, which will make recommendations to the Board of Higher Education.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Flia Lopez, George Knox, Wayne Bishop, Dennis Lee, Robert Fordham, Charles Massey, Franklin Inman, William Cruichfield and Ray Sizemore.

HOUSEMOTHER WITHOUT A HOUSE

Kappas' House Being Readied

By MARY BAHNSEN

Mrs. Jeanette L. Alling is a UNC housemother without a house—at least until January.

She is the housedirector for Kappa Kappa Gamma, Carolina's newest sorority, whose house will be re-finished.

The Kappas' house is at 302 Pittsboro St.

Mrs. Alling comes here from Ohio State University, where she held a similar position. She was chosen by the sorority's national headquarters to be house director for their new chapter established on the UNC campus last spring.

But when she arrived—no house!

The dwelling bought by the sorority is a large three story frame house at present divided into 10 separate apartments. The renovation will begin with the removal of all the interior walls.

Work is expected to start this week under the supervision of Webb and Stewart, architects, who are being advised by the National Headquarters of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority located in Columbus, Ohio.

When completed the sorority house will accomodate approximately 30 girls. The first-floor plans include a large entrance hall, formal and informal living rooms, a kitchen and a dining room. A new wing will be added to the present structure for the dining room which will seat 70 people. Also on the main floor will be the housemother's suite consisting of bedroom, living room and bath.

Plans for the second floor include 10 bedrooms and a centrally located bath. There will also be a special laundry for drip-dry washing.

On the third floor will be located the chapter room, a large bedroom, a bath and a storage space. Also on the top floor will be a dormitory furnished only with beds were grils will be able to sleep when their roommates are studying.

Interior decorating will be done in a traditional style with an emphasis on the sorority's colors, light and dark blue.

Present landscaping plans include a patio on the south side of the house and also possible terraces.

Ample off-street parking facilities will be provided behind the house.

At present the Kappa's are rooming in Whitehead Dormitory and Mrs. Alling is renting a private house in town.

Democratic Party

The healthiest thing that the Democratic Party could do was outlined by Chairman Paul Butler this past weekend.

Mr. Butler, in advocating the party take a strong stand on civil rights, points to the way that the Democratic Party can fulfill its role as the party of the people.

Already there are rumblings of discontent on behalf of Georgia gubernatorial candidate Vandiver, who spoke yesterday of a possible rift in the party with regard to the civil rights issue.

The answer to this is "Let the rift come." In the present state of affairs there is no room for an Eastland, a Faubus, or an Almond within the ranks of the Democratic party.

They may hinder the party's success through one election, but it will provide for the Democratic Party to be the party of principle in the future.

And who knows, the party with a strong civil rights stand may well win the northern urban areas that it lost in 1952 1956.

The future at present looks bright for the Democrats, it may look even brighter in the future

The Islands

The Communist Chinese have started firing on Quemoy and Matsu again. The Secretary of State of the United States and a former president of the United States have chimed in to say what a dirty trick that was.

However, the United States had two weeks in which to work out a solution to the Far East crisis and have not succeeded in doing it. Indeed, the deviation from the massive resistance policy announced only a few weeks ago has not appeared, and those few statesmen who have given suggestions for revision of policy have been ignored.

The bombardment in the Far East may shortly turn into a hot war, and unless the United States uses the maximum amount of brainpower. American blood may well be spilt in an area where there is no necessity for that spillage.

Recognition of Communist China is one key. Negotiations may follow smoothly from then on.

Library Committee

The student library committee plus graduate student will be holding a meeting tonight to discuss grievances over the library policy.

For all those who want a voice, this is the time to voice their opinions. It is hoped for the sake of future decorum that the voices will speak, and that the sentences will be heard and understood.

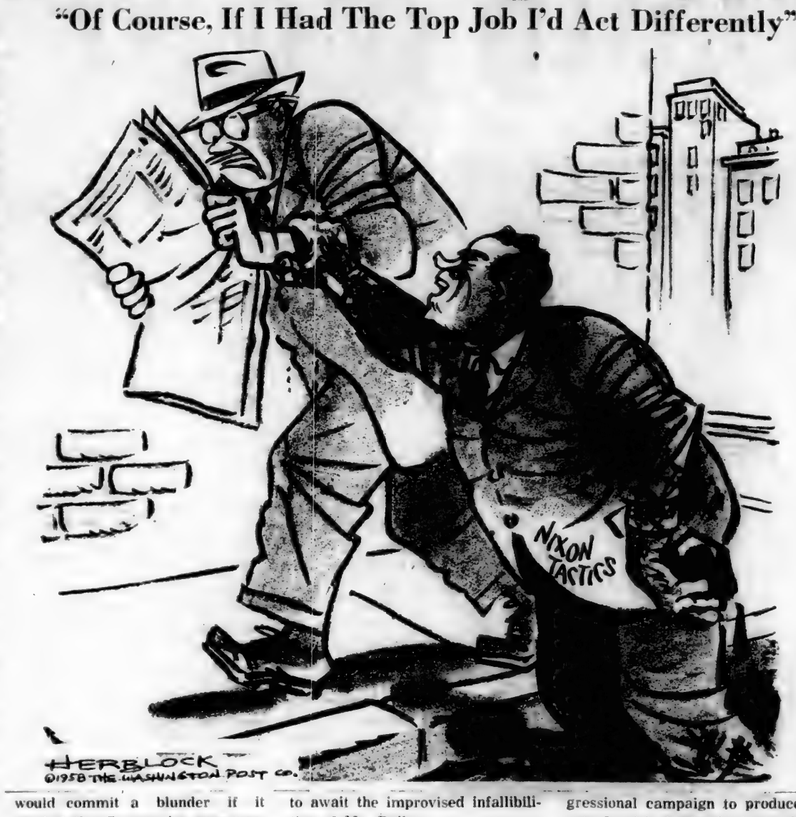
A British View On Quemoy

"Of Course, If I Had The Top Job I'd Act Differently"



Max Freedman

The Congressional campaign must not be allowed to become a national referendum on the Formosa crisis. There are warning signals that both parties are ready to use the crisis for political gain. Senator Dirksen, speaking for the Republican Congressional Committee, has made the ugly charge that the Democrats have tried to split the country while American troops are within the gunsights of enemy fire. Many Democrats have spoken as if it was their protest alone that saved the United States from blundering into a calamitous war.

The choice, in reality, has never been a simple one. The debate does not turn on the stark alternatives of reckless provocation or timid appeasement. That kind of description dishonours the complexities and unresolved doubts of a nation almost despairingly seeking a wise and effective policy.

Nothing can illustrate this sense of perplexity more clearly than the first confused response to Peking's announcement of a week's cease-fire. Part of this confusion was due, of course, to the absence of Mr. Dulles, who was taking a brief holiday in his Canadian retreat. But that is not the whole explanation. The real truth is that the American Government did not know what to make of Peking's overture. Something more than a dusty answer had to be returned to that offer. The churlish suspicions of Nationalist China could not be suffered to mould American policy. That much, at least was certain. But beyond that point all was in confusion.

There was nothing in the Administration's thinking, for instance, to match the mood of hope which marked the comment of foreign officials. Representatives of Britain and Canada, France and Australia and New Zealand all believed that the maximum importance should be given to China's initiative. They thought the United States would commit a blunder if it treated the Communist announcement as a mere trick to gain an advantage in the embattled rivalries of the Formosa area. Even a brief cease-fire, wisely used, could lead to victories for peace. They were looking beyond the Quemoy crisis to an ultimate settlement with China that would end her humiliating and dangerous quarantine in world affairs.

These distant horizons, however, carried no enchantment for the State Department. Under-Secretary Herter's statement, lack-lustre and reluctant, was plainly an interim comment. Everything had to await the improvised infallibilities of Mr. Dulles.

Where so much is unsettled, even in the highest reaches of government, it is unreasonable to expect the hurried slogans of a Conwise national decision. But that does not mean, in any sense, that Mr. Dulles can impose a veto or that Mr. Eisenhower can obtain immunity from criticism. The Administration, in fact, is living on the most astonishing doctrine. It is arguing that in quiet times, when there is no crisis, there is clearly no need of a critical debate on foreign policy; and when the country is challenged by an actual crisis it plainly is too late and too dangerous to have a great debate. This doctrine repels the genius of democracy. It forbids adventurous citizenship to function when the issues are weighted with urgent menace. Under the shelter of this slack creed public opinion goes on holiday at the very moment when the spur of its indignation or its intelligence is needed to awaken a torpid and blundering Government. Indeed, the very magnitude of the mistakes may be used to purchase a respite from criticism, for a national crisis is not born of small errors.

The Democrats have every right to feel aggrieved at their treatment during the long anxieties of the last few weeks. They have been given little important information by Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles. At no time have they been admitted to the circles where binding decisions are made. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, whose influence was decisive in the ratification of the Formosa Treaty, has been treated with almost ostentatious contempt. No wonder Speaker Sam Rayburn and Senator Lyndon Johnson, while remaining aloof from the debate itself, have encouraged the Democratic criticism to grow steadily more robust and strident. Together with the restless anxieties of many Allies, that criticism has served to bring some flexibility and moderation, before it was too late, into the dogmatism of American policy. But a point has now been reached at which it is vastly more important to have consultations on a new policy with the leaders of Congress than it is to continue the old debate, especially during the rough expediencies of a Congressional campaign.

The initiative can only come from the Administration itself. This procedure will be painful for Mr. Dulles, for his prophet's mantle will be torn away and he will have to confess to serious blunders in his Chinese policy. But pride becomes a broken shield when it tries to hide a demonstrated error. Many months ago Senator Johnson pledged the Democratic party to join the Administration in a constructive search for a new policy in the Formosa area and towards China itself. That offer still is available. Its acceptance would prevent the present crisis from becoming entangled in the competitive stupidities and jealousies of a Congressional election. —From the Manchester Guardian

Neither Black Nor White...

Norman B. Smith

"Oh, wad some Pow'r the giftie gi'e us
To see oursels as ithers see us!
—Robert Burns

Most of us come from prosperous agricultural communities or from the right side of the tracks in suburban areas. We are in the fortunate minority who have financial means and intelligence enough to attend an institution of higher learning. We live in this cultured, academic atmosphere nine months out of the year where we have heated, clean rooms and indoor plumbing, rather nice clothes, and well-balanced meals. We forget about the others.

At the State Fair Saturday night almost the first thing I noticed was the smell of stale-sweaty clothes, unwashed feet, mouths that had never known a toothbrush. I knew then the disgust that the smell of the people had aroused in Nero, almost understood how he could burn Rome in order to clean it out for his new, orderly capital city.

The people who got their money from day laborer's wages or from welfare checks or from unemployment compensation would gather the closest around concessions and side shows. They would stand transfixed by the magnetic spiels of the barkers. They would pull out grocery money and eagerly thrust it into grasping hands.

They would throw the ball or spin the needle again and again, almost winning a watch or a pair of field glasses, but usually getting a garish plaster of Paris animal to display proudly in the front room.

They would stand in amazement as an armless woman with a singsong, rasping voice told how she had conquered her disability through spirit and faith in God, and then request that everyone buy a little pamphlet giving the details of her accident, and showing a picture of her infant daughter. They watched intently as a man pulled off his shirt and stretched the flabby skin of his chest and stomach a foot out from his body. They bought his full-length nude picture because he couldn't completely undress in public. They paid an extra quarter to see Madame X in the "hospital tent" who was both male and female and who "must always remain anonymous because she showed her body in public."

They jostled and shoved and fought and cursed.

I thought about these people, remembering some of them I had known . . . . . the mother taking a handful of phlegm out of her smallest baby's mouth and flicking it off on the floor where the other children played. Then she pulled out a breast in the hopes that the baby could comfort its throat-with some warm milk . . . . the woman chasing her son who was in turn chasing his sister around the house brandishing a long screw driver, crying he would kill her. When my father rushed over from next door and caught the boy, the woman beat with red, rough fists on his back, screaming, "God damn you, let go of my son!" . . . . the flies, the smell of urine . . . . spoiled pork.

It was with relief that I saw the lights of Chapel Hill, the town that Time magazine calls cultured, erudite, one of the nicest places to live in the South. I was back once again among people who observed social etiquette, who were interested in the nicer things, who lived a hygenic life.

I thought about the football game I had attended earlier in the day. What a contrast this typical and popular facet of university life makes with the stinking, uncouth character of the masses at the State Fair.

The only odors noticable at the game were liquor and overabundant perfumes. Unless you were transplanted from the victorian period you could hardly call shocking the almost complete views of majorettes' and cheerleaders' legs, and there are but rumors of postgame parties that are shocking even by modern standards. I did see three bystanders knocked over when a pair of inebriated students started a scuffle, but this was doubtlessly an isolated example. Just once was it necessary to remove a guy in a loud blazer from the microphone when he started an obscene cheer. When two couples refused to move from the wrong seats so a blind student could sit down, an usher had to go for help, but the people graciously vacated their seats before the police could arrive. Fortunately no harm was done by flying pieces of cardboard and rolls of toilet paper. The game itself went very well. Only occasionally was there need for booing the referees; no more than three players were hurt, and just one of these had to be carried off in a stretcher.

A Troubled World

Harrison Smith

In a few weeks or months the dilemma of the Administration in its attempt to protect the islands of Quemoy and Matsu from continued bombardment from the Chinese mainland may be forgotten. To a vast number of Americans it seemed to be a useless and dangerous commitment, though the United States in a defense pact in 1954 had pledged itself to come to the aid of the aging Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek if Formosa should be invaded.

Apparently few Americans understood that we may have been also committed to save these two tiny islets, even at the risk of war with China. Senator Green upset the applecart in his letter to the Rhode Island Democrat in which he stated that the two islands were not vital to the defense of either Formosa or the United States and that "such an involvement would not command the support of the American people." It is no wonder that the President, one of the great military leaders of our time, should be annoyed by the Senator's letter, and especially Green's extraordinary statement that "if we became involved in battle the United States would be defeated because of disunity at home." There can be only one excuse for Senator Green's bad manners. Election Day is not far off!

It is conceivable that Americans overestimate the military power of both Russia and China or their interest in going to war against the Western nations. There are at least 100 million captive people in Soviet Russia who have not forgotten their homelands: East Germans, Poles, Hungarians, Czechoslovaks, Rumanians, Bulgarians, Latvians, Estonians, and Lithuanians, and millions more who speak eighty different languages. Joseph Alsop, of the New York Herald Tribune, who recently returnedf rom the Orient, reports that "Communist China is now moving towards the hideous and bloodstained phase that the Soviet Union entered when Stalin launched his massacres of the common people. If Stalin destroyed 20 million people, it is a reasonable forecast that Communist massacres in China will destroy 100 million human beings."

Nor is the partnership between the two great Communist powers successful, according to Thomas Barman, a British diplomatic correspondent on Russo-Chinese relations. There has been no end to Chinese demands for Russian economic aid, and Russia has been forced to come through with the goods. The policy, urged on China by the Russians, of producing more consumer goods was abandoned and the priority of heavy industry was restored. Writes Mr. Barman, "the interests of the Russian people were subordinated to the requirements of the Chinese five-year plan." In the international field the Russians are no longer able to act as if they were masters of the Communist world. Neither Mr. Krushchev nor his rivals can afford to lose the friendship and support of the Chinese leaders. There is reason to believe that with its enormous population incerasing every year Communist China may emulate Russia and invade and conquer the fertile nations on its southern borders.

At home, our once peaceful and united country is suffering from the bigotry of a few Southern cities whose leaders insist that Negro children cannot be allowed to enter the public schools alongside their white neighbors. A strange and unsavory breed of hatemongers has come to the surface and has taken a new lease on life from school disintegration. The high school in Little Rock is closed by an order of the Governor of the state of Arkansas. In Clinton, Tennessee, the high school was recently destroyed by three explosions. This extraordinary development of racial violence is a reflection of the turmoil and violence in a great part of the world.

From The Saturday Review

The Tables Turned

Eric Sevareid

The overtones of public and official talk about American labor have been carrying a new note. There is not so much now about labor's rights, more about labor's power and responsibilities. And like business firms or families, labor unions differ. Generalization is unsafe, but some observations are accurate in enough instances to make them valid.

One of the fascinating developments has been what one might call the psychological absorption of labor by capitalism; the uncanny imitation, in labor unions, of the manners and mores of business establishments — labor matching business, step by step, a generation behind. Once great businesses were not only run by but owned by individuals of great power, before the salaried manager-and-committee system took over.

The power those individuals then had is matched today only by the power of certain individuals in what James Hoffa quite rightly calls "the labor business," not the "labor movement." And son, in some great labor unions today, we have the same paternalism and the same nepotism we once had in great business, with the boss handing on control to his son or his nephew or brother. When clerical employees in the national headquarters of the AFL-CIO talked about organizing their own union, one of them, a daughter of George Meany, uttered a remark since become classic: "Why do you want to do that? Father knows what is best for you."

There is today, among some labor bosses, the same childlike fascination in finance, in deals, in handling big chunks of money that was true of successful businessmen in the booming wonderland of the 1920's; Beck and Hoffa are prime examples of wide-eyed wonder at the reproductive capacity of money. There is today the same delight in monuments to self among labor leaders that was true of businessmen — the passion for immense offices, dictaphones, push buttons, for towering buildings in the latest architectural vogue, however vuglar and ostentatious.

Who can tell a successful labor leader from a successful businessman, by the colthes he wears, the cigars he smokes, the clubs he joins, or the civic and educational boards on which he sits? Little of political ideology reamins to organized labor; the goals are almost exclusively material in nature and limited in degree. It is a vast, vested interest, the other side of the identical coin of capitalism.

Little wonder that the public talk today centers on labor's responsibilities to the general society. Little wonder that the same laws that gradually regulated the once unregulated power of business are slowly creeping upon organized labor. Power is power, in whatever segment of society; and democratic societies will always move to dilute its heavy concentration. — From The Reporter

Being one of those whom columnist March Wind terms "puritannical (sic) devotees to civil liberties," I should like to comment on his column of October 17.

It would be interesting to note that criteria our police departments would use to determine who are, and who are not, the "local lunatics" and 'm'aniacs." (It is "obvious" that an anti-Byrd man in Virginia is of questionable sanity.) In his search for his "immediate answer," Brother Wind seems to me to have minimized the possible long-range consequences. His advocacy of Indian Charlie tactics illustrates a close similarity between March Wind and the chilling breeze which blew out of Wisconsin but a few short years ago.

Editor:

You wouldn't think in a college that it would be necessary to include in the House Rules, "Keep your cotton picking hands out of other people's things.'" But it is necessary to teach first principles to young women who should have learned them as children in their homes:

We don't use other peoples soap or tooth paste. We don't drink other people's juices, cold drinks, or use their staple groceries just because they are not locked up.

We don't go in other people's rooms when they are not in them. We would never wear another person's clothes without permission. We don't read other people's mail (or papers). An open letter is as inviolate as a sealed one.

When someone is eating and we stop by the table, we don't sit down unless invited to do so.

A few days ago a student came in the room where I was eating and, without waiting for me to ask her to sit down, she immediately took her seat. I over-looked that and offered her some watermelon. As she ate her melon she proper one foot in her chair, with her knee about on the level with her head. She had on shorts. I pointed to her knee and asked "is that the way they sit where you came from?" She apologized and put her foot on the floor.

At the turn of the century children were taught that if you dropped something you picked it up, if you spilled something you wiped it up. Things that you shared with others were always left as you found them. If you borowed something you returned it immediately with thanks, in exactly the same condition in which you borrowed it, that it is embarrassing to the lender to have to ask for his property and should embarrass the borrower. You didn't make a habit of asking favors of people, particularly if you had no intention of returning the favor.

It was wrong to take an unfair advantage of another person—some things are more important than money or success. But the vilest sin of all was to attack anyone's character. To say anything about a person behind his back that you couldn't say to his face automatically put you beyond the pale of decent people.

In our rush to get an education, which we hope will enable us to make more money, we are losing our ability to appreciate the finer things of life, such as deference and courtesy towards older people. You can tell the minute the new people arrive at the University what kind of home training they have had and what kind of background they come from. A few will hold the door for you and answer, Yes, ma'am, and No, ma'am, or simply answer Yes, and No. Oftener than not they will push through the door first; and answer you Huh, and Un-huh, for which we would have been sent immediately to our rooms.

One may wonder what parents of this generation have been doing. Most of their off-spring are not even conscious that they are breaking the rules of etiquette. However, it is probable that many young people would welcome the opportunity to learn the rules. Some of them who don't care fail to realize that their "do as I please attitude," in the long run, spells their ruin, because they are soon found out and no one wants to associate with them.

To the Advocates of the Abolishment of Anthony Wolff:

In the issue of October 15, 1958, of The Daily Tar Heel I read an article which made the suggestion that Anthony Wolff's column be omitted from the DTH in favor of an advertisement which "would be more stimulating" to quote very roughly.

I, finding myself in a marked minority, cannot agree with this point of view; neither do I agree with the ideas of Anthony Wolff. However, I do believe that his column is a valuable part of the editorial page. Admittedly, his viewpoint is always negative, which is not constructive in itself, but his articles also frequently touch off a stream of controversy and criticism among the students which IS important. Supposedly the DTH is for the students, but, in my opinion, if there were no one who presented a solid yes or no viewpoint, the editorial page would be sadly lacking in student participation. Thought of some type is essential on a college campus; whether it is radical or conservative is unimportant.

So, Masses, criticize Mr. Wolff and his opinions at every step of the way, if you like, but, please do not banish him from the paper entirely. I am forced to admit that a three quarter page brassiere stimulates me, but not, I am afraid, intellectually.

Editor:

I would like to apologize for something that I said in a letter that you printed in the Oct. 17th Daily Tar Heel.

I made a statement that certainly didn't give due credit to Miss Godwin. Miss Godwin writes many things that amuse me, but in the Oct. 16 edition of the DTH Miss Godwin's article was far from nonsense.

For making such a statement I would like to apologize to Miss Godwin.

Mindszenty May Be Able To Visit Rome

ROME — (AP) — The Italian State Radio said tonight Vatican circles still believe Josef Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary might be able to attend the conclave to elect a new pope.

The radio said in a newcast:

"Vatican circles do not exclude that the Hungarian Cardinal Mindszenty might come to Rome to take part in the conclave. In fact, 53 seats have been prepared in the Sistine Chapel. Since the College of Cardinals has 54 members, that would mean only one cardinal — Alojzije Stepinac of Yugoslavia — will be missing."

The radio report came as rumors circulated in Rome that negotiations had started between the Vatican and the communist government of Hungary to permit the prelate to come to Rome for the conclave, beginning Oct. 25. The rumors could not be confirmed.

If correct, the talks presumably would involve an arrangement permitting Mindszenty to leave his sanctuary in the U. S. Legation in Budapest without risking arrest by the Hungarian Communist authorities. He took asylum in the Legation after the Hungarian revolt in 1956.

Such negotiations, if they are being held, probably would involve the United States, too.

The duty officer of the American Legation in Budapest said he knew nothing about the reports on Cardinal Mindszenty.

Negroes Who Say They Don't Want Equality 'Crazy' Or Practicing Deception—Publisher

"The Negro who says he doesn't want equality is either crazy or practicing deception," the publisher of the Carolina Times said here last week.

Speaking before a meeting of the Chapel Hill Fellowship for School Integration, Lewis Austin of Durham said, when questioned about the oft-repeated statement by whites in the South that the Negro doesn't want integration, "Negroes learned to say what they thought the white man wanted them to say—and some are still doing it."

He said that "deception was developed as a technique for survival."

The Negro's struggle to achieve human dignity and equal opportunities helps white Americans practice Christianity and democracy, he said.

"The role of the Negro is to help the South advance spiritually, economically, and politically and to strengthen America as the leader of democracy throughout the world."

As examples of progress, he noted, Durham has both the highest number of Negroes voting and the highest number of Negro home owners, in proportion to its percentage of population, of any city in the United States.

Mr. Austin was asked, in a question-and-answer session, his opinion on the slow approach to Negro-white equality.

"Put yourself in the Negro's place for a moment," he said. "Think of the indignities he lives with, and see whether you would want to go slow."

Then he described incidents of "rebuffs" facing the Negro when he gets on a bus, attends a movie, applies for a job, sends his children to a school blocks past a white school close to home, and when eating in a restaurant.

'We want equality now and not in some future generation," he said.

The meeting was held at St. Paul's A. M. E. Church.

The one-two punch, boxing's oldest weapon and equally adept in football, found its way into Chapel Hill at last Saturday. The Tar Heels finally got rolling as everyone knew they should, and Maryland was the victim. Carolina's defense was equally tough as it has been, and the offenseive punch was everything it should be and more.

Although the averaegs won't show it, the fine kicking game which has aided Carolina so much in recent games also was very much in evidence. The best, of course, was Don Coker's 61-yarder. A fact that bears out this argument is that not once did Maryland start the ball in play on offense from outside of its own 40.

GOLDSTEIN — ONE-MAN CIRCUS

And Al Goldstein, the one-man circus, came through with another gridiron spectacular. No one wil soon forget the play when Goldstein knocked the ball from Russevlyn's hands, caught it, then raced forty yards for the third Tar Heel TD.

Another first, and a posible sign of things to come. Don Klochak, the husky ex-serviceman whom we've been talking about all year, saw his first action. Klochak carried the ball 3 times for twenty yards, almost a 7 per carry average. This guy runs like a Patton tank at full speed.

Wade Smith again furnished more than his share of thrills with many fine short gains, and a couple of long ones. One of them just preceeded the first Tar Heel score, and another was good for 39 yards and put the ball into Terp territory before the second touchdown.

THE INSIDE? TOUGH

The interior line? Each one individually, and all of them together, were tough as nails. Led by center Ron Koes, the forward wall allowed the Terps only 56 yards on the ground.

Jack Cummings mixing plays with the ability of an experienced bartender, and Ed Lipski and Moe Decantis carrying them out is yet another feature of the best Tar Heel showing of the season.

THOMPSON'S GREAT PERFORMANCE

Shifing sports a little, this week's Athlete of the week Ron Koes deserves the honor to the fullest extent. But a guy named Thompson almost made it, and certainly deserves some mention. Mike Thompson, star halfback for Mary Allen's unbeaten soccer team, scored all three goals last Friday in Carolina's 3-2 win over Virginia. One of them was absolutely phenomenal, one of the best plays we've seen in any sport. Thompson scored the second goal from about 10 yards out by butting the ball past the goalie with his head.

Shifting again, Coach Frank McGuire tells of seeing ex-Tar Heel greats Tommy Kearns and Pete Brennan playing against each other in Madison Square Garden for Syracuse and New York, respectively. That's not all . . . McGuire was sitting with the familys of the two boys during the game.

Bud Carson's frosh footballers bit the dust Friday night in Winston-Salem. The statistics didn't say so but the scoreboard did. Still the Tar Babies put up a good fight, and that they will undoubtably be heard from again before the season's over.

RETURNS TO ACTION—Senior end Don Kemper, out for the past two weeks because of a hip injury, has been selected to join tackle Phil Blazer as Tar Heel co-captains for Saturday's game against Wake Forest.

Ronnie Koes Named Athlete Of The Week

Koes performed brilliantly last Saturday against a supposedly dangerous Maryland offense, leading a forward wall which allowed the Terps only 56 yards on the ground.

Koes played equally well on offense and defense. He alternated between plugging up the middle and knocking down passes from his linebacker position, and led the savage Tar Heel blocking on offense.

Koes Sets Up Score

It was big Ron that set up the first Carolina touchdown in the second quarter. With the pressure on him, Terp quarterback Bob Russevly attempted a pass from deep in his own territory. Koes knifed in front of the intended receiver and picked off the aerial at the Carolina 40. From there the Tar Heels marched 60 yards for their first score.

Though it probably wasn't noticeable to the casual observer, Koes was where the play was all day, and usually stopped it. After the first Heel TD, he prevented a Maryland first down when he met Terrapin fullback Joyce head-on at the line of scrimmage to throw him for no gain.

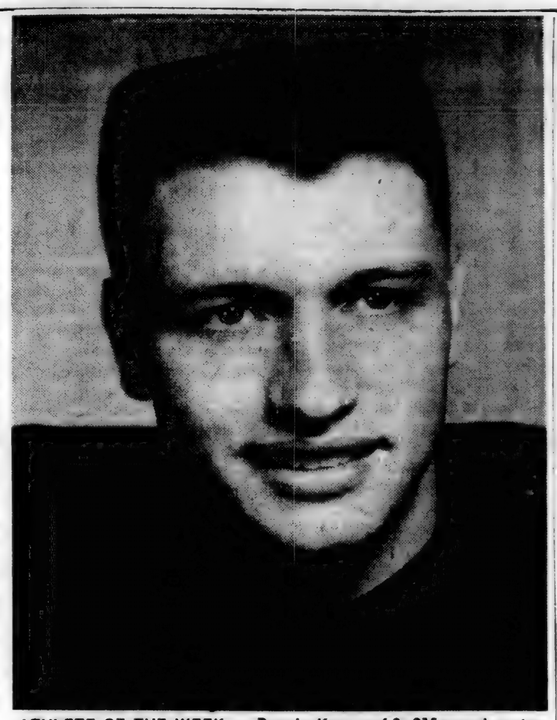
Koes was the whole story in one series of plays in the second-half. On Maryland's first down, he crashed through to drop Bob Layman for a 3-yard loss. On second down, he batted down and almost intercepted a Terp pass. And on third down he smeared end Vince Scott, after the latter had taken a pass, for no gain.

Ron's Best Game

This was not Koes' first good game, but it was his best. He has been one of the big reasons that Carolina opponents have found the going tough on offense in the last three games.

After the game Saturday, Maryland coach Tommy Mont singled out Koes' fine play, saying that it was his performance which broke the Terps' back. Coach Jim Tatum also had praise for Ronnie.

Koes is a 21-year old physical Education major, is married and has a little girl.



ATHLETE OF THE WEEK — Ronnie Koes, a 6-2, 215-pound center from Duryea, Pa., has been selected Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week. The selection came on the basis of Koes' fine defensive play against Maryland last Saturday.

Staffer Views UNC Records

BING SOMERS

Along with the musty smell of sweat clothes and three rickety rows of lockers, the first thing that catches one's attention upon entering the rather cramped UNC track dressing room is a 12 by 18 inch poster conspiculously tacked upon the bulletin board. For there, laboriously printed in big blue letters, are listed the Carolina track and field records.

Every event from the shot put to the two mile run is recorded. To most people not associated with track, it is simply a mass of meaningless words and figures.

These saunter wearily on their separate ways after having seen which Tar Heel has clipped off the fastest 100 (Jeff Newtin with a 9.6 in 1954) for this event, like a sheet around Brigette Bardot, seems to catch all eyes in hoping that it may be lowered just a little more.

Farmer Has Oldest Record

The oldest record belongs to one Charles Farmer who back in the depression days of 1932 piston-pumped his legs to a 21 second 220. Ralston LeGore's javelin mark of 216'9" is also mellowing a bit.

Individually Bill Albans, the great All-American of Charlie Justice days, has boarded away the most. He has three — 22.9 for the 220 yard low hurdles, 14.1 for the 120 yard highs, and a 24' 10½" broad jump.

Scurlock Takes Two

Dave Scurlock, in just two years, has managed to gallop off with two — a 1:48.2 half and a 48.4 quarter—plus one-fourth of another. He anchored the mile relay of 1957 that shared the baton for a brisk 3:18.5.

Chunky Jim Beatty, the spark-plugged fireplug of a runner, scrawled his name on the wall in 1957 by breezing his way to a 4:06.5 mile and 9:01.7 two-mile.

Ironically, some of Carolina's most briliant stars are missing from the list. Olympic decathlon man Floyd Simmons is one; miler Galen Elliott of 1926 vintage, another. Both were All-American performers.

Marks Fall Quickly

Most of the marks are short-lived. Often it takes less than 10 seconds to eclipse one.

They are informative to a few souls, but they serve mainly as a goal. For there is no freshman who does not envision his name up there beside the Albans, the Scurlocks, and the Beattys. Few will make it, but along the way, they will all profit immesurably trying.

Top Defense

Carolina tops the ACC in both defense and rushing defense for the second straight week. The Tar Heels are second in passing defense.

Action 'Nearsightedness,' Says President Furtado

When the UNC delegation attends the State Student Legislature in December, the group will probably be "sponsored" by the University administration.

According to Gov. Luther Hodges and his Council of State, the State Student Legislature may hold its annual session in the State Capitol only if a majority of university and college administrations say they are "sponsoring" the meeting.

This statement from the governor and his council was released in state newspapers Tuesday morning. And this was the first time students here or University officials had been notified of the governor's policy.

Chancellor William B. Aycock said yesterday: "I asume what the council and governor were saying is that they would permit the Capitol to be used if there are a prescribed number of sponsoring organizations.

'HAPPY TO SPONSOR'

"If that is what the resolution means, I would be happy to sponsor a student group from the University at Chapel Hill if the group requests me to do it."

Student Body President Don Furtado called the governor and council's action as "nearsightedness' and "an abandonment of those principles of freedom of speech for which the Legislature was originally designed."

Furtado commented, "I am afraid that at many of the schools 'sponsorship' would carry with it administrative surveillance and would require students to clear their proposals through non-student groups."

He excluded UNC's group from probable administration supervision because, he said, students at Carolian have traditionally been given the right to state their beliefs without fear of administrative repercussions.

APPRECIATION

Furtado expressed his appreciation to Chancellor Aycock for the the UNC delegation to State Student Legislature.

The policy from the governor and his council apparently was an aftermath of last year's State Student Legislature which raised a ruckus with a racial resolution. The resolution said interracial marriage shouldn't be regulated by law.

Student leaders last year commenting on this resolution said they were not sanctioning mixed marriages, but marriage was a matter of individual choice.

CAUGHT BY SURPRISE

Two members of the UNC Selections Committee (which names the Carolina delegation to SSL) said the governor's statement caught them by surprise.

John Brooks said yesterday he had been expecting official word from the governor concerning the use of the Capitol building for the SSL session Dec. 11, 12, 13.

Both he and Paddy Wall first heard of the restriction through the press releases Tuesday.

IDC By-Laws, Court Revision On Agenda

The Interdormitory Council meeting tonight will deal primarily with the By-Laws and the dorm court revision laws.

The IDC By-Laws have been completely revised and will be read and discussed tonight.

Rudy Edwards, president of the IDC said he is not sure what will be attempted in regard to the dorm court revision laws. He expects proposed changes, amendments and clarifications of the laws passed by the IDC last Wednesday.

Edwards gave this example: what happens if the secrecy of a dormitory court meeting is violated?

The IDC will also consider a new intramural manager program, whereby dorm intramural managers would receive monetary compensation. The program to be presented would set up a committee of IDC president, IDC intramural director, assistant director and other personnel to interview interested parties and select an intramural manager for each dormitory.

Managers would be subject to removal if they did not perform duties satisfactorily.

Other matters to come before the IDC tonight concern dormitory telephones, additional vending machines (candy, milk, cigarettes), and procedure for the blazer sale scheduled for Oct. 29.

Robert Rupen To Give Talk On Mongolia

"Inside Outer Mongolia" will be the topic of a lecture by Dr. Robert A. Rupen tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

An associate professor in the UNC Political Science Department, Rupen was invited by the Mongolian government to tour the country in August. Few westerners are permitted to venture into this remote land.

Rupen had written a series of articles about Outer Mongolia when the Communist government invited him to see the country himself and see how "incorrectly" he had pictured the land.

The associate professor had visited the Soviet Union in 1956 but had never been to Outer Mongolia.

Rupen went to his political science classes recently dressed in a Mongolian robe with an orange sash tied around his waist. He showed souvenirs of his tour and told of the primitive way of life of Mongolians.

Rupen's talk is being sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha, national political science fraternity, and will deal primarily with his recent visit both to the Soviet Union and Outer Mongolia.

Study Commission Hears Arguments Against Change In Selection Of Trustees

Five Trustees Want Present Method Kept

Reduction Of Board's Size Is Also Opposed

RALEIGH—(AP)—A study commission Tuesday heard an array of arguments against any change in the method of selecting trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina and against reducing the size of the board.

Only five persons appeared to present arguments at a public hearing conducted by the commission, which was created by the last legislature to study possible changes in the method of selecting University trustees.

ALL TRUSTEES

All five were members of the board of trustees. All five opposed any change in the present method under which the UNC trustees are elected by the General Assembly. Four of the five opposed any reduction in the size of the board which now has 100 elected members plus two ex officio members.

Only one of the five, George Watts Hill of Durham, said the board's size made it "unwieldy and cumbersome." He said it might well be reduced in size but still kept large enough to keep it representative of the people.

Others arguing against any change in the size of the board or in the method of selection included: Victor Bryant of Durham, Kemp D. Battle and Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount and Hill Yarborough of Louisburg.

The study committee had announced in advance of the hearing that it was considering recommending that the size of the board be reduced and that the governor be given the power to appoint a portion of its members.

ABOUT READY

After the hearing, Robert Proctor of Marion, chairman of the study commission, said it was about ready to write its report.

UP Hears Goldsmith On Party's Functions

By DEE DANIELS

To look out on campus and be concerned with the problems should be the objective of the University Party stressed Al Goldsmith, last year's UP candidate for student body president, at a party meeting last night.

This is not just another club, he continued, but a group of people who have a purpose and a guiding philosophy.

"I like to think of the UP as being a conservative group." In the past few years it has acted as a leveling influence for certain radicals on campus, Goldsmith explained.

Speaking of apathy, he said this is one of the first words you hear upon reaching this campus. It does exist, but too often it is used as a catch-all for other feelings which have no name.

He illustrated by saying that during his campaign last year, he talked with many students who weren't even aware that elections were in progress.

Believing that UP members should concern themselves with problems on campus, he enumerated those as (1) lack of dorm social facilities (which have been alleviated some this year), (2) need of a student union and (3) the self liquidation policy now in effect to pay for the three new men's dorms.

Another problem he spoke of was the pending legislative action to abolish class officers. He expressed opinion that something so much a campus tradition should not be abolished.

In selecting candidates, Goldsmith advised the party to look not only for a person's electability qualities, but for his capabilities to perform the duties of the office.

Critic Of Foreign Policy Is First Forum Speaker

An outspoken critic of the Republican administration's foreign policy will be the first speaker this year on the Carolina Forum.

The Rev. Henry Hitt Crane, Methodist church minister in Detroit, Mich., will speak here on "The Fate We Face." The tentative date for his speech is Friday, Oct. 31, at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall, according to Roger Foushee, chairman of the Carolina Forum.

In his address, Crane will discuss these three major alternatives confronting the United States: incalculable regrees, incredible progress and imperative egrees.

One of the organizers of the Sane Nuclear Policy Committee, Crane has made previous statements about "the insanity of our present nuclear armament race and the suicidal nature of our brinkmanship policy that inevitably involves the constant loading of more and more live bullets into the chambers of Mr. Dulles' roulette revolver."

Carolina Forum Chairman Foushee yesterday released the names of four other tentative speakers for the Forum. These are: George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn), Sen. Jacob Javits (R-NY) and Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky).

Foushee said the Forum is still making arrangements for other speakers both for the fall and spring semesters.

Dorothy Berea To Be Dancer In 'Oklahoma'

A modern dancer who has performed in concert on Broadway will appear with The Carolina Playmakers this weekend in the presentation of "Oklahoma."

Miss Dorothy Berea, a New Orleans native now living in Chapel Hill, will dance the role of Laurey in the show's dream ballet.

The production will be given Friday through Sunday in Memorial Hall at 8:30 p.m.

Primarily a modern dancer, Miss Berea has performed in concert on Broadway and on tours with Martha Graham, Jean Houlouse, and Sophia Maslow. She has been soloist with Merce Cunningham and Pearl Lang.

She is the wife of Marvin Silver, presently attached to the Office of Ordinance Research at Duke University while doing special research in the UNC Physics Dept.

Invitations Are Issued To Alderman Dorm Dance

Engraved invitations have been issued to 300 men students to attend a semi-formal, dance Friday night in Alderman Hall from 9 o'clock to 12 midnight.

Alderman girls will serve as official hostesses and decorations will carry out an Autumn theme. Music will be provided by a combo. Dress for the occasion will include cocktail dresses for coeds and dark suits for men.

SAYS SECRETARY PADDY WALL

Mexico Not Pretty But 'Alive And Warm'

By BEN TAYLOR

Mexico — mud huts, ragged children begging for peanuts, crowded shacks — not exactly your pictured vision of the "land of beauty," is it?

Yet, that's the way a Carolina coed found Mexico this summer when she spent three months there as a Baptist missionary.

Senior Paddy Wall saw Mexico in this stark perspective when she spent three months there as summer missionary to Mexico under auspices of the N. C. Baptist Student Union.

'ALIVE AND WARM'

In her own words, "It wasn't a pretty picture, but it was alive and warm with the friendliness of simple people — and shocking enough to make me ashamed of my American citizenship."

Paddy is secretary of the student body. To list her achievements and different offices held since her transfer from Mars Hill College last year would be a big job, so that will not be attempted here.

AWAKENING NEEDED

Rather, as Paddy herself repeats, the story of Mexico is not one of her or any individual, but is the story of how America must come to an era of spiritual awakening and social reconstruction if we hope to match even the simple faith of the illiterate farmer in the backwoods of Zacualpan, Morelos."

A factual and vivid account of her summer appeared in the Biblical Recorder in the form of letters to Mrs. Robert Pritchard who, from them, constructed the "Love Thy Neighbor" story in the Sept. 20 issue.

THOROUGH COMMENTARY

The letters are thorough and alive with description and commentary on the benevolent work being done there in the fields of medicine and fellowship.

Her summer took her through the rough border country across the Rio Grande to Mexico City. There she joined a group from the American Friend's Service Committee and went with them to Tepotzlon, a small weaving village in the mountains south of the capital city. Then the group went to Zacualpan, Morelos, where they remainted for the remainder of the summer.

CITY REFLECTS COUNTRY

Paddy found Mexico City a mirror of the country as most foreigners know it:

"Here in the big city was the Mexico that the American tourist enjoys and remembers — a city of beautiful buildings, monuments, magnificent churches, entertainment, etc.—all for the rich Yankee who admires this false picture of the country as he stumbles over the ragged little Mexican boy begging him to buy chicklets.

"The American seems not to see the beggar outside the cathedral but is awed by the golden idols inside."

In contrast to our ideas of home life, Paddy's letters contained this account of Mexican living quarters:

"The goats, pigs, chickens and dogs were sharing the one room hovel with the family, which usually consisted of a mother, father, grandparents, and from 7 to 20 children.

"We were luckier. Our new home—three rooms; no furniture, no running water (except what we ran after!), no electricity, or other modern conveniences — but what fun to live without them."

Paddy's work was as varied as any college curriculum. The "program" consisted of using a part of the house to set up a children's library, teaching arts and crafts in the school, giving English lessons to all who wanted them — which included everyone in the village from 5 to 95! She also taught sewing lessons, conducted a recreation program, and worked in a nearby medical clinic.

Paddy saw the Mexico of "land of beauty" fame, but in a quite different vein:

BEAUTY IN PEOPLE

"There is beauty in Mexico, despite the poverty. But it lies within the people — people who live simply with no "modern conveniences in shabby one room huts that would be lost in the shadows of our American houses."

PADDY WALL AND MEXICAN FRIENDS
. . . there is beauty despite poverty

"However, the Mexican has many things which Americans have lost in their own shadows of high-society and egocentricism. We in the U. S. have a veil of conceit over our eyes which dulls our vision of the things which make a land truly beautiful."

MEXICAN SUMS IT UP

Her accounts contain many more details of her work and of the people in Mexico. But, perhaps the little Mexican lad summed it up well with this comment after offering a handful of nuts to an American boy:

"It is not necessary to thank me, but be sure to thank God. He gave them to us."

Interviews For Councils To Be Held Tomorrow

Interviews with potential candidates for Student Council and the Men's Honor Council will be held Thursday and Friday of this week and Monday and Tuesday, next week.

Members of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board will conduct the interviews from 2 to 5 p.m. on these days in the Men's Council Room.

Former UNC President Said In 'Fair' Condition

Dr. Frank P. Graham, former president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, was reported in "fair" condition Tuesday by authorities at Rex Hospital in Raleigh.

Graham, 72, was hospitalized Monday night with bronchitis and fatigue. Spokesmen said bronchial trouble began bothering Graham last week.

The former University president spoke Saturday at Cambridge, Mass., and then came to Raleigh to speak at the opening of North Carolina State College's International Week Observance.

Upon doctor's advice, Dr. Graham cancelled other engagements at Vanderbilt University, Cornell and Western Michigan.

Graham is presently a United Nations mediator in Asia. For 19 years he served as president of the Consolidated University. He was appointed to the U. S. Senate by the late Gov. Kerr Scott and later lost his Senate seat to the late Willis Smith in 1950.

Mrs. Graham, who was visiting relatives in Edenton, joined her husband Tuesday.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Sue Ann Wood, Eleanor Jane Martin, Ilia V. Lopez, Mary Ellen Pemberton, Dennis Wentworth Lee, Donald Steele Hendrick, Robert Edward Kardaiski, Charles Knox Massey Jr., Fred Alphin Jr., Ronald Tucker Tripp, Franklin Pope Inman Jr., William Crutchfield, Benny Winfred Baucom, Howard Macon Mustian Jr., (Mrs.) Scottie Hanna Little and Ray Brewer Sizemore.

The Capitol

The governor has issued a statement which says that the State Student Legislature will not be allowed to meet in the Capitol unless each University sanctions its delegation and its meeting there.

This probably came as result of disfavor with the resolutions passed at last year's State Student Legislature meeting in which the group enacted a proposal calling for the abolition of all legal bars to intermarriage.

The Governor both has the right to disagree with the state's younger leaders, and to volunteer the services of the Capitol to those whom he deems should be, but it seems harsh to deprive a group of its place of meeting because of a disagreement in viewpoint.

Moreover, the SSL has never made any pretenses for speaking for the governor or legislature of the state, but rather it speaks only for the leadership in the state's youth. As such its voice has a right to be heard loud and clear, and should be heard and trumpeted in that they often have more wisdom than some or even most of their elder leaders in positions of "responsibility".

It is hoped that the Governor does not mean that each delegate should be screened for point of view, because this would be censoring the student voice, and no matter how much the Governor values his own opinion, he should be enough of a democrat to have all others heard.

It is hoped also that the SSL will take as courageous a stand as it did last year, and reaffirm its stand of last year so that it can be on the side of right despite the criticism it has weathered.

The Governor ought to think twice before he stifles or censures a student group. Disagreement is a healthy thing. Censorship is not.

The SSL should meet. It is hoped that the meeting will take place in the Capitol.

On A Jury System

The most significant bill introduced in the Student Legislature was the Greer Bill calling for abolition of permanent jurors and revision of the jury selection procedure.

Abolition of permanent jurors is a necessity. The whole idea of justice in a democracy is that a person is judged by his peers and that under the law there is no inequality.

With permanent jurors, inequity has set in, for it says that certain people are more qualified than other people by virtue of experience in telling what is a fact and what is not a fact.

Experience is no criterion in the judgment of a fact, and indeed the very fact that a juror is not experienced will give the defendant the benefit of the doubt in that there can be no prejudgment on the basis of a past guilty verdict.

Last year, Jack Lawing, now chairman of the University Party, delivered one of the most eloquent rebuttals to the idea of permanent jurors in front of the Student Legislature. It is hoped that he will exert the same leadership in bringing an end to the permanent jurors. They, indeed, have no place in a democratic jury system.

The other major provision in Greer's Bill is perhaps even more controversial but equally commendable. This provision, to select jurors from the entire campus rather than as a function of interest and interviews, implies the doctrine that in a democratic society each person is a citizen and as such has a responsibility to make the society work.

In this case, each member of the academic community, which is a microcosmic democracy, would be elegible for jury duty. Selection would be based solely on the fact that a student is a student.

This is how it should be in a democratic society — each citizen is assumed to be capable of determining facts until proved incapable.

Where qualified people are necessary is in the Council itself which is charged with the job of interpreting the law. In this case, experience can well be a factor in correct interpretation. In a jury it is not.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

An unusual song recital given by Ethel Casey, soprano, and Walter Golde, pianist, opened the Les Petites Musicales series in Graham Memorial last Sunday evening, October 19. The evening was devoted entirely to Debussy songs; and, as Mr. Golde explained in his introductory remarks, not the better-known songs but those which clearly show the influence of the Impressionist painters and Symbolist poets. The artists in these groups were not interested in presenting their subject realistically, but wanted to express (in Mr. Golde's words) "their emotional response to the subject." In their revolt against realism, they worked with suggestion and mood to evoke rather to assert what they wanted to communicate.

Unfortunately, it seemed the lack of mood and suggestion that marred the performance of the artists. Although one can be nothing but grateful to the artists for undertaking such an ambitious program, especially in view of the unpopularity of the music, too much harm was done to the composer to make the concert achieve its intended aim.

Miss Casey has a well-developed voice which was in control of the music throughout the concert. Especially in the lower range of the voice it is rich and vibrant. Mr. Golde's playing too is of a high technical finish. The artists performed well together, commendable in view of the very difficult distribution of voice line with piano accompaniment.

But the performance of these songs seemed to go against the very spirit of Debussy. There was a definite lack of subtlety in Miss Casey's voice, while Mr. Golde's accompaniment seemed decidedly factual. Both were unable to evoke mood in their performance, and the absence of mood, in turn, produced a starkness in the songs which seemed at times almost naked, while at other times made the songs sound misleadingly empty of content. This fault could have been prevented by taking more care with the shape and dynamics of the phrasing. Also by paying more attention to the text, a closer feeling for what is, and should be, portrayed would have helped. But for this critic the basic fault seemed the evident lack of communication between performer and composer. Although the artists must have had great sympathy with Debussy's music in presenting this concert, this same sympathy was not expressed strong enough in their performance.

Miss Casey was indecisive in attitude toward what she was singing, alternating between emotional involvement and objective presentation. By paying so much attention to her pronunciation of the words, the continuity of line, the heart of Debussy, failed to project. Mr. Golde's playing, though utterly correct, was too heavy and weighty to express the fragile indirect expression of the composer.

Only in one song, "De Fleurs," a magnificent composition of rich variations in color and mood, was the spirit of Debussy successfully conveyed. And for all its failings, the opportunity to hear some of Debussy's finest compositions made the concert a decidely worthwhile one.

Letters Good And Bad

Editor:

There seem to be many students here at Carolina who are all too unaware of the presence of the school literary magazine, the Carolina Quarterly. The basis for that statement is the lack of manuscripts which have appeared in the Quarterly office thus far in the year. Editor John Tice and his most competent staff have been much distressed by the few manuscripts which have been submitted. We feel that there are many fine writers on such a large campus, but judging from their showing so far this year, one wouldn't know it.

We do not wish to fill an entire issue of the Quarterly with material from sources outside the campus. The magazine is, as the name implies, our magazine. Then why not fill it, or at least partially so, with material from our campus and our students?

Though the Handbook says that the Quarterly is "listed by Writers' Digest as one of the top literary publications in the country," students should not feel that their chances for having their manuscripts published are slim. On the contrary, students have as much, if not more, chance as anyone else. Again quoting from the Handbook, "The Quarterly is not only read around the University, but it goes to several hundred subscribers all over the world as well." This statement in itself should incite students to make an effort to have some of their work printed. As editor Tice said, "Since our criterion for accepting a manuscript is its artistic excellence, students at Carolina should find this an encouragement rather than an inhibiting factor."

Added incentive is the always-attractive cash prizes. The magazine make two yearly awards: $100 for the best short story of the year, and $50 for the best poem. Previously, smaller awards had been made on a per-issue basis.

Some students apparently have had the misconception that the submitting of manuscripts is a momentous task. Not at all. In fact, such a task is relatively simple. All that is involved is writing something and bringing it either to the information desk in Graham Memorial or to the Quarterly office. Now that doesn't seem too bad, does it?

Criticism of manuscripts will be offered to the extent that the staff is able to give, depending upon the number of manuscripts we have. All submissions will be judged fairly and those who submit them will be notified as soon as possible as to the decision of the editors.

It is the hope of the Quarterly staff that the students will write more and, most of all, submit more manuscripts, so we won't have to change the name of the magazine to The State Quarterly or The National Quarterly. The Carolina Quarterly is a much better and more appropriate name.

Editor:

After reading your Daily Tar Heel for the past month, I am at last unable to remain passive any longer and feel the need to write a a letter and throw out a few questions and comments to you and the student body in general concerning campus newspaper policy.

Just what is the purpose of a campus newspaper anyway? What sort of articles and news features should it contain? What limits, if any, should be imposed on the right of the editor and his columnists in using the paper in order to champion their own personal causes or experiment in the kind of writing which brings discredit upon the newspaper and the university as a whole? This last question is especially important here at U.N.C., since the Daily Tar Heel is not a privately owned organization but one supported at least partly by student body funds. Any discredit our newspaper brings upon itself is passed on to all of us who financially support it and in a way, figuratively speaking, are its owners.

I have followed each morning your harangues blasting such "evils" as segregation and the Republican Party as well as those penetrating reports depicting unchaste Carolina coeds, why Billy Graham is a cull, and the pros and cons of female contraceptives until my stomach is slightly queasy from it all. Possibly I am too much of a conservative and out of step with the times. In truth, it could be that the majority of U.N.C. students are satisfied with your paper and would not have it any other way.

The whole question of the freedom of the campus press vs. its duties and responsibilities toward the students and the university is a thorny one and probably, objectively speaking, unanswerable. But one thing is certain: all of us are being judged by the many outsiders who read the Daily Tar Heel, not just its staff. Exactly how far can a campus newspaper be allowed to go in such a situation?

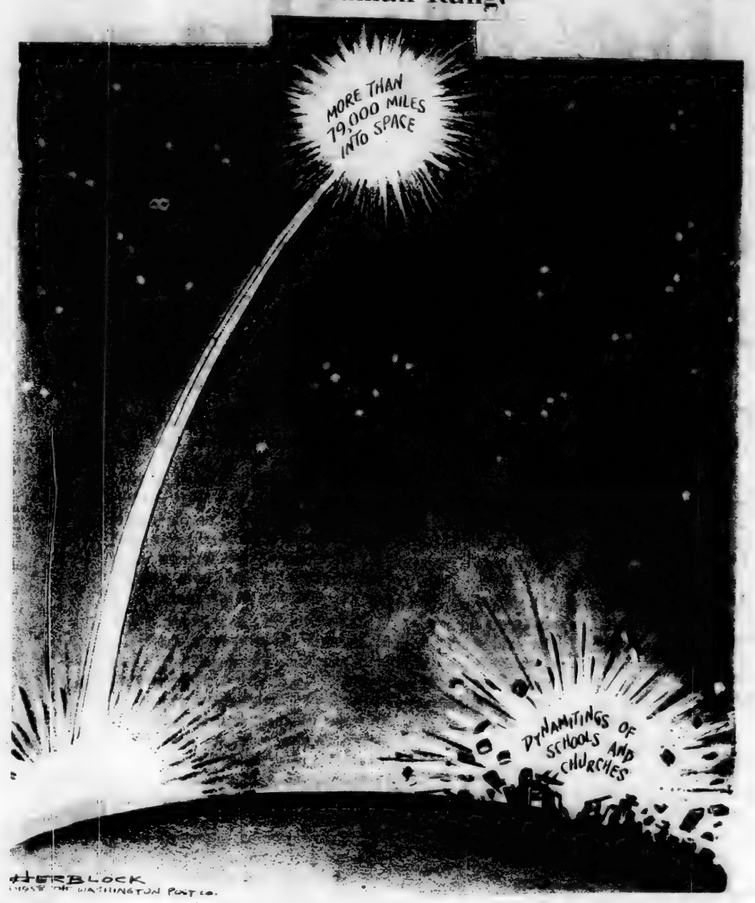
The Human Range



Variations

Gail Godwin

Anyone who entertains the slightest discomfort when thinking about growing old should take careful stock of Mr. Maurice Chevalier in his performance in "Gigi."

A robust, rosy-cheeked gentleman with an ageless clothes-wearing quality, Chevalier is the central focusing point of the delightful musical comedy about a little girl who had to grow up in a hurry in order to keep a date with a sugar prince.

It would be a dreadful waste of time to comment on his acting ability, because this has been covered quite adequately by magazines and newspapers over the years.

The point is that Maurice Chevalier is no spring rooster. He has been kicking around in his happy world for many, many years. But, in spite of his song "I'm Glad I'm Not Young Anymore," the charming man refuses to grow old—even when cast as the aging bachelor uncle in the twilight of his woman-chasing life.

So he may have a blurred chinline and a slight paunch under his well-tailored coats. But the smile is the brilliant facial testimony of a man in love with life. As it twitches and then spreads generously across his face, showing an unbelievable set of lovely teeth, the smile envelops us all. We find ourselves basking in a warm appreciation of every day things and it is not long until we, too, are answering the bored nephew's inquiries as Chevalier answers them.

"What color were the trees in Paris this spring?"

"Green!" Exclaims Chevalier with unmitigated glee.

"What color were the trees in Paris last spring?"

"Green!" Chevalier blasts with new enthusiasm.

"Green!" The uncle's grin stretches into something akin to ecstasy.

And what color will the trees in Chapel Hill be this spring? Wonderfully Green? Or Green Again?

On Eight O'Clock Classes

Ken Wheeler

Eight o'clock classes! Gag! An ingenious mixture of notes, naps and nauseous. There is, I hear, no available information as to who devised the idea of class meetings at such a ghastly hour, but unless he is carefully salted away he would be the logical choice as successor of Sherman Adams.

But what if there were seven o'clock classes" (Stop shaking, boy. It's just a thought.) Probably would go something like this:

As the seven o'clock bell sends shocks of pain through your shattered nervous system, a ragged, blinking professor enters the door. Then another gentleman saunters in. And another.

"What are you doing here?" they murmur simultaneously.

"This is 302 Bingham, is it not?" announces the eldest sullently. "I have an English class here."

"BINGHAM! Dr. Edens will kill me!" exclaims the second as he hurries out, briefcase under arm and bags under eyes.

The two remaining embark into a long and frenzied discussion. Finally, one, a man holding the University record for showing up eight consecutive days in the wrong classroom, realizes it is Tuesday, not Monday.

Having disposed of the preliminaries (and half of class time), the lone lecturer awakes the class and begins to talk just as the building janitor decides to transfer seven trash barrels to the other end of the third floor hall, creating such a racket as to jolt teacher and pupil.

Recovering from this blow and completely forgetting the subject of the lesson, the professor starts in on world affairs: "All the armed forces seem to be trying to get in on this space age business, I see from my copy of "Mother McCorkle's Masterpiece of Dandy . . . er Handy Data." The Air Force is shooting for the moon; the Army is firing at Mars; and the Navy is attempting to make Venus—the planet, that is. And the Marines—well, Marines are still trying to get back to Camp Lejeune from Lebanon. It's a good thing our satellite didn't make it to circle the moon, though, because Russia would be certain to send a satellite around our satellite. And if you think this is confusing . . ."

"Was there a question?" asks the professor, in demonstration of his alertness.

Seizing the opportunity, the class pedant chimes up with "Would you venture, sir, to interrogate the perspicacy of administrative chieftainship with regard to special experience?"

The bells of South loudly chime to free the gent from inevitable disaster, and you sally forth, the early killer behind, and en eight o'clock ahead.

Letters From Olympus

Saturday marked the opening of a new season. Not the duck-hunting, dove-shooting or squirrel-trapping season, but the Chapel Hill Beauty Queen Season. There is no season like the Beauty Queen Season in Chapel Hill. From the time the Homecoming Queen was run onto the field, breaking the record for small-circle running, at Saturday's crusade, until the graduating seniors fill the place in June, there will be little men working far into each night. They will be writing application blanks to send to various discriminating members of the student body. The recipient of an application blank will confront his dormitory, sorority, fraternity, platoon, or cell block with the momentus task of choosing a local sorceress for the title of Miss Whateveryouwant.

We are truly fortunate in Chapel Hill, we have such a wide range of Beauty Queen titles to choose from. There is the IDC Queen, the Yack Queen, the Dook Queen, the Dormitory Queen, the Student Legislature Trash Can Placement Committee Queen, etc. etc. And this year the Chapel Hill Merchant's Association is rumored to be starting a pageant for a Merchant Association Queen, the girl who most resembles a parking meter. And we would like to sponsor a Queen ourselves, the Queen of Olympus, in memory of those fine immortals of days of yore. Our Queen will be the first girl to fly one-hundred yards without the aid of a propeller.

Certainly, in the streamlined age we live in, we ingenious students could find a streamlined way of choosing our Beauty Queens. Perhaps it could be done by drawing lots, perhaps it would be better to have each contestant finish this jingle, in twenty-five words or less: I hope I resemble a parking meter because . . . . . Perhaps the winner will be the girl who states, "I like to eat nickels."—C.L.

THE UNIVERSITY AND "ULTIMATE CONCERN"

We stand accused of being "the silent generation" or "the apathetic generation" or "the beat generation." All of these are partially overlapping epithets which have been in currency for so long now that they should long ago have been thrown into the memory bag which contains "the Gilded Age" and "The Lost Generation," among other antiques.

If we do not do something soon to dissociate ourselves from these epithets, we are in considerable danger of being judged guilty as accused not only by our perhaps shortsighted elder contemporaries, but also by tomorow's history, the decision of which is post-mortem and final.

In simplest terms, the charge against us is that we are lacking what Dr. Tillich terms "ultimate concern"—the maximum possible concern for the basic problems of human existence: by Dr. Tillich's definition, we lack religious depth.

This is not to say that we are not concerned, but that we are concerned with superficialities. We are concerned more with grades than with learning; we are concerned with what Erich Fromm calls our "marketability" rather than with our ability to love each other as individuals; we are concerned with comfort rather than joy. Our days are filled for the most part with attempts to disguise their emptiness.

The extent of the problem can be illustrated statistically: several thousand UNC students turned out for the football game on Saturday, as is their wont, demonstrating by their interest their concern for the game; a mere dozen students attended a discussion of the Campus Code and the Honor Code at the "Y" last Tuesday. To most of us, then, the outcome of a professional amusement is of more concern than the code of honor by which we are supposed to live.

If the problem is the lack of religious concern, it poses for us the immediate question: how can the University foster spirituality in its students?

It will be useful in any investigation of this question to view the University separately as an academic and a social institution.

THE UNIVERSITY AS AN ACADEMY

A noted educator, contemporary in the administration of this university with Dr. Frank Graham, characterizes the modern educational process as "the peddling of information and simple skills." His point is as well-taken as it is well-phrased. Education today is all-too-often a period of vocational training for economic advantage; or, as many in the government see it, education is a part of the technological race with Russia, and should be mobilized for strategic advantage; rarely is education thought of as the private business of the emergent individual, a process in which values are established, a degree of self-knowledge is attained, and "ultimate concerns" are matured and pursued.

In other words, we are conditioned by our whole environment to be concerned with immediate rather than ultimate issues, while the issues raised by our very existence go unresolved. We pay dearly in money (time) wasted on beer, in neuroses, in broken homes, in war, for our refusal to heed the hunger of the soul.

Certainly the university must be concerned to some extent with the purely practical knowledge which its students need to get on in the world: we are not, as others have remarked before, entirely creatures of the spirit. But we see more and more the almost total abandonment of the university to the dictates of immediate rather than ultimate concern. Even Romance Languages, once the province of the artistic, the hyper-civilized, and the scholarly, is now the major stressed by the government as a strategic resource. Only philosophy—by definition a discipline dealing with "ultimate concern"—remains relatively pure; and it has been a long time since Philosophy was of as much concern to students, administrations, trustees or legislators as Business Administration or Applied Science.

In short, it is required that each of us take a certain amount number of Strategic Subjects; and those of us with special aptitude are encouraged to major in Applied Mass Suicide-Murder: not one of us is required to take a course in Philosophy.

If the university is to minister to both the spiritual and the practical needs of the student, then a clearer distinction than now exists must be made between the two. A student cannot be allowed to spend his college years (or his pre-college years, for that matter) securing his future in the upper income brackets. He should on some level, as suits his particular capabilities, be introduced to himself as something more than a commodity which will be auctioned off to the highest bidder on graduation day, if not sooner.

To this end it is essential that many non-strategic courses be raised from the level of meaningless pedantry to which they have been allowed to fall. When Hamlet says "To be or not to be, that is the question," he is in a state of "ultimate concern," and the proper study of the play, even if it ignores completely matters of form and prosody and history, should involve primarily the communication and investigation of this "ultimate concern." Otherwise Shakespeare has not been really studied.

Similarly, in every course of study, there should be some concern for the philosophical point of view or content of the material. History should not be studied simply as a system of events in a casual relationship, but as a meaningful portrait of mankind in its efforts to exist both physically and spiritually; and likewise in all fields. There is no human interest which cannot and should not be viewed maturely from a philosophical perspective; and only after such a perspective has been gained, the areas of "ultimate concern" isolated and considered, should be subject matter be considered in any narrower sense.

THE LOW DOWN ON THE UPSTAIRS

(or a word to the wise")

By RUTH GORDON

to the wise, female, lady shopper, that is. There is more style for less money at RUTH GORDON FASHIONS, 122½ E. Main Street, Durham than there are pretty girls in Chapel Hill — (I just asked the ad-taker, "What is really in abundance in Chapel Hill?" and the reply was: "Pretty girls" . . . Honestly she didn't know I was going to quote her.)

I recently met a woman socially and invited her up to our store. I suggested that since she was a Chapel Hillian she would love our store and when she asked, "Why? . . . for what special reason?" I answered, "Do you want the truth?" She said, "Absolutely!" "Well," I said, "We cater to champagne tastes and beer pocketbooks." She said, "My daughter will be there tomorrow." . . . and she was too . . . and I might add she got some lovely clothes.

(Any loose English instructors are hereby cautioned not to read this — and avoid having a nervous breakdown due to the "free-style" punctuation.)

Trustees Fight To Prevent Any Changes

al months ago between the University trustees and the State Board of Higher Education over the powers of the two boards. The conflict is now being studied by committees of both boards.

Hill expressed the hope that the Board of Higher Education will be continued as an advisory body with the board of trustees retaining power to direct the affairs of the University.

Battle suggested some changes: (1) that trustees not be reelected after they reach age 70, (2) that the General Assembly "exercise more self restraint" in electing its own members to the board of trustees, and (3) that the General Assembly make it a policy to weigh the records of trustees whose terms are expiring and reelect at least half of them "on a basis of their service and not their popularity."

SIZE IS VIRTUE

All of the speakers, except Hill, agreed with Persall that the size of the board of trustees is "a virtue rather than a fault" which "keeps the University colse to the people and the peoplec lose to the University."

Battle argued that the trustees' Executive Committee compares with the smaller boards of trustees that most states have for their universities and that the 100-member board provides "an excellent training ground from which members of the executive committee are selected." He pointed out that the trustees have 15 other committees at work and the executive committee "would be swamped if it had to do the work of the other committees."

'BLATHERSKITE' GOVENOR

Opposing placing selection of the trustees in the hands of the governor, Battle said it was possible for North Carolina, like other southern states, to have a "Blatherskite" as governor. He also pointed out that the governor already possesses vast powers over university affairs as ex officio chairman of the board of trustees, as director of the state's budget, and as appointer of members of the board of higher education.

To give the governor power to name the trustees in addition, he said, would be "a dangerous concentration of power."

Bryant said "No trustee should feel responsible to any one person for his appointment" but should feel responsible only to the General Assembly and the people.

Harriers Meet State Today

By BING SOMERS

The UNC cross country team, limping along with a 1-2 record and minus the services of top man Wayne Bishop, face the supposedly not-too-dangerous Wolfpack from N. C. State this afternoon in a dual meet at 4 o'clock.

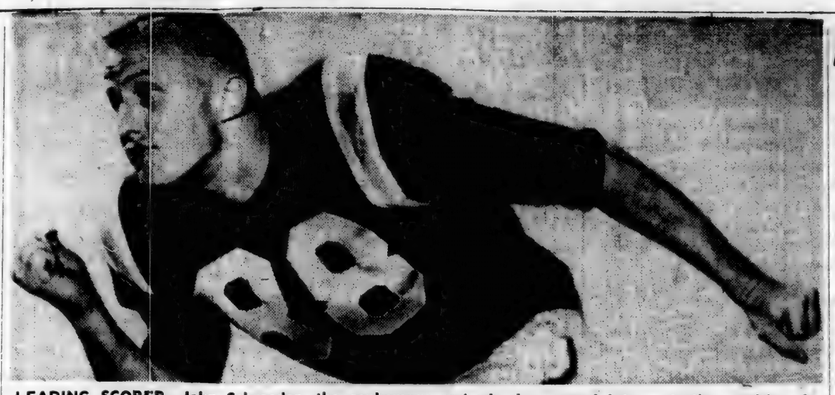
To face State will be a squad of eight runners, only 6 of whom are in top condition. The gaping void left by the injury to Bishop must be filled and the greatest load will have to be carried by junior Cowles Llipfert, who suddenly finds himself the number one man.

However, there is another runner who is biting at Llipfert's heels and he is none other than the strong, sinewy Mr. Scurlock, the guy with the galloping gait. Recently accused of growing stale, the Horse has finally shaken his ills and has been, once again, resembling the same Scurlock who last year led the Heels to a conference championship when Bishop was unable to compete. Now, they need him worse than ever before, and once again he seems to be coming through.

Traipsing along behind Llipfert and Scurlock for Carolina will be Howard Kahn, Alex Coffin, Sonny Sweet, and Bing Somers. These have been running in every meet and are in good shape, while two others, Fick Arthur and Bob Foxworth, may still be a week away.

Though the loss of Bishop was a great blow to the team, the spirit is still high and all feel that their chances of taking the ACC crown are as good as those of Clemson, Duke, and even Maryland.

An added dash of flavor will be added to the day when the undefeated freshman team, who have already clobbered State 19-45, invite the Pack over to try their luck again.



LEADING SCORER—John Schroeder, the sophomore end who has moved into a starting position, is tied for the lead in Tar Heel scoring with 12 points. Schroeder scored his second touchdown of the season on a pass Saturday against Maryland.

Booters Travel To W&L

By JIM PURKS

The varsity soccer squad is scheduled to take to the road today for Lexington, Va. in preparation for its contest with the Washington & Lee Generals.

Coach Marvin Allen's squad will square off against the Generals at 3 p.m. Wednesday in its first game away from Chape Hill.

Undefeated in two outings, the Tar Heels will pe after their second victory against a non-conference foe. The other non-conference foe was Lynchburg College, whom the Tar Heels defeated in a thriller, 4-3.

The Tar Heels did not play Washington & Lee last year, due to a siege of Asiatic flu which had hit both schools.

After the Washington & Lee coach reported that he would barely be able to put eleven men on the field, Coach Marvin Allen agreed to call the game off.

After the Washington & Lee game, Carolina will play two other non-conference foes before its clash with the N. C. State squad which defeated the Tar Heels last year in Raleigh, 2-1.

Balloon Moon Tried By Army

BULLETIN

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — (UP) —Signals from the Army's Jupiter C rocket carrying the ballon satellite were lost an hour after launching.

The spectacular launching at 10:21 p.m. appeared to be perfect, but when the signals were lost it was not known what had happened to the satellite high in space.

By JACK KING

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (UP)— The crucial zero hour was fast approaching yesterday for an Army attempt to blast a unique 12-foot balloon satellite into orbit around the globe.

Missile Chief Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris said in Washington that the Sixth Army bid to hurl a satellite into orbit would come late last night.

That meant the long countdown or preliminary checkout of the missile prior to launching already was in progress.

"Old Reliable" — The Army's workhouse Jupiter-C launching rocket—stood poised in a huge red and white service tower at the southern tip of the cape. The tower buzzed with activity as technicians scrambled about performing the final checks.

Late in the countdown they would place the precious payload, a three-foot case seven inches in diameter, atop the mighty Jupiter-C. The case is shaped like an artillery shell.

Inside were the folded aluminum and plastic balloon and a two-channel radio transmitter. In the nose was a small solid fuel "kick" rocket which would be fired hundreds of miles above the Earth in an attempt to boost the satellite higher in orbit that any of the previous explorers.

The payload actually is two satellites in one, for at a predetermined altitude the balloon will pop out of the bottom of the case and inflate with nitrogen automatically.

If all goes well, the balloon and the case both will become new American satellites, joining four other man-made moons now whirling around the Eath. The total orbiting weight will be about 28½ pounds.

The balloon experiment, which originally was scheduled to be fired with the Navy's temperamental Vanguard rocket, may be the first American achievement in space to be observed without the aid of special instruments. It should reflect against the sunlight at dawn and twilight.

The balloon has a life expectancy of about two months, and when it plummets back to Earth it could be the first man-made object to be retrieved from space.

Virginia Trip Planning Done Is Not Caravan

No Free Class Cuts Allowed This Year

The University Club Tuesday night made final plans for a football trip to the University of Virginia Nov. 8.

The trip is not being called a "Caravan Weekend" because Saturday classes will be held as usual Nov. 8.

The [illegible]p was the main item of business at Tuesday's meeting of the University Club at which Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women, presented her views on the trip that falls on a regular class day.

Any girls desiring to make the trip have been asked to contact Dick Olive at 9-2022 or the University Club office at 2206 to make bus and or hotel reservations. The bus tickets will cost approximately $8 each, and the rooms, $6.50 and $6.

Tickets to the game are on sale at Woollen Gym now for $3.50 each. Tickets to the jazz concert following the game are on sale at the desk in Graham Memorial for $2 each.

A chartered bus will leave Chapel Hill at 8 o'clock Saturday morning and return Saturday evening, leaving Charlottesville, Va., at 12 midnight. The University Club has reserved 35 spaces in a hotel for those who wish to stay over Saturday night.

Co-Rec Carny Plans Started; Set Tuesday

The Women's Athletic Association and the Intramural Office have been making plans for the 12th annual Co-Rec Carnival.

This year the carnival will be held Tuesday, Oct. 28. All entries for the carnival must be handed in to either the WAA office or the intramural office today.

Some of the sport activities will be volleyball doubles, badminton, table tennis, box rockey for the boys and tether ball for the girls. There will also be other games and also carnival type events.

This year the men and women teams will be divided into five per team instead of six to a team as in last year's carnival. The participates will be paired in a drawing by the intramural department. Trophies will be awarded to the individual winners and plaques to the men and women teams compiling the most points.

Last year 396 persons participated in the Co-Rec Carnival.

Library Group Gets Graduate As Member

As Representative Of Grad Students

Student Body President Don Furtado has appointed George M. Tatum as graduate representative to the Student Library Committee.

Tatum was recommended for this appointment by the Graduate Club at a club meeting Monday night.

Rennick told the group that the graduate student is looked on as being out of the framework of student life by undergraduates and administrators, and pointed out that the "O.G.H." controversy pointed up the fact that the graduate students have more legitimate avenues in which to take their grievances.

He pointed out that openings in student government exist for graduate students, including the newly created position on the library committee.

The graduate club, Rennick explained, should be the organ trrough which graduate students can express themselves.

He concluded by saying that graduate students have a responsibility to the campus, and should take more of an interest in the campus

Dr. Robert Rupen Speaking Tonight

Dr. Robert A. Rupen, one of the few westerners ever permitted to enter Outer Mongolia, will lecture on his trip and on his recent visit to the Soviet Union tonight in Gerrard Hall at 8 o'clock. The title of the talk is Inside Outer Mongolia."

Rupen, an associate professor in the UNC Political Science Department, was invited to visit Outer Mongolia by the Communist government after he had written several articles on the remote country.

The talk is being sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha, national political science fraternity.

U.S. Red China Policy Debated At Phi Meet

The Phi Society Tuesday night defeated a bill calling for a more conciliatory policy toward Red China, but passed a proposal asking for recognition of communist China. The full bill was defeated.

In a vote by articles the society defeated the conciliatory policy, but passed the proposal for recognition of Red China. Guest Critic for the evening was Dr. Shepard Jones, professor of political science at UNC.

Rep. Don Jacobs introduced the bill, characterizing the cold war as a "gigantic chess game, in which we are on the defensive." He advised a more conciliatory policy that would put the Russians on the defensive by throwing them off guard. Rep. Jacobs added that recognition of Red China is "just what the Russians don't want."

Realism rather than conciliation was urged by guest Jeffrey Laerence. He favored recognition of Red China on a basis of realistic considerations.

Rep. Carl Matheson pointed out that if we "give 'em an inch, they'll take a mile. We must set for ourselves a line behind which we will not retreat."

A motion by Rep. John Curtis to substitute "realistic" for "conciliatory" in the wording of the bill was defeated on the ground that it would alter the whole character of the bill.

The containment policy as defined by the State Dept. was heavily indicted on the basis of its past performance by Rep. Bob Morely. "We have been very unfriendly to Russia since 1946, supporting any government, no matter how corrupt, that said it was anti-Communist."

Guest Norman Smith defined Soviet aims as domination of the entire world and denied that they would stop short of it.

In his comments on the debate Dr. Jones first praised the Phi for its service to the University and its contribution to student life in the development of speaking abilities. He felt that the interest in world issues expressed in its debate was a sign of a healthy attitude on campus.

Concerning the debate itself he felt that the word "realism" had been used with too much emotional connotation. Many were merely for realism with little reason. He didn't agree that recognition of Red China is necessary under present conditions.

Carolina's Kappa Deltas Having Anniversary Party

The UNC chapter of Kappa Delta Sorority is joining other chapters all over the country today in celebrating the sorority's 61st birthday.

Carolina Kappa Deltas are observing the anniversary with a tea for all KD alumnae and patronesses at 4 p.m. at the house, according to Julie Elden, president.

Kappa Delta was founded at Longwood College, Farmville, Va., Oct. 23, 1897. It was the first National Panhellenic Conference Sorority to select the care and aid to crippled children as a national philanthrophy.

Furtado Speech Today

Don Furtado, student body president, will speak this afternoon at 4 o'clock in 105 Hanes Hall for the annual In-Service Training Program sponsered by the office of the dean of women.

He will speak on the "Relationship between Dormitory, Administration and Student Government" according to Dr, Katherine Carmichael, dean of women.

Sam Magill, assistant director of student affairs will introduce the speaker. Miss Luann Thornton, personnel adviser to women, will preside.

Dormitory hostesses, sorority housemothers, graduate counselors, administrative and faculty personnel and advisers to sororities will be present at the meeting.

Mrs. Charles Seward and Mrs. Bessie Buchanan are in charge of the meeting.

Student Party Caucus Planned Today At 6:30

Student Party legislators have been urged to attend a party caucus today at 6:30 p.m. in Roland Parker I. The discussion will include consideration of the proposed revised elections laws.

IDC Drops District Court Proposal

THE PETTICOATS ARE SHOWING—These gals, who call themselves the Petticoats, are part of the entertainment planned for Fall Germans, Oct. 31. Other attractions of the big weekend are the orchestra of Charlie Barnet, rock and rollers The Gladiolas and comedian Bob MacFadden.

Open Districts Left By SP After Session

The Student Party in its selection of candidates to run as its nominees to the Student Legislature from the various districts Tuesday night left some of its districts open because of absences of the nominees and incumbents.

Districts left open and standing nominees are:

Dorm Women's II—Anne Lucas was elected to run for a one year seat. A one year seat and a six months seat remain to be filled next week.

Dorm Men's II—Two one year seats and two six months seats are open in this district. Nominees are: Robert Sherrill, Mike Shulman, Preston Troutman, Charlie Sheets, Ray Bagwell, and Larkin Kirkman.

Dorm Men's IV—Warren Jackson, David Matthews, Lin Butler, and Dewey Sheffield are nominees for the two one year seats open for election in this district.

All of these standing nominations will be voted upon at the SP meeting next week. In addition to this voting, nominations are slated for the town districts and for class officers next week.

Interfraternity Weekend Put Off-Space Conflict

An Interfraternity Council weekend, tentatively scheduled for Dec. 5 and 6, has been postponed.

IFC President Tucker Yates explained that Woollen Gym was available only after 6 p.m. Dec. 6. The Playmakers had already reserved Memorial Hall for that weekend.

It was proposed that the IFC weekend be held at the conclusion of Greek Week. The annual pledge banquet would be discontinued. Greek Week awards would be presented at the dance or concert.

No date has been set for Greek Week, but it will probably be in February or early March.

The IFC voted unanimously to let the Men's Press Club produce the IFC Handbook, which is given to freshmen during orientation.

Charlie Sloan represented the Press Club, which is seeking a charter as a member of Sigma Delta Chi, national journalism fraternity.

Sloan said the work would be handled on an "employe-employer relationship." Details of the arrangement will be worked out by the IFC Handbook Committee and the Men's Press Club.

The fraternities will have a chance to inspect the book and make desired changes before its publication.

Sloan asked that the Press Club be allowed to sell advertisements. Some of the revenue would be used to improve the handbook and part of it would go to the Press Club.

Yates appointed several house presidents to form a committee to meet with Sam Magill, ast. dean of student affairs, to discuss changes in the visiting agreement.

Nominations for three vacant seats on the IFC Court were made. Those nominated include: Bob Burroughs, Garret Folger, Joe Alexander, Wayne Venters and Marshall Happer. The three seats will be filled at the next IFC meeting.

The IFC decided to send a representative to the National Interfraternity Council Conference which will be held in Atlanta the first week in December.

It was decided to let the YMCA contact the individual fraternity houses in order to arrange for foreign students to speak during UN Week rather than work through the IFC.

Late Hours Granted For Germans Weekend

Women's Residence Council decided Tuesday night to allow all freshmen girls to have late permissions on Friday, Oct. 31. This permission was granted because of the Fall Germans dance, but is not limited to those attending the dance.

The council also granted special permission to freshmen girls participating in the freshmen field trip to New York. The weekend will not count as one of the three weekends, away from this campus granted to freshmen girls.

Another late permission was granted to girls wishing to attend Duke or State concert programs. This decision will hold throughout the year.

New Volume Has Poetry By Hardison

O. B. Hardison of the UNC English Department is one of three poets whose works have been published in Charles Scribner's Son's volume, "Poets of Today."

The book is the fifth of a series brought out by the New York publishing house. It was edited by poet John Hall Wheelock.

Hardison's poems, which are on pages 37-75 of the volume, include 23 short lyrics and 4 longer poems, which he calls elegies.

Hardison said that the shorter poems are on a variety of subjects — love lyrics, adaptations of other poetry, such as Latin works, philosphical ideas and religious questions.

The elegies are similar in content. Two are written in "a kind of blank verse," and two in free verse.

Hardison received his B.A. and M.A. degrees at UNC and his Ph.D. at the University of Wisconsin. He spent a year in Italy on a Fulbright Scholarship. Before joining the UNC English Department last August he taught at the University of Tennessee and Princeton.

The other two poets who appear in the book are Ken Pitchford and Sheila Pritchard. "Poets of Today" is available at the Intimate Bookshop.

Paid'Murals Mgr. Plan Presented And Deferred

By STAN BLACK

A new proposal by a dissident dormitory for a district court system was shelved by the IDC in its regular meeting last night.

A second matter underconsideration, the proposed paid intramurals manager system, was deferred until the next regular meeting of the body on November 3.

The district court proposal was introduced by Foy Bradshaw in behalf of the executive committee of Grimes Dormitory, which has stated that it feels the Dormitory Council Court (DDC) system passed last week is unconstitutional and unenforceable.

The amendment which would have changed the system reads, in part, "the Court shall be composed of the IDC Court per se and six dormitory district courts."

It was felt by most of the IDC members present that the flaws in the DCC system were too trivial to require a whole new setup.

In a policy statement IDC President Rudy Edwards declared that any dormitory officers refusing to enforce the DCC system will be removed from office and new elections held.

It was stated after the meeting by Graham Adams, president of Grimes Dorm, that under no circumstances can he enforce the DCC system as passed.

Several amendments to the DCC system itself were proposed by Otto Funderburk. They will be acted on at the next meeting.

The Intramural Manager proposal was introduced by President Rudy Edwards. The purpose of paying the managers, as he saw it, would be "to insure the presence of adequate and competent managers in the dorms."

A selections committee composed of representatives from the intramural department and student government would choose and could recall the managers.

Money for the payment of the managers, amounting to $171.50 annually, would come from the Physical Education Dept. and the Carolina Athletic Association.

The possibility of removal of a manager for student apathy was brought up by Doug Bayliff and others. He felt that the managers would be bullied into working by the removal clause.

Greer Bill Draws Silence From Furtado

Student President Opposes Restrictions

Student Body President Don Furtado yesterday expressed his disapproval of discriminatory clauses in organizational charters, but he declined comment on a bill before Student Legislature which would, in effect, deny recognition to any group with a restrictive clause.

This particular bill, introduced by Gary Greer (SP), calls for the deletion of an amendment to a National Student Association declaration of basic policy.

The NSA's declaration would deny campus recognition of any organization having discriminatory clauses except those groups who aim to bring together those of a specific religion.

An amendment to this declaration passed last year by Student Legislature said Legislature did not recommend the denial of recognition to any organization whose national charter includes restriction clauses as to membership.

Furtado said yesterday he would make no statement pro or con on Greer's bill currently before Legislature until he has had a chance to review the original amendment to the NSA declaration.

The essence of his statement yesterday against discriminatory clauses was that no more organizations with such clauses should come to this campus, but that organizations now here with these clauses should not be ejected from the University.

Furtado said he does, however, want to see the removal of discriminatory clauses from groups on campus.

As to the way this should be done, he said, "I believe that the initiative for removal of the clauses must come internally. Students should not use this to become an excuse for stagnation, however, as it could easily become."

Campus Code Abolishment Voted By Di

A bill proposing the abolition of the Campus Code and substitution of a statement of individual rights was passed by members of the Dialectic Senate three votes to one Tuesday night.

The combined vote of guests and senators defeated the bill six to five.

Senator Norman Smith, negative speaker on the bill, said of the code, ""The fault lies in that we are trying to define something undefineable." He said that attempts at defining a moral code have long been tried and failed.

A guest speaker, talking negatively on the bill, said the Campus Code does allow for an element of change. He cited the Ten Commandments as an example of moral laws still in effect.

Senator Curtis Gans, who proposed the bill, argued that 'It is not for government to tell any individual; these are the values you must have."

Senator Gans said, "Whether or not a girl wears bermuda shorts to town is up to her." He also said the Campus Code enforces too rigid or too lax an order depending upon individual interpretation.

Senator Pebley Barrow, negative speaker, said, "Freedom with responsibility is the key." He agreed that a statement of individual rights be spelled out in order that the individual does not transgress the rights of others.

Senator Barrow said that the main problem of the Campus Code "lies in the negligence of individuals who fail to do something about the conduct of others which is their responsibility under the Code."

New York Trip Registration Deadline Near

The last chance for freshmen to register for a November trip to New York will be tonight at 6:15 during the third Freshmen Forum program in the upstairs dining room in Lenoir Hall.

Tonight's meeting will feature a discussion on "Psychological Trends of Campus Life" by an unnamed psychologist. Afterwards, the New York trip will be discussed.

The total cost of the trip will be $30, $5 of which will be asked for when the student registers.

The fee includes hotel room for two nights, a broadway show, a Carnegie Hall concert, and a tour through the United Nations and the Museum of Modern Art.

A third bus has been secured to take freshmen to New York.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Legislature

The Student Legislature has several other significant bills before it this week, outside of the jury trial bill which by all rights should see passage, if the legislature thinks of the meaning of a jury system on the campus and in a democracy.

The second most important bill is one introduced by John Brooks for appropriation to the Yackety-Yack of money enough to give space to all campus organizations not currently being given space.

There are two parts to this proposal. The first is to appropriate moneys for this year, and the second is to establish a permanent policy of having these organizations represented in the Yackety-Yack.

The second is the underlying philosophy of the bill, and would make for a truly representative yearbook, which the Yackety-Yack should be. This, if any student wants a good yearbook, should be agreed to by all.

There has been a tendency on the part of some in Student Government to look at the General Surplus, which is now at the level of $18,000 as some sort of a sacred cow that cannot be touched because it looks too pretty in a neat pile.

This money was collected for the purpose of programming and expenditure, and at the present time there seems no better way of using it than to put out a representative yearbook, and perhaps appropriate some further to the Fine Arts Forum which is in dire need of funds.

This bill obviously could not be objectionable except to the most conservative person, who just wants to see money pile up for no apparent use, and who does not like to have a representative yearbook.

The second most important bill, excepting the jury trial bill, is the deletion of the Gray amendment to the NSA resolution on academic freedom.

Whether the University wants to take action or not, the Student Legislature ought to take a firm stand on academic freedom as well as a firm stand against discriminatory clauses as a matter of principle.

There is no excuse for the existence of these clauses, for although no one would deny the right of any individual to select his associates, the idea of University recognition to a formalized bar to association should not be admitted.

The principle of equality of opportunity on the University campus would be severely compromised if the clauses were left in existence.

There are some fraternity members who might be worried as to barring their chapter from the campus, but it should serve as an impetus for removing the clauses and taking local initiative.

Recently a fraternity at Amherst was thrown out of the national organization for admitting a Negro, but if enough local organizations would take the iniative in removing the clauses the national organization will either be forced to recognize all or cease to exist. This is where individual fraternities could show a great deal of courage.

The legislature must act now and give its voice to its disapproval of these clauses and their existence on the campus.

The next important bill which comes up is the Election Law revision which has undergone careful scrutiny and is a worthy bill, and would be all the more worthy if there would be provision for only one legislative election.

The bill introduced by Norman Smith to see about securing extra study space is worthy of comment in that the study facilities presently available on the campus are abominable. This bill is not controversial but should be passed unanimously.

Another bill worthy of note is Charlie Gray's bill to establish a parking committee to look into expanded fraternity parking. This measure is worthwhile for it looks to the eye of the storm before the storm has approached, and perhaps can secure some alleviation of the already crowded fraternity parking areas before further encroachments on those areas come.

There are two bills worthy of mention as being unworthy of anything but a laugh. These are the bills providing for a bicycle rack committee and procuring a television set for Whitehead Dorm.

Election time is soon, but not that soon for such an obvious scurrying to the voters at the expense of the dignity of the legislature.

Moreover, the writer of the bill seems poorly informed in that the IDC has considered both of these proposals and is currently working on a solution to bring bicycle racks and a television set.

The bicycle rack committee is almost as farcical and perhaps more so than the trash can committee.

Admitted that both items are needed additions to the campus, it seems foolhardy to expect the president of the student body to be asked to interview someone on his qualification with bicycle racks and with bicycle rack placement. There are too many other areas of student government that students can valuably contribute, without wasting time on a committee with very limited purpose.

THE UNIVERSITY AS A COMMUNITY

The university as an academy, discussed in yesterday's column, is rarely divorced in the mordern institution from the university as a community. Academic discipline is accompanied by all the social discipline of a large community, for the modern university has all the proportions of a town.

As an academy, the function of the university is to provide an intellectual climate favorable to the private business of education.

Education is a "private business" because it takes place within the individual and consists of a structuring of his consciousness; this structuring of consciousness gives meaning to the world around us and to our own existence. To the extent that it educates its students, the university introduces them to the particular ways in which others have structured their consciousness, so that the individual is led out of his ego, so to speak, and is equipped to participate as a social animal in a shared humanity.

It should be noted that the process of education is quite distinct from and potentially in conflict with the process of socialization, by which the individual is molded from without and certain meanings and values are supplied.

The process of socialization which has been going on since birth can well be suspended by the time the student reaches college: it has outlived its effectiveness as well as its usefullness. In order to encourage the students to develop a mature personal morality and a meaningful understanding of the world which he experiences, the university-community should be as permissive and experimental as possible, allowing each student to locate and investigate his areas of "ultimate concern." Nevertheless, it is obvious that modern university education takes place in a social community, and that all too often, the academic emphasis is abandoned to the social. If the university is to be primarily an academy, and a community only by force of circumstances, then it follows that the structure of the university community should be specifically designed to promote the academic process.

And, if education is indeed a "private business," then it is the privacy of the student which is to be sought above all. Obviously a social climate in which the hyper-sensitive emergent individual is subject to invasions of both physical and spiritual privacy is not a social climate condusive to education.

It is equally obvious, however, that this is the situation in the university. Encumbered with all the physical proportions of a busy town, the university-community becomes an end in itself rather than an accompaniment to the process of education. The community becomes regarded as something quite distinct from the educational process, and its smooth adjustment is the primary responsibility of each of its citizens: the individual is responsible to the community, rather than vice-versa.

In such an environment the individual is socialized rather than educated. He is informed, either directly or indirectly, of the requirements of the group, and to these he must conform; and, in many cases he can be expelled from the university for acting according to personal values which are unacceptable to the Group.

Thus, the academic function of the university is now viewed in practice as only one function of the community, rather than as its reason for existence. This shift of emphasis implies more than a threat to the individual's academic career. It implies the discouragement of the individual's education--of his personal growth. A student is openly pressured to accept the community values without question: should he refuse to accept them or, God forbid, suggest alternative values, he is condemned for lacking in "school spirit." (Note: "school spirit," for those who haven't any, is a non-alcoholic intoxicant which keeps the Group running smoothly, even if in the wrong direction.)

"School spirit"—enthusiasm for the aims of the university—is equated with acquiesence to the Group and with loyal support of the team . . . as long as it wins. In the popular view, then, the university is no longer primarily an educational institution, for "school spirit" has no foundation in dedication to the educational task.

Thus the influence of the university as a community is largely to stifle the individualistic self-creative urges of the individual, depriving him of any opportunity to test original values and unique modes of interpreting experience—values and modes which are the desired outcome of his educational experience.

All of this would not be insurmountable if the individual were required to do no more than comply with the Group's standards and accept its attitudes toward experience; but, in our modern university community the individual is also required to participate in the Group.

He participates in the group by living in complete lack of physical privacy in a room large enough for one well-equipped student and into which two or three overequipped students have been squeezed by economic pressure. He participates in the group by playing the same power politics which are played for higher stakes on other levels, under the misapprehension that such politics better equip him to face the world, when in reality they could be more profitably postponed and their time put to better use. He participates in the group by spending his time wasting time in various Group activities which are valuable not in themselves but only as they reinforce the Group. (r.e. football, fraternities, etc.)

In short, the individual is not encouraged by the university-academy to structure the world for himself, aided by the accumulated structures built by others before him; nor is he permitted by the university-community to have any real appreciation of himself as an individual within a reasonably permissive society.

Rather, the individual is mainly fed on a mediocre diet of commercialism and conformity. His learning amounts in most cases and for the most part of the mastery of salable information and strategic skills. His social training encourages strict conformity to the Group will with complete disregard for individual differences which are compatible with the doctrine of individual rights, while the Group refuses to consider the posibility that it may be in the wrong.

Procuring A Trainer

Sidney Dakar

A foreign student, who has just arrived in the U. S., came to me with a problem today. He wanted to know the name of "a liquid" for holding the hair in place. I told him to merely ask for hair tonic or hair oil. He protested. He said that he had already asked for the liquid by these names and all he could get was oil for removing dandruff and oil for helping to prevent the hair from falling out. He had neither of these problems.

After going down and looking at some of the better known brands, I could see the problem faced by my friend. I was also unable to find any oil for the hair that didn't claim to do several other things while holding the hair in place, which is all any of it will really do.

Is this the fault of the American public or the fault of our high pressure advertising agencies? The American public does seem to demand everything out of a product. No one seems to want to buy hair oil only for holding the hair in place. If we can believe all of the advertisements, no one would think of buying one of the latest chrome covered Detroit creations merely to use as a means of going from one place to another. They must also be "long, low and lean" or "sweet, smooth and sassy." And of course they must always be compared with some of our latest jets, which are always shown in the background of any advertisement.

The advertising in America, and it has been immensely successful, certainly doesn't flatter the intelligence of the great masses. It would seem that the average American is one of the most gullible in the world if one looks at the sales records of the large companies that use these advertising tactics. Before you say that you are not one of the average, take a look at some of the claims made on your toilet articles on your dresser.

The scene is Chapel Hill. Downtown area. The time is daytime. And the date is - very soon.

The streets are deserted. Nowhere can be couples strolling arm in arm up one side of the street and down the other, looking at the clothes and jewelry in the windows, studying the movie marquees.

The drugstore which sells newspapers and paperbacks is void of the usual group who thumbs through new publications. The ring of the cash register is not heard.

The small, warm little bookshop is empty and when the owner yells back to the boy who is unpacking the new books his voice can be heard outside on the silent street.

The record man has turned his stereo set up to full volume and offers Roger William's new album to the car-less street, the empty outside phone booth, and the shedding trees.

"Where the hell is everybody!" shouts the record man, and turning up his jacket collar he goes outside and stands with feet planted wide apart in the middle of the street. "Hey! Y'all come BACK!"

Shopkeepers are standing idly at the entrance of their shops. One enterprising little merchant with a fuzzy head and an eye for business has changed his clothing display three times in one day and his windows offer thick tempting colored sweaters and shiny square-toed shoes with the latest buckles and soft tweed sport coats. Other merchants have begun marking prices down, down down still more.

A few blocks down the street, the policemen are congregated at the police station busily ordering new motorcycles with their names on the side. The police chief is ordering a blaek cadillac, with Police Dept. engraved on both front doors. One of the captains suggests new uniforms with gold braid on the shoulders and they all say yes we'd better get those, too. Why not?

At the local dairy shop where students always go to get ice cream and milk shakes, the proprietor sadly throws out ten gallons of sour milk. The grills are cold and there is no smell of frying hamburgers and french fries and other good things to eat.

Outside, 213 hideous little sticks stand nakedly. They are evenly spaced and shiny and new. Their slit-like little mouths stand gaping and waiting to be fed with appetizing coins. They must be fed often, because they get hungry every hour.

"Those goddam things are ruining me," grumbles the owner of the most popular beer-drinking establishment. "No one has bought a glass of beer in three days."

The following piece you have just read is merely a figment of the writer's imagination. In the first place, it would be unrealistic to assume that the student body would ever cooperate as a unit on anything. In the second place, nobody has the guts to go without their movie magazine and their chantilly lace and new thick sweaters and their warm beer for three days.

They will instead concede their rights and spend their hard-earned money and their parent's hard-earned money on Chapel Hill's shiny, hungry, scrawny little parking meters.

And how are YOU, Mr. Alderman?

The fifth Horseman (at least according to certain insurance advertisements) struck at Alexander Dormitory early unday morning, endangering the lives of some 150 residents. His attack proved relatively ineffectual, however, and few of that number were even aware of his visit.

Despite the comparative slightness of the damage, reported in Tuesday's isue of The Daily Tar Heel, certain lamentable situations were brought to light by the blaze.

Primary among these, of course, was the fact that such an incident even occurred. Apparently the bomb craze which has struck various sectors of the country has fostered its special representative in Chapel Hill.

Opinion has been expressed that the conflagration was the work of students from a rival university. At present, however, there is no evidence to substantiate such a claim.

Dorm President Joe Hurt pointed out that since all members of the dormitory had worked in the preparation of the homecoming display, it was hardly likely that any one of them would be responsible for its destruction.

In addition to this, it is even more doubtful that a dorm occupant would endanger the lives of his friends, to say nothing of their property.

In any event, the person or persons responsible will probably not be apprehended. It is hoped that they have realized the implications of their deed and are now suffering justifiable pangs of conscience. I suppose it would be too much to expect a confession. Perhaps silence would be best.

The fact remains that there was a fire, that it could have been serious, that human lives could have been lost.

Inherently related to this is the horrendous lack of any fire-prevention or fire-fighting facilities in the dormitories. Nowhere in Alexander Dormitory could be found a fire-extinguisher of any sort. Students were helpless to fight the blaze. Fortunately the rapid burning crepe paper burned itself out before flames could gain a foothold elsewhere.

Such apparent disregard for student safety is to be deplored. I am certain the very near future will see extensive steps to remedy such a vicious situation. I wonder if my certitude is in vain.

Immediately there comes to mind the thought of the fire department. Unfortunately this group could not be contacted. In the absence of a telephone directory on the second floor, a student hastened a call to the operator to procure the necessary information. Rather than directly contact him with the department or obtain for him the number, the operator relayed him to information number 113. After an interminable wait, this mysterious party finally answered. By this time, the blaze had practically spent itself; the operator was thanked for her trouble.

In lieu of condemning the telephone company, may I suggest that emergency numbers be posted in a conspicuous place by the telephones in all dormitories—not to be removed or defaced. Such a simple act could avert tragedy. Take heed dorm officers.

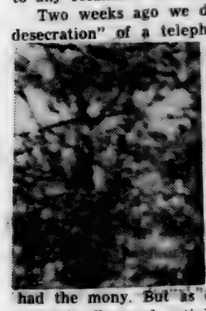
Thus, from the charred remains of what prabably began as a prank, a grave situation has been uncovered. Included in the thankful sighs of relief at the escape from disaster should be cries of outrage at the non-existence of fire-defense measures and demands for their implementation.

Out Of Joint

March Wind

Usually, this column presents a distorted viewpoint of national and international problems, leaving campus issues to the editor and our brother columnists on this page. But every now and then a campus problem comes along that is irresistable to any columnist worthy of the name.

Two weeks ago we discussed the "scatiological desecration" of a telephone booth in the library.



This led to accusations that we were behind the recent OGH ("Orne Go Home") campaign. In spite of the fact that Dr Orne wears a mustache and is therefore an obvious villain (BOO, HISS!), we happen to like the guy. He ran a first-class library for the Air Force, and he could run a first-class library here — if he only had the mony. But as everybody knows, the only decently financed activity on this campus is Jim Tatum's "Educational Foundation."

Anyway, this week we want to discuss another campus problem of widespread concern — drinking at football games. Just so nobody can accuse me of being a spoil sport let's get it on the record that I have taken my little flask into stadiums all across the country and have watched innumerable games while feeling a nice warm glow in the pit of my stomach. I even felt the glow when my team lost.

Actually, the subject of this column is not drinking at football games; the subject is drunkeness at football games — public drunkeness, disgusting drunkeness, obscene drunkeness. It is no longer a laughing matter when "Carolina Gentlemen" pass out in the stands, or vomit, or yell (sometimes en masse) four letter Anglo-Saxon words pertaining to intimate bodily functions. I know of no other school or stadium in the country that would tolerate this kind of delinquency for an instant.

The president of a local fraternity, bombed out of his mind at a recent game, stumbled and fell on the steps of the rooting section. He was hauled out of the stadium, unconscious. He made a speedy recovery and will doubtless repeat the stunt before the end of the season.

Complicating this problem is Carter Jones, the head cheerleader, who thinks it is the height of hilarity to hand over his microphone to some drunken punk for a "guest cheer." This almost backfierd last Saturday when one character, upon reaching the microphone, yelled: "Here's a li'l ole cheer for Maryland. Gimme an 'F'." Even Jones got disturbed at this point, and the punk was given a fast shuffle back to his stool, I mean seat.

Well, what can be done about all this? At the risk of drawing another letter from Richard A. Davis, I am forced to the conclusion that vigorous police work is the answer once again. Obviously, the "honor code" is inadequate to handle the problem. Therefore, station ten husky policemen in the rooting section with orders to arrest all the obvious drunks. I trust that Mr. Davis will not consider this a violation of civil liberties. After all, public drunkeness is against the law, even if it occurs in Kenan Stadium on a Saturday afternoon.

Unless all this nonsense comes to a screeching halt the quiet nippers like yours truly are going to be put out of business too in the general wave of public revulsion.

Since the mass production of television sets, the living pattern of the people of the United States has been greatly altered.

Television has proved a great boon to "shut-ins" and children on a rainy day. In many instances it has helped to spread culture and to keep the public informed.

However, unlike radio, television requires the individual's full attention. All too frequently people become "glued" to the TV set — there they sit and vegetate.

While video watching can be an enjoyable and wholesome pastime, over-indulgence on the part of students and children is an evil which is going to have long-range effects.

The decrease in interest in student government and scholarship can be traced to a large degree to the television set.

Too often people miss the chance to improve themselves (admittedly a 19th century ideal) because they just have to see what the next soap opera is going to be.

They don't even speak to each other much any more. The mind is lulled into gentle indifference by the unending stream of entertainment.

If Marx was looking for an opiate of the capitalistic world in the twentieth century, his answer would no doubt be "television."

Too many people, who have ability but no more than the ordinary amount of perseverance, find it easier to watch TV than to do something for themselves or others.

If television is dulling the academic production of students, it is doing something more drastic to the physical condition of children who are now growing up with TV.

Informal games in many cases have fallen in disrepute. A strong man must begin by being a healthy and active child.

Should the United States become engaged in another armed conflict soon, the stamina of these "TV kids" will be found seriously wanting.

There is apparently little that can be done about this unfortunate side effect of TV. The government can pass no regulation requiring a certain amount of exercise or limiting the right to view TV to those above 45.

The problem is ultimately one of self-discipline on the part of the people. Too much of "a good thing" is bad.

Library Beefs Are Heard By Committee

Complaints against the removal of the pyschology journals from New West were heard by the Student Library Committee last night.

Besides five members of the committee there were six other persons present.

University Librarian Dr. Jerrold Orne, who met with the committee, explained that the pyschology journals, now located in Wilson Library, are more convenient to the people in other disciplines which are related to pyschology.

Funds, he asserted, did not permit the duplication of these jurnals. Dr. Orne pointed out that now the pyschology materials were altogether in one building.

Dr. Orne stated the library would buy some new furniture for the Graduate Seminar when the funds were available.

The room will be painted as soon as the workmen can get to it, he said.

On the subject of keeping the library open later at night, Dr. Orne said he would talk to his staff about this possibility.

Bob Rennock, president of the Grad Club, asked about the policy of sending reserve books to the binder. Dr. Orne commented that books were sent monthly.

The binder is on a 30-day contract. The library staff tries to pick books which need binding at a time when their use will be lightest, Orne said.

Harriers Lose To State

Carolina's varsity cross-country team dropped its third straight meet here yesterday as State College sprung a surprising 29-36 victory over the favored Tar Heels.

Although Dave Scurlock finished first, the Wolfpack walked away with the next three places virtually sewing the matter up.

The only bright spot was Scurlock's 20:35 time for first place, in which he cut 50 seconds off his previously best time and finally came through with the running he was expected to have.

Don Klochak? Who's he? That's what everyone asked until last week when big Don ripped the Maryland line to shreds during the brief while he was in the game. Coach Jim Tatum has said the fans can expect to see a lot more of him. Good. We want to see a lot more of him.

"The Tank" carried the ball only three times against the Terps, but in those three carries racked up 30 yards for a 6.7 rushing average. This percentage is identical to the one he held for the season the last time he was at Carolina. In 1954, Don was a sophomore, and just about all the Tar Heels could be proud of.

THE PERFECT ANSWER

There have, according to the coaching staff, been problems at fullback all year. Here is a ready made answer. After all, when four tacklers can't stop a guy, what can you do? His only weakness may be on defense, although Tatum says he is a fairly good defensive man.

The Tar Heels should be in just about top shape for this week's Wake Forest contest barring practice injuries that occur between now and Saturday. Don Kemper, who has been out the last two games, has been practicing heavy all week and should be ready to go.

HEELS MUST STOP WAKE PASSES

This week in practice the Tar Heels will probably be trying hard to develop a successful anti-aircraft attack to stop the passing of Norm Snead, Charlie Carpenter, and Co. Maryland had little trouble completing short passes against Carolina, but could never get anywhere with them.

Tatum said in his press conference that Wake Forest is a better passing team than Maryland, and that they will go for the home run type of play more than did the Terps. He also said that Snead won't "pass us out of the park" if our boys play as good a game as they did Saturday.

"AIR FULL OF FOOTBALLS"

"The air will be full of footballs." This once again by Tatum. He stated that both the Deacs and the Heels have good enough defenses to force the other to pass, thus both will probably throw a lot.

The Wake Forest team was flat at Villanova, where they got taken 9-7. They'll be up for this one; they always are. The Wake-Carolina series has provided plenty of surprises through the years, and this year may prove to be no exception.

NO FORMATION CHANGE

Both the teams the Deacs have lost to have run from the radical I formation. Carolina, however, is not expected to go from this formation. After all, why should they after the way they ran Maryland out of the stadium?

Saturday's game, in which the Heels finally got far enough ahead to risk using untried players, provided Tatum and staff an opportunity to get a good look at some of the upcoming talent. Such players as Danny Droze, who scored the last touchdown, Moe Smith, Nelson Lowe (at fullback), Mike Greenday, Jim Rice, and Frank Riggs all got the double-take Saturday.

IDENTICAL RECORDS

Both Wake Forest and Carolina will bring identical 3-2 records into the game, but the Tar Heels have swept the last three while the Deacs were dropping 2 of 3. This series is one of the oldest in the game; it began way back in 1888. That game was played at the State Fair, and the Deacons won it. Since then, though, they haven't had such luck. In the long history of the series, Carolina has won 36, lost only 16 and tied 2.

Booters Lose To W&L

LEXINGTON, W. Va.—A hustling Washington & Lee soccer team pulled a surprise 3-2 victory over Carolina yesterday, ruining the Tar Heels undefeated record.

Playing on a rain-coated field, the Generals had trouble with Carolina's scoring whiz, Mike Thompson, but were able to win on Bob Stanley's fourth quarter goal.

Thompson Causes Trouble

Thompson, who scored all three goals in last week's contest with Virginia, was up to his old tricks again as he scored both goals for the Tar Heels.

The Tar Heels jumped to an early lead when Thompson booted in his first goal during the first quarter, to put Carolina ahead, 1-0.

Washington & Lee bounced back in the second quarter, however, scoring twice on quick goals by Steve Hawkins and Bob Stanley. The half ended with the Generals leading, 2-1.

Generals Increase Lead

The Generals then increased their lead to two goals when Stanley's tally put the squad ahead by a 3-1 count.

Thompson shortly put the team back within tying distance with his second goal of the day, and his eighth of the season in three games.

Rally Stopped Short

The Tar Heels tried desperately to tie the score up, and kept the pressure on the W & L team for most of the fourth quarter, but were unable to hit paydirt despite numerous good passing plays.

The field was in fair playing condition, although a steady drizzle throughout the game caused the players to slip several times.

Revenge For W&L

For the Generals, the victory marked revenge over a 4-0 loss suffered two years ago at the hands of Carolina in Lexington. The two teams did not meet last year due to a siege of Asiatic flu which hit both squads.

The loss was a surprise one for the Tar Heels. Coach Allen's squad had defeated Virginia, 3-2, Friday in a well-played game and also had a thrilling 4-3 victory over Lynchburg under its belt.

Next Game

Carolina will play one more game on the road, a contest against Pfeiffer on October 28, and then play again in Chapel Hill against a rough Roanoke College team.

Frosh Harriere Win

Carolina's freshman cross-country team defeated State College's freshmen here yesterday 21-43 as the Tar Babies grabbed off eight of the first ten places.

It was the second time in as many tries the Tar Babies had beaten State, and the win marked their third straight without a defeat.

Mistakes Explained

The Daily Tar Heel wishes to make it known that the Sports Department was in no way responsible for the mess made of the sports page on Tuesday. Ronnie Koss is not Don Kemper, nor is the reverse true. John Schroeder is the blond comet, not the blind comet, and the soccer coach is Marvin Allen, not Mary Allen.

All of these mistakes were made at the printshop; the copy was in order when it left the sports office.

Revisions In Election Law Sanctioned By Legislature After Drawn Out Discussion

Classes Will Retain 5 Present Officers

By STAN FISHER

The much discussed general election law revisions passed the Student Legslature last night with only two notable revisions.

Under the amendments made in the original proposal, Town Men's district IV will vote in "Y" court and the freshman, sophomore, and junior classes will retain their class officers.

An amendment proposed by Charlie Gray (UP) which would have placed an extra polling place in Town Men's districts I, II, and III met with defeat after much discussion during which the amendments were accused of coming from a party that had "been out of power too long." The accusation was hurled by Rudy Edwards (SP).

Gray's amendment to re-include the class officers ran head on into opposition from Student Party legislators Greer, Smith, and Edwards. University Party floor leader Dave Biren spoke in favor of the retention of the officers.

Biren said that abolition of the class officers would hinder freshmen from getting into Carolina politics. He favored a year's retention of the officers so that people would know they would be abolished if something was not accomplished.

Rudy Edwards in speaking against the retaining of the offices had not fulfilled any responsibility and that at Carolina "we don't attempt to identify persons by class."

Edwards pointed out other avenues open to freshmen seeking to enter politics and urged the defeat of the amendment.

Legislation introduced before the body last night included:

(1) A bill to submit for ratification to the student body an amendment to the student constitution which would provide for a single annual spring campus election.

(2) A bill to place the Carolina Forum and State Student Legislature delegation under the Forensic Council.

A bill was passed unanimously calling for much more responsible conduct on the part of students at football games.

SURREY WITH THE FRINGE ON TOP—Preparing for a ride in the surrey are Carolyn Myers (Laurey) and Hunter Tillman (Curley), two of the stars in the Carolina Playmaker production of 'Oklahoma' which opens tonight at 8:30 in Memorial Hall. Apparently giving some last minute advice is Lillian Prince (Aunt Eller). The show will run for three days. Tickets are priced at $2 and will be available at the box office each performance beginning at 7 p.m.

Student Under No Pressure, Yack Head

Cameron Cooke, editor-in-chief of the Yackety Yack, said yesterday students are under no obligation to buy extra copies of pictures from the class photographer.

Recently there have been complaints that students are being pressured into buying extra copies of their class photos, he said.

Cooke stressed the fact that the photographers are doing the photos for the Yackety Yack. If a student wishes to buy extra copies of his picture, Cooke said, purchase them at Swain Hall but is is not required to do so.

"I regret that there has been some discontent among students concerning the belief that Placement Service prefers application photos taken by the class photographers," Cooke said. "The Placement Service has expressed no such preference."

Pep Rally

Two student groups will circulate through the campus tonight drawing other students to a pep rally in front of South Building.

The groups will form at 6:30 p.m. in front of Woollen Gymnasium and behind Cobb Dormitory.

A portion of the UNC Band will be on hand at South Building to give the right pitch for Carolina songs.

Graduate Club Dance Is Tonight At 8:30

The Graduate Club will hold its first dance of the season for all graduate and professional students and members of the faculty tonight at 8:30 in Kenan Dormitory.

According to Miss Janice Earle Dennis, the chairman of the dance, no dates are necessary and all grad students are encouraged to attend.

Special invitations have been sent to the residents of both Kenan and Connor Graduate dormitories, but students not living in these dorms are cordially welcome.

Music for the dance will be provided by records and refreshments will be served. There is no charge for admission.

Adams Leaves Post, Gives Council Praise

Graham Adams yesterday ended his career as president of Grimes Dormitory with praise for the Interdormitory Council but with criticism of the IDC's new Dormitory Council Courts.

Adams had favored amendments to the Dormitory Council Court provision in the new dorm court revision laws. Because these amendments were shelved at Wednesday night's meeting of the IDC, Adams resigned as Grimes Dorm president.

NO DCC RESPECT

In his resignation statement yesterday, Adams said he gave up his office as president because he did not respect the Dormitory Council Court (DDC). Under the dorm court revision laws passed earlier this month, a DCC would be set up in each dorm. Adams had criticized this measure and his dorm executive cabinet would not set up this court.

IDC BENEFICIAL

Adams submitted his resignation yesterday to IDC President Rudy Edwards, saying, "The IDC, I believe, can and will do more for the residents of dormitories at this University than any other group. I consider it a privilege to have worked with it."

Commenting on Adams' resignation, IDC President Edwards said, "It is regrettable that a person of Graham's ability and potential can not reconcile himself to the Dormitory Council Court .I feel he has been a valuable member of the IDC this year.

In his resignation statement to Edwards, Adams accused The Daily Tar Heel of misquoting him in the Oct. 23 issue. Adams commented that he had never said the DCC was "unconstitutional and unenforceable."

"To my knowledge the law is constitutional and will be enforced," he said. "We have said we did not agree with the principle of it."

Adams admitted a "mistake" on his part: "I do not feel I have done wrong in opposing the Dormitory Council Courts, but my method of opposition—that of the petition in my dormitory—was wrong."

He said, "I am neither power mad nor publicity crazy; I have no idea my actions would be publicized in The Tar Heel. Perhaps I should have known, but I did not. I have unwillingly brought bad publicity to the IDC. I apologize for this."

Game Incident Nets Student Court Hearing

Chapel Hill police said Thursday that charges have been filed against a University student for allegedly tearing down a goalpost at the UNC-Maryland game last Saturday and then resisting an arresting officer.

They said that Fred Siemer, 20, will appear in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court next Tuesday to face charges growing out of the incident last Saturday.

Patrolman H. A. Gattis, the arresting officer, reported that Siemer "and some others" tore down a goal post at the south end of Kenan Stadium following North Carolina's 27-0 victory.

Gattis charged that when he attempted to arrest Siemer, the student pushed him over a short fence, and then ran.

Lower Quad Gets Vending Machines

A milk and a cigarette machine will be installed in the lower quad in the very near future, it was decided at a meeting of the Campus Stores Committee Wednesday.

An explanation of the need in the quad for these machines was given by the chairman of the committee, Jim Crownover, who said the residents often have to walk to the upper quad or uptown, when the Monogram Club Circus Room is closed.

SITE UNDECIDED

H. R. Ritchie, campus stores' manager, said the machines would be installed. He added that their retention would depend on the volume of business they have. Their specific location was not decided.

J. A. Branch, University business manager, was present at the meeting, the first of the committee this year. Also present were Dr. Sam Barnes, Prof. Harold Langenderfer, Dr. C. O. Cathey, chairman of the University scholarship committee, Henry McPherson and Ed Rowland, student members.

GRAPHIC BREAKDOWN

Dr. Cathey presented a graphic breakdown on the scholarship money taken from the profits of the campus stores. According to UNC Trustee regulations, all the profit must go toward scholarships.

Dr. Cathey said the income expected this year is $60,000, as compared with $50,000 last year and $43,000 two years ago. He credited the increase to more student purchasing from the stores and to the economic management of Ritchie.

ESCHEATS FUND

He said the University has one other major source of income for scholarships, the State of North Carolina escheats fund, which last year amounted to $36,700. This amount is decided upon by enrollment at the University.

However, as Dr. Cathey explained, a constitutional revision may cut out the escheats revenue to a great degree. At the present the entire fund is divided between the schools in the Consolidated University, and in the future may be divided between all state-supported schools.

A report prepared by Sidney Lanier, student aid director, announced that between 1,500 and 1,600 applications are made each year for aid. He said 175 students have awards from the student stores' income now, the awards ranging from $150 to $500 a year.

ARE RENEWABLE

The report said 119 of these awards are to freshmen, and may be renewable for three more years. At least one-third of the income may be allotted for new scholarships, and the remaining two-thirds is held in reserve for the continuation of the grants.

On the subject of a Scuttlebutt-type building in the vicinity of Parker, Avery and Teague dorms, Branch said plans have been made for one to serve the entire area. He said it would be constructed probably along with a fourth new dorm in the area sometime in 1960. In the meantime a stop-gap operation is under consideration for Avery dorm, but if an investigation determines the unfeasibility of this, the residents will have to wait.

Ritchie said he felt the vending machines in the dorms are taking care of the students' needs, except for ice cream products.

BOOX-X EXPLAINED

Ritchie gave a detailed explanation of the operation of the Book-Ex in regard to the sale and purchase of used books. He said the prices were regulated by wholesalers' of-

FROM UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION

Adult Education Receiving More Emphasis

By JAMES HOLMES

A new policy of increased emphasis in adult education is being followed by the University Extension Division this year. This enlarged concept of adult education has come as a result of a report by the Committee on Extension which Chancellor William Aycock appointed to study and make recommendations for long-range planning of the Extension Division.

Dwight C. Rhyne, associate director of the University Extension Division said: "This does not mean we will be reducing any of our present programs not basically concerned with adult education. Rather, we are more than ever emphasizing the education of adults not in residence at the University; we do not feel that education ends with graduation."

CITES WORKSHOPS

Citing many of the workshops which are available to doctors, newspapermen, teachers, merchants and others, Rhyne added: "By administering these workshops with the various departments concerned we feel that we are helping offer a great educational opportunity for the people of the state who aren't able to devote a great deal of time to classroom work. For instance, where would a doctor or dentist be 10 years after graduation if he didn't keep up with advances in his field? The workshops are designed for people who have finished their formal education but still want and need educational resources."

The Bureau of Lectures, Conferences and Short Courses, responsible for these workshops, assisted in arranging 79 conferences, institutes, workshops and short courses during the 1957-1958 school year. A regular roster of 35 annual programs, institutes and workshops is also maintained.

TWO BUREAUS

Extension students taking classes in the regularly offered curriculum do so either through the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction or the Bureau of Class Instruction. Approximately 2,000 students are currently enrolled in correspondence courses and 600 are taking class instruction through extension.

Many students, Rhyne said, do not enroll in these courses for credit. For example, out of last year's 1,544 correspondence course enrollment, only 886 were taking courses for degree credit.

During this period persons from all but two North Carolina counties were enrolled and residents of all but seven states (Colorado, Delaware, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada and North Dakota) applied for the 123 courses offered.

REGULAR FACULTY

The Bureau of Class Instruction is the unit through which the Extension Division brings regular college courses to selected centers throughout the state. These courses are taught by regular members of the University faculty.

Professors from eleven University schools and departments taught 43 extension classes in eight North Carolina communities and at Fort Bragg during the past year. Many of these classes are taught as evening classes at the Chapel Hill campus.

The Extension Division has an annual budget of approximately $300,000, Rhyne said. The largest percentage of that comes from the fees of students taking correspondence and class instruction extension courses. For example, he pointed out that the entire Bureau of Correspondence has a budget of approximately $58,000, yet students fees brought in all but $10,923. Rhyner emphasized that these students fees are only from students taking extension courses.

OTHER SOURCES

Other sources of funds are either appropriated by the State Legislature or derived from trust funds. "The Extension Division is entirely financially independent from money which comes through the fees of regularly enrolled students in residence at Chapel Hill," Rhyne said.

Though major emphasis is now being given the bureaus most closely connected with adult education (i.e., the Bureau of Class Instruction, Bureau of Correspondence Instruction, and the Bureau of Lectures, Conferences and Short Courses) the Extension Division is also looking to the needs of the state's high school students. This work is handled through the Bureau of School Relations.

This Bureau concerns itself primarily with the following activities: (a) the annual contest of the North Carolina High School Debating Union; (b) the annual High School World Peace Study and Speaking Program;; (c) Academic contests as represented by the State high school chemistry, French, Latin, mathematics, physics, and Spanish contests; (d) the North Carolina Scholastic Press Institute; and (e) the annual School Art Exhibition.

SCHOLARSHIP TESTS

Of special note is the academic contests, or scholarship tests, which the Bureau helps administer with the cooperation of the University departments concerned. The Scholarship Committee of the University of North Carolina provides Merit Scholarships to the six students who win first place in these six academic contests. These scholarships cover the cost of tuition for one year and are subject to renewal annually.

According to the UNC Record, "The director (of this bureau) is constantly seeking out and advising outstanding young musical talent in North Carolina. To enlarge this service, which includes voice teaching and operatic training, an associate director of the Program's Institute of Opera and Lecturer in Voice to the Extension Division has been appointed."

The University Extension is now in its 46th year of operation. Since its founding in 1913 the Extension Division has had various historical guideposts. In 1921, the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction was begun. 1934 brought the group study program. In 1941 a contract was signed with the government to offer certain courses under the Army Institute Plan, and in 1942 the University became a member of the United States Armed Forces Institute. In 1941, the first Negro student was enrolled in the University through the Extension Division. And this year marks the beginning of an increased emphasis on offering better opportunities for post graduate adult education, as well as for those working either for credit or no credit.

HERE SINCE 1913

One member of the Division, Edgar R. Rankin, head of the Bureau of School Relations, has been with the Extension Division since its founding in 1913.

In an article entitled "Concept of University Extension" by the Extension Division, the following statement is included: 'The University does not exist as a separate entity', an end in itself, nor should the extension of higher educational services to the people of the state be classified as a separate function of the university, but as the reason for its existence."

The U.N.

Hope.

This is what the United Nations is exemplary of. It is the highest hope of rational men that the world can be ruled in a represenative manner under a government which adheres to the idea that under law the world can be ordered.

It is the mountain of strength between the chasms of weakness and annihilation.

The United Nations has many critics. Some say that it is impractical. Some wonder about whether the nations of the world will ever sacrifice enough of their own hegemony to make the system work. It is thought by others that there is not enough enforcement powers in the United Nations to make it work, and still others say that lack of good faith on the part of many nations, including the United States, will make the United Nations as a successful enterprise an impossibility.

Most of the criticisms are just. Most nations try to solve their problems by themselves by diplomacy or force before bringing the problems to the United Nations. Many will not sacrifice "nation's rights" for world government, including the United States which will not allow the U.N. flag to appear above the flag of the United States even on U.N. Day. The enforcement power of the United Nations, while stronger than that of the League of Nations which preceded it, has largely depended on the power of the major nations of the world and could not count on the power of those who opposed the U.N. decisions. And finally many nations, Russia most notably, have often demonstrated bad faith in the United Nations and have used the U.N. as little more than a sounding board for propoganda.

Yet, the United Nations has many achievements to its credit. Through its trusteeship program many small areas are maturing or have matured and have gained or will gain independence. Scientific, cultural, and technical assistance has been made readily available, and techinical progress in many areas of the world has been accelerated. Poverty and disease have been lessened in many areas in which they have heretofore run rampant. There has also been provided a sounding board for some of the major problems of the world, and although in most cases solutions have not been reached, the times that they were solved is indicative that solutions are possible. The fact that a U.N. police force has been used is indicative that the United Nations has the potential to maintain order.

A long hard road is ahead, and the time is getting shorter. Every day the world grows smaller in terms of the time it takes to negotiate long distance. Every day weapons of greater destructive power are being born and unleased, and the process of culture and education have not bridged the gap enough to handle the technological progress adequately. Language and cultural barriers still exist to block the path of mutual understanding, and the forces of ambition and power are still rampant.

The United Nations stands at this crossboards on its birthday with the olive branch of hope. The ideals of a few brought it into existence, the work of many is needed to sustain it, and the cooperation of all is necessary to make it work.

It alone offers the hope for understanding and of breaking down the barriers that separate and divide people the world over. It alone can provide for a world governed under law in which each nation has a forum for its grievances and in which action to alleviate such grievances is possible. It offers a chance that order can be made out of chans, and that the world will be spared more bloodshed and perhaps total death.

This is a time of crisis. The world is in turmoil, and private aims are taking the place of the good of the world. Good faith is necessary, faith in the possibility that the United Nations possessing this good faith from its member nations can chart the course of the world for the betterment of all.

United Nations On An Anniversary

Jack Lasley

(Editor's Note: Jack Lasley, a local attorney, has been appointed by Governor Hodges as state chairman of the Committee for observance of UN Day.)

The most vital question in international affairs today is:

Does "world peace" have a lasting and practical meaning capable of realization?

If we think of peace as the absence of all violence then surely as long as there are evil men we will not have this kind of peace. But if we define peace as a condition under just law in which violence is controlled, then we know without doubt that this type of peace is not only possible but exists here in America between out citizens, towns and states. Thus, every day each of us witnesses peace under just law at the various levels of our existence within our nation.

While we have peace between the citizens and political units of our nation today, this has not always been the case. As we are all aware, the early days of our Western states were filled with lawlessness; there were no courts, and practically everyone carried a gun and was a law unto himself. But people tired of unbridled violence and enforceable law began to be used to keep the peace. In time, citizens could put away their guns and turn law enforcement over to peace officers.

There is, I feel, a direct analogy between our early frontier days and the present world situation. Today we have no enforceable law between nations. There is no world government. There are no courts to try those who start armed aggression. There is no police to contain and deter the forces that start international warfare, and there is no control of the manufacture and use of weapons.

The UN seemed powerless to stop the Russians from entering Hungary. Many observers believe that Russia's armed intervention in Hungary could have been averted if there had been a permanent UN emergency force available at that time. While the United Nations represents man's best effort to bring law and order to the world level, without such a force the UN will certainly fail again in the future when similar situations arise.

The problem of world war affects all men. It is truly international business that can be dealt with only by an international organization representing every nation. No single national unit has the economic capacity or the moral right to police the world, while exclusive compacts lack universal authority and appear to be military alliances to those nations not included. In a single representative body there lies the great promise that peace with justice can be achieved between all nations. In such a body would rest the will of all mankind, and if democratically constituted and given adequate powers, such a world organization could bring to the international level of man's society the peace with justice which we know each day within the confines of our nation.

Let us examine the war-related problems that might be solved by strengthening the UN into a more effective instrument for world peace:

At present our able-bodied teen-age boys are required to spend six years of their youth in military service. We are not traditionally a military nation, but we have now resigned ourselves to accept with little questioning the peace time conscription of these young men. It has slowly become a part of our way of life.

"Dear Sir: In Answer To Your Expression Of Concern Of A Couple Of Weeks Ago—"

During the 180 years of our country's existence we have lost well over one million men in war. While the training for and the dying in war concerns every American family, we must not forget that these are also problems of other nations and among foreign families. They too seek relief from these problems, and our best hope of finding their solution lies in our working together through a strengthened, more representative United Nations.

As a consequence of our preparation for war, men of all nations are now concerned with the effects of testing nuclear weapons. The most dangerous product of these tests is a radioactive substance called Strontium 90. Since there has been much discussion as to the effects of Strontium 90 on human beings, it is interesting to learn what expert scientists say on this subject:

Dr. James F. Crow, geneticist of the University of Wisconsin, testifying before the Senate-House Atomic Energy Subcommittee, June 4, 1957, said: "Several thousands or perhaps more persons will be diseased, or deformed, or will die prematurely as a result of fallout if the present rate of testing is continued."

Dr. Hermann J. Muller, geneticist of the California Institute of Technology, said, "Every bomb test adds to the biological hazard to human life." Writing in the June 9, 1956, issue of the Saturday Reveiw, Dr. Muller wrote: "It is not necessary that atomic radiation reach a certain level in intensity before genetic damage occurs, any amount whatever of penetrating radiation can be harmful to the sensitive genes."

"In addition to the danger of sex-cell damage, and the possibility of leukemia or bone cancer, radiation causes a definite aging and shortening of life expectancy for everyone."

The following quotation is from the summary of the testimony given before the Senate-House Atomic Energy Subcommittee as reported by the Associated Press in a Washington dispatch of June 4, 1957: "The scientists said too that the first generation would see 20,000 stillbirths and child deaths and the total of these ultimately (in five years) will reach 500,000.

"There will be 40,000 more embryonic deaths and deaths around the time of birth in the first generation: 700,000 in all," he said, quotng from the testimony of Dr. Crow, and continuing the report of his testimony, "Besides these more or less recognizable results, there would be a 'larger but unknown' incidence of minor defects which would make the sufferers more susceptible to disease, less likely to have children, poorer prospects for longer life.",

If there is to be an end to bomb testing and if we are to have genuine world disarmament the UN must be strengthened into an instrument capable of carrying out adequate armament inspection. Moratoriums and partial disarmament will not bring genuine world peace. They are useful only as first steps. Disarmament must be complete to be meaningful. Complete disarmament means reducing by stages the armed might of all nations to the point that no nation has a military force in excess of that needed for policing within its own borders. A stronger United Nations could enforce laws against the making and testing of nuclear weapons, and could eventually extend its control to the manufacture and use of conventional weapons as well.

Some people ask the question: Can we afford genuine world disarmament since we are the world's largest producer of war material? Since it has been estimated that 60 of our leading cities will be leveled in the first phrase of World War III we must also ask ourselves: Has it not become the very essence of patriotiam to seek a just means to spare our nation and its people this ruin? Can we really afford NOT to have international control of the future production and use of weapons of war?

Each spring we pay our federal income tax. We usually blame this high tax on economic give-away programs for peoples overseas. Actually, most of our tax dollars are used for military purposes. In fact, over 75 cents of each dollar we send to Washington is spent for the cost of past wars and in the preparation for future wars.

To illustrate this fact, the federal budget for the 1956-57 fiscal year was some 59.8 billion dollars. Of this sum 29.7% went to the Air Force, 17% to the Navy, 12.8% to the Army. Various veteran programs and war memorials received 8.1%, foreign military aid 5.3%, the atomic energy program 3.2%, and .07% was spent for stocking war material. In addition, it took 1.7% of the entire budget to administer the military program under which soldiers are stationed in 72 countries.

If we could turn the power of these funds—or even a fraction of them — to constructive purposes we could wage a humanitarian war against cancer, mental illness, the problems of the aged, the depletion of our natural resources, and the lack of adequate hospital and educational facilities. We could then turn our attention to the development of the peaceful uses of atomic energy. If we could stop our large annual expenditures for weapons, the resulting reduction in per capita taxation would mean an increase in consumer purchasing power. Professor John Denneth Galbraith, of the Department of Economics, Harvard University, has said: "The general effect of disarmament on our economy would not be adverse from the standpoint of relatively full employment."

It is interesting to illustrate what might be done with the money now spent for arms if it could be put to non-military use. The following armament cost figures were obtained from the Department of Defense and from President Eisenhower's speech of May 14, 1957.

1. To fuel and service one heavy bomber for a 7 hour flight costs $7,000; enough to end a boy or girl through 4 years of college.

2. One destroyer costs $30,000,000; an amount equal to the cost of 60 half million dollar schools.

3. The $200,000,000 we spend for one aircraft carrier would pay for the construction of 200 million dollar hospitals.

4. One B-52 bomber costs $8,000,000; this sum would pay for over 530 fifteen thousand dollar homes.

The cost per person of our 1956-57 budget amounted to about $375.00, of this only about 1.9% was allocated for economic foreign aid and the United Nations. Clearly then our taxes are high because of the tremendous sums we spend on materials of war.

Without a rule of just law under a strengthened United Nations we face the continued militarization of our young men, tremendous taxation, continued radiation from nuclear armamentment testing, and the very real prospect that a hydrogen war may be accidentally started by an over-anxious commander or a misguided missile. Such an occurrance would, in al likelihood, drive mankind underground. It would mean that the land we love could not be enjoyed by our children. Our farm land would be made radioactive and become unproductive while our cities would lie in ruins. It would unquestionably mean the loss of millions of lives; millions of our citizens would be terribly burned and injured with large numbers of children born later dead or deformed due to genetic mitations.

But can we have world peace with justice? We can by individually dedicating our lives to seeking international machinery for world law. We must support the United Nations and strive through our organizations, our ballots, our letters to those in high places and through our day-to-day contacts with other people to make known our desire to establish a rule of enforceable, just law among nations. World peace will in great measure depend on individual action.

In the 6,000 years of his recorded history, man has not been halted in his quest for solutions to great problems because they were difficult and were of long standing. He learned to sail and to fly and to cure and to prevent dread diseases. Thus, we today have the great problem of nuclear power gone to war. We must not now be content to say that because man has always had the problem of war he must continue to have international war.

Where there is so great a promise for world peace with justice in our time it is doubtful if we have any other choice consistent with Christian morality, patriotism and sound economics but to empower the United Nations to keep the peace. By so doing we can stop our present steady march toward World War III. Through a stronger more representative UN speaking for all nations man can realize in this age the prophecy of Isaiah: "and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

THE UNIVERSITY AND "ULTIMATE CONCERN" CONCLUSION: SUGGESTIONS FOR REFORM

It is the contention of this series that the primary aim of the university should be to encourage in its students the development of "ultimate concern" — "a meaning which gives meaning to all meanings," in Tillich's words. The previous two columns in the series have attempted to point out some areas in which the search for "ultimate concern" is obstructed and diverted by the university. Implicit in these two columns is the possibility of reform, the possibility that the university can be redirected toward its proper function.

In the academic hemisphere the indicated reform involves the discarding of much of what is currently taken for granted. As it is obvious that all individuals are not capable of the same comprehension or the same depth of "ultimate concern, it is necessary that standards be clarified and maintained. For instance, it is quite reasonable that English 21, a required course for everyone, should concern itself only slightly with Hamlet's "ultimate concern": those taking the course are picked by random from a group of students of widely varying abilities; but to expect from students who elect English 50 anything less than a thorough, if not exhaustive, investigation and comprehension of "Hamlet" is not to offer Shakespeare at all. Unfortunately, such is often the case, and "Hamlet" is treated as a dead thing for laboratory inspection; the play is taken to be nothing more than the superimposed classification and organization which are properly employed only as a means of getting at the play itself.

A similar situation exists in most if not all subjects taught at the university: and in each one so afflicted a separation must be affected between the superficial and the profound, between those courses which describe the subject matter and those which seek to comprehend it. Obviously the separation cannot be complete, for the profound must progress from the simple, but an advanced undergraduate course should never be allowed to neglect the profound.

All this means that definite standards — and high standards — should be fixed for courses above the General College level: the "curve" should be discarded. If this happens, a student will be discouraged from electing courses which he cannot comprehend on the assurance that the general mediocrity will balance his inadequacy.

Furthermore, each division and many separate departments in the university should offer a basic course in the philosophy of the subject matter offered. In such a system, each subject is looked at as a mode of "ultimate concern" — as a particular way of looking at the world. The serious student, seeking the definition and development of his individual mode of "ultimate concern," is thus exposed to the concerns of other points of view without becoming needlessly involved with their techniques and applications.

Such a course should be open to all who can demonstrate their ability to comprehend it, but it should be required by each division or department of its majors. Every qualified student should be required by the Upper College to participate in several such courses in fields other than his particular field of concentration.

Such a program would make it difficult for any student to remain bright but unsophisticated, able to perform his job well — even brilliantly but unable to find in his field any essential meaning — any "ultimate concern." Obviously, too, under such a system the basic schism between "science" and "humanism" would be bridged by certain fundamental areas of common understanding.

The most important reform in the academic hemisphere is essentially this: that a qualitative distinction be made among courses which primarily describe (Grammar, Logic, Social Science 1&2, as they are usually taught), courses which seek to investigate and comprehend (all subjects as they can and should be taught to selected students), and the above postulated courses which consider the philosophic bases of various divisions of knowledge.

Reform is also necessary in the "community" aspect of the university in order to correct the abuses of individual freedom which now frequently exist as a deterrent to the individual's spiritual development.

The university is too big already and still growing. The result of size is that the individual's freedom is as limited as it is in the outside world, at a time when maximum freedom is essential. The university has become an "experiment in living" in the sense that the stdent is confronted with all the immediate and limited problems of the world before he has had a chance to develop the broader perspective which will enable him to bring fresh and creative insights to these problems. The university should indeed be an "experiment in living," but in the educational sense rather than the pragmatic: it should be an environment relatively insulated from immediate concerns, so that "ultimate concerns" may emerge unqualified by superficial concerns of pragmatism. The pragmatism will perforce come later, but it can and must be tempered by pure ideals if the human condition is ever to improve.

In this conception, the university community should encourage freedom from all forms of prejudice, from all arbitrary mora: codes, and from constant compromise and surrender to the group.

In addition the university community should supplement the academic function as well as provide it with a suitable environment. Those social activities which promote education should be protrimental to the process of education should be disvided for and encouraged, and those which are decouraged. The arts should be sponsored, then, while large-scale athletics and group functions which affirm the group rather than the individual should be discouraged.

These are suggestions for reform. They are not, perhaps, the most promising ones, and they certainly do not offer a cure for every ill, but they are intended mainly as "openers" to further consideration of the obvious problems rather than as answers to them. For one thing is sure: that unless appropriate and efficacious reforms are carried through in the university, the determined and capable student will continue to get what education he can in spite of the university, rather than in collaboration with it.

Letters On A Variety Of Topics

Editor:

In this day of great "ecumenical" activity, I am happy that my own Church—the Episcopal Church—is careful to distinguish between Charity to other Christian groups and compromise of the Faith.

One of the great crys of the present day ecumenical folk is for open Communion. The Episcopal Church has the policy of CLOSED COMMUNION. Only Episcopalians or members of other Catholic Churches may commune at Episcopal altars. There are several reasons for this. First, open Communion is forbidden by the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER on pages 281 and 290. Second, the doctrine of the Episcopal Church is that in the Mass the bread and wine become the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. Only Catholic Christians can thus in conscience commune at our altars.

This is not being narrow minded. It is simply being loyal to our Lord as we believe that He has taught all truth. And this truth includes the doctrine of his Real Presence.

Editor:

Lest I attain that high level of antagonism forthcoming upon the heels of a critical statement on a popular and sentimental subject; I wish to congratulate Miss Wall upon her noble and herculean efforts among the squalid and poverty-ridden people of Mexico.

I do, however, take exception to her phrase "and shocking enough to make me ashamed of my American citizenship." If her shame is a result of the economic standards of rural Mexico, she need not leave the environs of Chapel Hill, or at best the limits of Orange County to find equal squalor and poverty.

To be ashamed of being an American is a terrible thing. The United States has, is, and will do much to raise the standards of what we consider the underprivileged peoples of the world. But to bear shame because of a disparity in standards, is not only foolish, but narrow-minded.

It is obvious that Miss Wall takes her American citizenship lightly. It is not to be taken lightly under any condition or instance.

Of all your possessions, Miss Wall, your citizenship is by far the most precious, and not to be bandied about, either in word, or thought. Be proud, and thankful that you are an American, Miss Wall, for in many ways, we are the world's most fortunate people.

Max Pruzan

I was extremely disappointed by the action of several pseudo-cheerleaders during last week's Carolina-Maryland football game. The existing practice seems to be that any person may come to the foot of the crowd and lead a cheer: this is fine. Cheering is an integral part of football games and school spirit, and I certainly hope it will become more intense as the season progresses.

However, it disgusts me when some people, possessed by a few drinks, feel that any language may be used in their cheers. I do not care to have my date or parents listen to the performance of these "garbage mouth" clowns. Furthermore, I am appauled to see general crowd approval given to such displays.

We are quite fortunate to have a winning football team and fine cheerleading squad giving impetus to our Saturday afternoon excitement. Let's support both and keep the loud mouth drunks seated in the stands.

fers and lists, which is necessary because the store cannot absorb a loss. Even then, he said the store loses money often when text books are changed.

He said the requirement that the store keep texts for every course taught in the university often leads to loss on books little used, when a private dealer can choose volumes with high turnover to insure a profit. He said he felt the store is operated within the limits prescribed by sound economic practices and the needs of the students.

UP Committee To Set Sights On Expansion

The University Party has set up a committee to expand its membership to all parts of the campus.

The UP's main goal this year will be to represent the whole student body rather than any particular group, according to UP officials. The major part of the expansion program will be devoted to increasing the dormitory membership and participation.

A more extensive representation is needed and the UP feels that it has the potential to fulfill these needs.

University Party representatives will be available in Y-court Monday from 10-12 and 1-3 to talk with any students interested in student government. For further information interested students may contact party chairman Jack Lawing at 8-9068.

The party's fall nominations will be held at 7:15 in Gerrard Hall Monday night.

NYU Study

New York University is offering Carolina students a chance to spend their junior year studying in New York City.

Students will have the opportunity of attending the Washington Square College of Arts and Science for a year and returning to UNC to receive their degree.

Sophomores need only the approval of Dean George Harper in 203 South to be admitted to this program.

Dean Harper has invited anyone interested in the program to stop by his office any afternoon.

Panhellenic Council Is Host To EC Girls

The UNC Panhellenic Council was host Thursday night to four girls from East Carolina College. Local sororities have just been established at East Carolina, and the girls attended last night's meeting in order to gain experience from witnessing an actual meeting of a Panhellenic group.

The Panhellenic Council also announced last night that there will be a picnic for all sorority girls Oct. 29 in the basement of Cobb Dorm at 5:30 p.m.

Each sorority will bring enough food for its own members and 10 extra people, and each pledge class will present a skit.

UN Birthday Celebration Set For Today

An all-day celebration honoring the United Nations birthday is being sponsored today by the Y's Collegiate Council for the United Nations.

All students have been invited to activities at the Y between 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. Faculty members will observe the occasion with a Faculty Tea from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The Chapel Hill public has been invited to join the festivities from 1 to 5 p.m. There will be a "treasure chest" of cookies and candy for the children.

A U.N. booth, featuring the sale of cookbooks with international recipes, will be set up. There will also be displays of art work and handicraft, mostly pottery, from such countries as India, Switzerland, Mexico and Germany. These displays have been secured from foreign students on campus. No foreign Christmas cards will be on sale, however.

During the day a special birthday cake with the insignia of the United Nations will be cut.

Symposium Group Starts 1960 Foundation

The Carolina Symposium Interim Committee held its first meeting of the year yesterday, when it met in the Grail Room in Graham Memorial.

This is the group which is currently laying the foundations upon which the 1960 Symposium will be run. Yesterday's meeting was held to discuss general policy and to arrange some type of a general schedule.

PRESENT PLANS

Present plans call for this group to continue for another six weeks, at which time a meeting will be called of all students and faculty interested in working with the 1960 Symposium.

Election of officers will then take place and the formation of the program will be begun. According to Interim Chairman Al Goldsmith it is hoped that several speakers will be contacted and accept by the end of the year in order to give the committee a framework upon which to build.

NEXT MEETING

Goldsmith has called for another meeting to be held Tuesday. He read a list of faculty members who have been suggested to the Interim Committee as being interested in the group's work.

He went on to suggest that the committee be on the look out for people interested in serving as officers in the '60 group.

Head Trainer John Lacy Is No Ordinary Man

By STEWART PHINIZY

The Carolina athletic training room contains a chair—an ordinary chair—but in that chair sits no ordinary man. That man is John Lacey. His profession—head trainer for the Tar Heels.

Ask anyone what a trainer does and you'll probably get the weak reply "Gee' I really don't know. He gives the players rub downs and tapes them up before a game . . . stuff like that."

That's putting it mildly.

Long Hard Hours

His hours are long and hard. A typical day finds Lacey at work at nine in the morning and he's generally still at it until 7:30 that evening, when by that time the last player will have showered and gone home.

When the Tar Heels take to the road for an away game you can be sure that John Lacey is a busy man. There are bus schedules to be checked. Menus for the prescribed meals must be sent in ahead of time. After conferring with Coach Tatum, it is Lacey's job to see that these items are attended to and carried out satisfactorily.

The quiet, affable Lacey says, "Meals are very important. The team usually eats it's big meal four hours before game time. (10 ounce steak, scrambled eggs, cold cereal, ½ pint of milk, toast, butter, coffee). This is around nine.

"We give them solid food with a lot of proteins. Then at eleven they eat again. Not much, maybe juice and peaches. Something filling but nothing to make them sluggish."

Native of Connecticutt

Lacey is a native of Wallington, Conn. He served as trainer at Yale for four years under the late Herman Hickman. John was also trainer for three professional football teams—the Chicago Rockets, the New York Yankees, and the Baltimore Colts before going to the University of Maryland. There he served five years under Coach Tatum. When Tatum left Maryland to return to his Alma mater, Lacey joined him.

Lacey is now in his third year at Carolina. He has the distinction of being a trainer of three national championship teams, football and lacrosse at Maryland and basketball at Carolina.

Speaking very seriously Lacey said, "In the spring game of his junior year, Buddy Payne injured his knee. Payne was later operated on and had the cartilage removed from his knee. Doctors after examining Payne and working with him for some time finally turned Buddy over to us here in the training department for rehabilitation. I had him work with weights and do a lot of running. The boy worked so diligently that he was able to come back and play again."

"That's the real reward of this job, to see a boy injured like Payne, respond and come around, and be able to play again."

South Carolina Gives Clemson 26-6 Beating

A record State Fair holiday crowd of 46000 overflowed the stadium as the teams traded second period touchdowns. The bright sunshine and the 80-degree temperatures failed to stop South Carolina's second half Atlantic Coast Conference upset.

Clemson may have indefinitely lost its ace quarterback Harvey White, who suffered a painful shoulder injury late in the game. He scored Clemson's second period touchdown from the three yard line.

South Carolina moved 100 yards to tie it up, fullback John Saunders diving over from the one.

South Carolina began moving into its first State Fair victory in four years—and the first for coach Warren Giese—by opening the second half with a 90-yard touchdown drive. Quarterback Bobby Bunch raced wide to the left for three yards and the score.

Coach Gets Free Paint Job

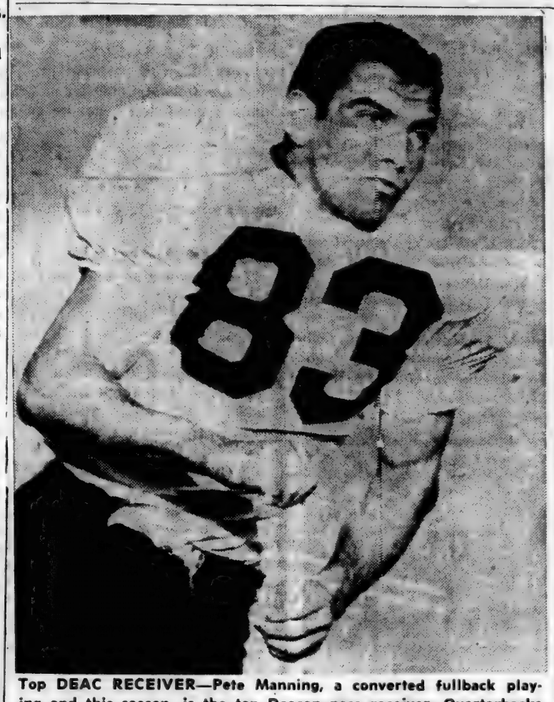
Carolina's 27-0 football victory over Maryland here last Saturday provided an assistant coach with a new paint job for one of his automobiles, but he had some anxious moments before finding it out.

Ed Kensler discovered Saturday night that his jalopy, a 1939 model of a low-priced popular make, had disappeared. He reported it to police.

"The car wasn't so much," he said, "But my golf clubs were in the back seat."

Sunday morning it showed up. Instead of being a drab washed out red, as in the past, it was painted a gleaming brand-new Carolina blue.

Football players, with the aid of a professional painter, had done the job in victory celebration.



Top DEAC RECEIVER—Pete Manning, a converted fullback playing end this season, is the top Deacon pass receiver. Quarterbacks Charlie Carpenter and Norm Snead have hit him 10 times for 120 yards and one touchdown.

Frosh Cage Outlook Good

Although the basketball season does not start for another month, assistant basketball coach Dean Smith is now in the process of selecting a freshman squad. Out of about forty freshmen who turned out for the start of practice on October 15 only seventeen remain.

Coach Smith said yesterday that he will keep a squad of twelve after a final cut within the next two weeks. There is a possibility that some of the freshman football players may try out for the squad when their season is over in which case the player limit might be raised.

At the moment Smith has chosen a top six which he considers a first string. The big men on this year's frosh team will be Jim Hudock and Ken McComb. Hudock, from Tukhannock, Pa. is 6-7 and McComb, a native of White Plains, N. Y., is half an inch shorter.

People - - Extra Attractions For Saturday's Contests

By STAN FISHER

What's the added attraction to the fall sport of football? Different people give different answers, but the one probably best is "people."

The "nip" in the fall air, the colorful contrasts of the lime-marked field, bright clothing in the stands, and dress the trees put on all play their part, but for sheer amusement the actions of the spectators can't be beaten.

There are always the flasks that come out of handbags, overcoats . . . they're liable to whisk into appearance from almost anywhere—then begin the endless trips for ice, chasers and other little necessities of those who imbibe.

Those who answer the cheerleader's request to lead in cheers always provide amusement. Usually they appear in most abundance somewhere around the last of the third quarter. (Why they delay so long is anybody's guess.) The stands break into gales of laughter as one walks unsteadily to the microphone, announces his intention to lead a good cheer . . . calls for an "S" from the crowd . . . and that's when the cheerleader panics and grabs back the mike before disaster occurs.

Another steps up, takes the mike, and addresses the crowd. "We're going to spell out M-a-r-y-l-a-n-d. When we get through I'm going to ask "what've you got?" and you all yell back "not a damn thing." " He carries it out, too!

Girls And More Girls

Then there are always the girls who seemingly sprout from nowhere. Big ones, little ones, thin ones, blondes, brunettes and all the shades between put in their appearance at the fall football extravaganza, but somehow all of them are prettier decked out in their bright fall outfits. Where they come from is anyone's guess.

After the game begins the fun! Beside the broken down goal posts the inebriated student protests to the somewhat diagruntled cop. "We won! I don't understand . . . why I'm for you," he says. The cop still still regards him with an icy glare.

After a word or two more the cop seizes the student, dumps him unceremoniously over the fence and stands regarding his handiwork. The students gets shakily to his feet. "Do you think that was a nice thing for a policeman to do?" he asks the officer . . . then breaks into a wobbling run . . . . The officer's gait and girth show that he is plainly past chasing even drunk students. Finally he catches him in the throng.

Larceny Series Reported To Police; Bell Lot Hit

A series of larcenies has been reported to the Chapel Hill police department since Wednesday.

The Bell Tower parking lot was heavily hit in the recent thievery. The Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity also reported a number of articles missing.

H. M. Johnston reported yesterday the loss of two high fidelity sets from the SAE house. One was a Magnavox portable with a cream colored case. The second of the hi fi units missing was a table model Emerson in a mahogany case. The sets have been missing since Thursday.

The SAE house also reported a number of other items missing since the beginning of the fall semester. The stolen articles included a green sofa, a black leather chair a double decker bunk and a wall clock. The clock was described as a battery operated wall clock shaped like a pocket watch and valued at $75.

Reported stolen from the Bell Tower parking lot was a laundry bag filled with laundry. The loss was reported by John Aldredge Thursday. The laundry mark on the clothes is JA-2268. The items were stolen from the Aldredge car on Oct. 22.

Also stolen from a car in the Bell Tower parking lot was a tennis racket and a white wool blanket. The tennis racket is a Jack Kramer model with a press and a red cover made by Wilson. The racket was valued at $26 and the blanket at $5. The complaint was filed Wednesday by John F. Snyder. The articles were taken between 10 a.m. and noon Wednesday.

Two Chemistry Grad Students Lose Grants

Dept. Says Cause Is Game Incident

Two first year graduate students in chemistry lost their assistant teaching fellowships as a result of Saturday's goal post incident.

Fred Siemer and Tom Loggice have lost their fellowships, according to the UNC Chemistry Department. Siemer is charged by the Chapel Hill police department with drunkenness and pushing an officer over a short fence. He is under a $150 bond and is due to appear in court Tuesday before Judge W. S. Stewart.

Seimer denies the charge that he pushed the arresting officer H. A. Gattis over the fence. He claims that the officer pushed him over the fence. The incident occurred near the goal post after the UNC-Maryland game. Siemer is charged with tearing down the goal post, then resisting arrest.

Both men intend to continue their course of study. The Chemistry Department did not say if any further action would be taken.

International Tea

Tar Heels, Deacons Battle Here Today

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina fans get their last chance to see the Tar Heels in action for three weeks here today when the Wake Forest Demon Deacons invade the peaceful confines of Kenan Stadium to do battle with Carolina's torrid Tar Heels at 2 o'clock.

The Deacs and Heels bring identical 3-2 records into the game. Carolina has swept its last three, while Wake Forest has won but one of its last three outings.

Both Jim Tatum and Paul Amen have announced their intentions of throwing the ball today, and with Carolina's Jack Cummings and Wake's Charlie Carpenter and Norman Snead, the prophecy will probably come true.

The probable starting line-ups:

Pos.	Carolina	Wake Forest
LE	J. Schroeder	P. Manning
LT	Phil Blazer	F. Thompson
LG	F. Swearingen	H. Lewis
C	Ronnie Koes	Buck Jolly
RG	Fred Mueller	Nick Patella
RT	Don Redding	Eddie Ladd
RE	Al Goldstein	Dan Herring
QB	J. Cummings	C. Carpenter
LHB	Wade Smith	Kenny Ferrell
RHB	Emil DeCantis	Jerry Ball
FB	Ed Lipski	Neal McClean

Wake Forest brings into today's battle the second leading offensive team in the conference, which makes a match-makers dream come true as Carolina is the top defensive team in the ACC.

New found scoring punch, discovered last week against the Maryland Terps, has made the Tar Heels double trouble and the oddsmakers have picked Carolina to win its fourth straight.

UNBEATEN

The Deacons are undefeated in conference play, having beaten State and Maryland without a loss. The only comparative score on the two teams' schedules so far is Maryland. The Baptists thrashed the Terps, 34-0, and the Heels whipped them, 27-0.

The boys from Winston also have on their side of the ledger the second best ground gainer in the conference in fullback Neal McClean. But the edge goes to Carolina at halfbacks where Moe DeCantis and Wade Smith provide the fire-power.

The consensus of opinion is that today's contest will be a very exciting one, no matter who wins. 1,000 Wake Forest students will be on hand for the spectacle.

Friday, Heard Plan To Attend AAU Meeting

Two University administration officials will be the official representatives at the American Association of Universities meeting Tuesday and Wednesday in Chicago, Ill.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday and Alexander Heard, dean of the Graduate School, will attend sessions along with representatives from the leading universities and graduate schools throughout the country.

President Friday will attend the national meetings of the AAU. Dean Heard will participate in sessions held by the Association of Graduate Schools of America, a branch of the AAU.

Campus Code Strengthening Is Called For

Idea Has Merit, Says Carmichael

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Miss Nancy Adams, chairman of the Women's Council, will meet with women's dorms presidents Monday afternoon to discuss the possibility of forming a social standards committee for the women students.

The committee, as Miss Adams envisions it, will probably be organized with representatives of all the dorms and sororities drawn from committees within these organizations.

According to Miss Adams the purpose of the committees would be to make the students aware of the Campus Code and to help prevent Campus Code violations.

"It should serve to strengthen the Campus Code and personal social standards," she commented. The committees would not be vested with judicial power but would rather be a consultive body.

However, the definition of the powers and functions will be in the hands of the coeds.

Other women's schools have such committees as well as some sororities on campus. Miss Adams studied some of the committees at other schools this summer.

Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women, thought the idea of committees has great merit. "This type of thing must spring from the wishes of the student body," she commented.

She did not envision the committees as laying down a "set of rules or regulations or strict code." She asserted, "It should be something entirely student inspired, student initiated and student implemented."

Social Rooms Open

Eight men's dorms will be open their social rooms to coeds before and after the ball game today. The hours will be from noon to 1:45 p.m and after the ball game until 6 p.m.

Those dorms which will be open include: Avery, Parker, Teague, Cobb, Joyner, Mangum, Conner and Winston.

No Final Decisions Yet On Rhodes Scholarships

Dean George Harper said Thursday that no final decisions have been made by the UNC committee on Rhodes Scholarships.

Dr. Harper indicated that Carolina would send 3 or 4 applicants out of 9 applicants to the state committee in December.

It is expected that final decisions will be made by the end of the week.

LEGISLATURE ROUNDUP

Gray Amendments On Polling Places Are Defeated After Lengthy Debate

By DEE DANIELS and STAN FISHER

Passage of the general election law revisions bill and the passage of a bill calling for better student conduct at football games comprised most of the action taken in Thursday night's Student Legislature meeting.

Amendments proposed by Charlie Gray (UP) which would have placed two polling places in Town Men's districts I, II and III were defeated after lengthy debate. Gray's arguments for his proposals centered mainly around the fact that the polling places as stated in the election law revisions were inconvenient for voters. He pointed the placement of almost every dormitory as a contrast in the convenience of voting in the different districts.

ROLL CALL VOTE

Defeat came on a roll call vote to the amendments after John Brooks (SP), introducer of the revised election laws, pointed out that Gray's proposals would make it virtually impossible for the elections board to keep a close check on voting procedures.

Debate that centered around Gray's later proposal to re-include the freshman, sophomore, and junior class officers of president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and social chairman resulted in the body approving Gray's amendments.

Gary Greer's bills—one asking in essence or the abolition of discriminatory clauses in campus organization's charters—and the other proposing to revamp the system of selecting jurors for the Honor Council, were held in the Ways and Means Committee at his request.

APPENDIX READ

An appendix to the elections laws was read before the assembly by John Brooks for the committee which revised the election laws. The proposed appendix would cover such items as legislature seat apportionment and the abolition of the offices of head cheerleader and NSA coordinator as elected offices. This appendix would be effective only until the first of December 1958.

Placing the fall election on the third Tuesday of November, the appendix proposes the following apportionment effective only for this election and subject to change by the Student Council:

D'tricts	T'tal no. of seats	Fall
Dorm Men's I	3	2
Dorm Men's II	4	2
Dorm Men's III	5	2
Dorm Men's IV	4	2
Dorm Men's V	2	1
Dorm Men's VI	4	2
Dorm Women's 1	4	2
Dorm Women's II	4	2
Town Men's I	4	2
Town Men's II	5	3
Town Men's III	4	2
Town Men's IV	4	2
Totals	50	25

Under article five of this bill a special legislative committee would be established to investigate the most desirable composition of a board to select the head cheerleader. This committee would be composed of the chairmen of the three standing committees, the present head cheerleader and a coed member of the present cheering squad as selected by the head cheerleader. The committee would report to the legislature its first session in December.

Also the legislature would consider a method of appointment of the NSA coordinator by the President of the Student Body with consideration given the recommendations of the NSA Committee and to outside student applicants.

The bill allows for future redistricting and apportionment by recommendations from the Rules Committee.

Furthermore, the rules committee would draw up a proposal removing the requirement that the head cheerleader be elected by the student body in the student constitution. This proposal would be submitted to the legislature for ratification at its Oct. 30 meeting. The proposal would in turn be submitted to the student body for ratification.

Norman Smith (SP) introduced another proposal concerning student elections. Smith's bill calls for the submitting "for ratification by the student body an amendment to the student constitution which would provide for a single annual spring campus election."

The bills cites discontinuity and confusion about legislature seats as primary reasons for its introduction. It also states that passage of the bill does not commit the legislature as approving the single election proposal, but only refers it to the electorate "who are the final authority of all student government . . ."

ELECTORATE VOTE

If this bill passes, a ballot would be submitted to the electorate in the fall election noting the change necessary to the student constitution to create a single annual spring election system.

Also, should the electorate ratify the amendment, appropriate legislation would be instituted to correctly modify all applicable bylaws and statues.

A bill introduced by John Brooks and Roger Foushee (SP) would place the Carolina Forum and the State Student Legislature delegation under the authority of the Forensic Council. The budgets of the these organizations would be combined with that of the Forensic Council, but earmarked for expenses.

Should the bill pass the solons the Forensic Council would submit its revised Constitution for ratification not later than the first legislature meeting of December.

Other bills from committees slated to have reached the body last night were tabled.

'Responsible' Conduct Is Urged

Four student leaders have joined President Don Furtado and the student legislature in calling for "responsible" conduct of students at today's football game.

Conduct at previous games was condemned in a statement yesterday by Jim Long, chairman of Student Council; Hugh Patterson, chairman of Men's Honor Council; Nancy Adams, chairman of Women's Honor Council; Phil Blazer, captain of the football team; and Furtado.

"At the past few home football games, it has been obvious that a number of students have forgotten that we, as Carolina students, live under a code which calls upon us to conduct ourselves as gentlemen and ladies at all times," the student leaders said.

They commented that as a result of the thoughtlessness of a few the entire student community has been subjected to a great deal of criticism and embarrassment.

Meters? 'New Experience,' Says Durham

"It's a new experience. We don't know how we will like it."

Captain Coy Durham of the Chapel Hill police department Thursday made this statement in reference to the prospective parking meters soon to appear on local streets.

One man checks parking violators at present, but it will take another new man to help handle the meters, Captain Durham said. Meters have to get checked on foot so the officer presently handling parking forfeits his motorcycle to do the job.

The local police said they had not considered hiring women for the job.

FOR CAROLINA COED

Life Not All Work, No Play

By JOAN BROCK

Life for the Carolina Coed is certainly not all work and no play. One glance at a list of recent social functions on campus reveals the fact that most coeds have managed to counteract their numerous 8 o'clock lectures and afternoon labs with a little UNC-spirited fun. Whether celebrating Tatum's latest victories or just plain "living it up," various groups on campus have afforded numerous opportunities for gay living.

OPEN HOUSE

Most notable of these functions were the women's dorms and sorority open houses, held earlier in the term, and the "Victory" celebration parties held in the dorms and fraternity houses following UNC's triumphs over South Carolina and Maryland.

Earlier in the season, Graham Dorm honored the nursing students at an informal dance given in the recreation room of the Nurses' Dorm. On Nov, 14, Manly Dorm will sponsor a combo party for the nursing students and music will be furnished by Ed Crow's Combo.

PLEDGES ENTERTAINED

The Tri Delts entertained their pledges on an evening recently and presented them with the traditional Carolina blue and white garters engraved with gold Greek letters. Also, the Delta Sigs invited the pledges over for coffee Monday night. Also included are a Pika sponsored dinner and combo party and a cabin party given by the Betas.

Dining and dancing at the Kappa Sig house Thursday night were the KD sisters and pledges. The Kappa Deltas also observed the sorority's 61st birthday with a tea for alumnae and patronesses at the house Thursday afternoon.

Various committees of the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority have been meeting with the sorority's field secretary(Ann Wescott, each afternoon this week. Recently, the SPE's were hosts to the Kappas at a turkey dinner and dance in the fraternity's newly constructed basement, which features a tropical setting; and the Kappa Sigs entertained the group at an afternoon party.

ADPI'S BUSY

The ADPi's were certainly busy last week, dining at the DU house Wednesday night and dancing at the ATO house Friday night. Nevertheless, they were in good spirits at the Chi Phi party Thursday night and future plans point to an evening with the Phi Kaps.

The Pi Phis began the party season with an informal dance at the ATO house. Later on, the Phi Gams entertained the girls at a steak dinner, and this week the sorority held a "Big Sister, Little Sister" party at the Ranch House—steaks included. Next Thursday, they will sponsor an alumni dinner.

The Alpha Gam sisters invited the pledges to a Sock Hop in the sorority's new dining room. Blue and white streamers and balloons dominated the ceiling and white grape punch was served. Les Sutorius's combo provided music for dancing and each pledge was presented with an Alpha Gam mug. The ATOs entertained the group last week and Saint Anthony Hall sponsored an evening of dancing Thursday night.

The Chi Os have been treated to dinner at the Kappa Sig house, and the Pikas have been hosts for dinner and a combo party featuring the Hot Nuts. The SAEs will entertain the Chi Os at dinner Tuesday night and will be the sorority's partner in the Co-Rec Carnival.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday were:

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled for Graham Memorial today include:

Southern Regional Conference on Hospital Recreation, 9-12 a.m., Roland Parker I; U. S. NSA, 11-5 p.m., Grail Room; Political Science, 10-11 a.m., Woodhouse Conference Room.

To The Game

Go to the game today, but beware.

Beware entering the stands and having Coca-Cola spilled upon you from the top of Kenan Stadium.

Beware of the drunkenness that pervades the stadium, drunkenness to the point of illness and purgation.

Beware of flying cards that some thoughtful individual will choose to throw. Exercise is healthy, he will say, and the cardboard has provided me with the necessary objects, he will add.

Beware of the cheers you will hear and of the substitute cheerleaders.

Beware of the lack of honest cheering, for identification between stands and field ceased years ago.

Most of all beware of the fact that there is no order maintained, and that no one is maintaining it or even has the responsibility for it.

If you have taken all precautions, enjoy the game. Don't watch it too closely, you might feel out of place.

Apportionment

Something has to be done about elections, reapportionment and the like.

That something has been brought to the fore only recently when it was found that the figures upon which the Election Board made their reapportionment were the old figures based on the old district.

Further, it was pointed out by the Election Board chairman that the laws for apportionment were not strictly followed, and indeed apparently they were not.

One district having 200 more students than another district had one less legislature seat than the smaller district. Another has the same amount of seats as a district three times as large with a differential of 250 students.

This is according to figures given yesterday. Currently there is in process an exhaustive study of the amount of residents in each district, for under the Constitution, in the election laws, and according to any concept of representative government, the criterion for representation is the amount of students per delegate.

This has not always been followed, for such a thing as voting strength has been called into play.

The Election Board has lost the opportunity to set things right. It is now up to the Student Council. It is hoped that they will set things aright. From the caliber of the group's membership, they probably will.

Election Laws

For at least another five weks, class officers are unfortunately with the student body. They will be forced to suffer their posters on bulletin boards and to see them do nothing for another year, or if they do something, to destroy the idea of no class distinctions on the campus.

It is hoped that the student body will vote for the class officer candidates which advocate the abolition of class officers. This may get the job done.

A second problem which was brought out bears study. This problem of having more than one box for fraternity men to vote. The people throughout the campus should have the maximum opportunity to vote, and a study should be made into some method for making it possible for more than one ballot box and still being able to check an election's validity.

Another View On United Nations

Carl H. Pegg

Throughout the ages men have pondered the idea of some sort of league of states to settle international disputes and to banish war. In 1878, when Bismarck's power was at its peak, an international peace conference in Paris branded offensive war as an international crime and called for a reduction of armaments and the creation of a permanent court of arbitration. At the Hague Peace Conference in 1899 the great powers sanctioned the principle of voluntary arbitration and planned the Hague Tribunal. At the same time Leon Bourgeois, distinguished French jurist and statesman, drafted an impressive plan for a society of nations and sought to persuade the governments of Europe to accept it.

In the midst of the suffering and agony of the First World War, Bourgeois' idea won wide support in Western Europe and President Wilson soon stepped forth as the most eloquent and powerful champion of the League idea. The Covenant of the League of Nations was written into the treaties of peace. And while the League of Nations was a much weaker structure than Bourgeois had envisaged, millions of people soon came to believe and hundreds of millions to hope that it would end the scourge of war and bring peace to the world. But the League proved unequal to the mighty task before it, and was wrecked by the new forces that developed in Germany, Japan, and Italy.

When the second general war in less than a generation broke upon the world, the idea of an international organization as a means of preserving peace was at a low ebb. But American idealism came to its rescue, contending that the League failed primarily because the United States was never a member and because the Soviet Union did not get into it until it was breaking down. With such men as Cordell Hull and Franklin Roosevelt leading the way, the American people called for a new and more courageous effort to devise an effective international structure. In the spring of 1945, even before the Second World War had come to an end, diplomats from fifty nations gathered in San Francisco and wrote the Charter of the United Nations. The new structure was quickly set up, and was soon being rocked by the East-West conflict as it struggled with some of the great isues of the day.

Will the United Nations succeed where the League failed? While this question cannot as yet be answered, there are certain things that can be said with reasonable certainty. If the United Nations is to take root and to succeed in its central purpose, it will have to have the support of the major peoples of the world—the Russians, the Germans, the Chinese, the Japanese, the Indians, the Arabs, the French, and the Anglo-Saxons. The real power of the United Nations is outside itself; it is an international structure solely dependent for life and strength upon the willingness of the nations of the world to use it and to give it life and strength. It is still a weak and fragile thing, and the domain of international life is still something of a jungle. To develop the United Nations into a permanent and effective international system will require all of the good will, faith, and ingenuity of which men everywhere are capable. It will be necessary to deepen and broaden the moral foundations of peace, not merely in a few countries but in all major countries. It can be done, but the will to do it will have to be strong and well-nigh universal.

AT THE FOOTBALL GAME

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

Let's face it: last Tuesday evening's organ recital of Mr. Glen E. Watkins can only be described as a dismal event. The organist seems to be capable of displaying technique with considerable show. He also seems to have the ability to present the large varieties of sound that can be gotten from the instrument. But technique and sound do not guarantee music, and not once during the evening could one really say one was conscious of a musical experience. Either the music was of considerable stature but was badly performed, or the performance was decent and the music worthless.

The artist opened the program with the Prelude, Fugue, and Chaconne of Buxtehude. The performance was chaotic. Fragments of music poured on other pragments, broken snatches of phrases heaped on other phrases without, as far as I could make out, the slightest regard for order and structure. And this is a Fugue and Chaconne The speed of Mr. Watkins systematically destroyed any musical sense that could have possibly survived this performance. The intended brilliance (why otherwise the speed?) was lost in the jumble of notes and harmonies.

Daquin's "Noel: Grand Jeu et Duo" was perhaps the only work of the evening which was given a clearly delinated performance. It is a pretty set of variations built on a tune which sounds suspiciously like the popular "In an English Garden" song.

The compositions of Bach which followed were all presented in their most superficial guise. Little or no attention was given to nuance and structure. The artist did little more than skim the surface of these compositions. Again Mr. Watkins' conception of tempo erased all depth and expression to be found in these works. What was most irritating was the lack of insight that became more and more obvious as the organist performed these works. If anything, Bach's great music is neither superficial nor surface. As this composer's constructs his composition upon a musical form, there is a journey into the great depths of expression that music alone can reveal. This expression must be there in the performance in order to make the music meaningful. Without it, there is no music but only sound.

After the performance of two rathe: ridiculous works by Searle Wright, a contemporary composer, the rest of the evening seemed to be devoted to less and less music and more and more sheer sound. A undistinguished modern work by Edmund Haines revealed plenty of variety in sound, but little in music. The French composers represented on the program, Langlais and Dupre, again seem to specialize in volume and bombarding the audience with lots of sound. How much of it was music is hard to say really.

There is nothing wrong with sound as long as it is also music Both in his selection of the program and in his performance, Mr. Watkins seemed to have favored the former.

More Letters On Various Subjects

Editor:

A most regretably ignorant review of the Petite Musicale, presented last Sunday night, appeared in today's TAR HEEL. Some people, who did not attend the concert, might think Mr. Lessing knew what he was talking about. The artists, too, might read it and wonder why they bothered to perform for "pigs!" It was an enchanting evening—such as not heard out of the metropolitan areas. I, and others who had the privilege of enjoying the concert, was thrilled with the music and moods it evoked.

Name Witheld by Request

Editor:

It was during the afternoon dinner hour at a fraternity house. Several of the guys were discussing usugl after dinner topics:

"Who're you dating this weekend?"

"Mary. Remember? The girl with the boy you birddoged last week."

One of the pledges entered the conversation with a question that indicated he was doing a little advance planning for a weekend in the not-too-distant future.

"When is the Fall Germans concert?" asked the excited pledge.

"Concert! What concert? was the return answer. "Haven't you heard? The Playmakers have rented Memorial Hall for the next three months. That leaves any plans for a concert out in the cold."

"But what about Johnny Mathas and Louis Prima "

"Forget it! There just won't be a Germans this fall—not without a concert!"

The Playmakers have a beautiful Greek-styled theater; it is one of the most conspicuous buildings on campus. One would think a small portion of the Greek past had been transplanted in a setting of colonial architecture as he gazes at the towering columns standing sentinel to the passing campus life. With a building exalting the heritage of the theater, why would the Playmakers need Memorial Hall for rehearsals?

No! This must be the product of a joke! Surely the Playmakers have been misunderstood again. These talented counterparts of the Carolina world would not allow the Fall Germans to go unconcerted.

Many Carolina students hold vivid memorieso f the past Germans—The football game, the Saturday night dance, and the Sunday concert. There were fraternity parties, laughter. One wonderful weekend.

"We will have a Fall Germans complete with concert, want we?" This is a question asked by a puzzled pledge.

As a former student at U.N.C. and an avid Carolina fan, I must register official protest. What I saw on television this past Saturday disgusted me no end. I'm not talking about the football game itself; it was great to see U.N.C. win!

I'm referring to the cheer some of the Carolina students were singing: "I don't give a damn for the whole state of Maryland, for I'm from Carolina! . ." To me and I'm no old fogey—this was the height of bad taste and poor sportsmanship!!!! It was loud and clear enough to be heard on TV, and I know the fans from Maryland must have felt insulted by such a display because it was uncalled for and had nothing to do with what was going on down on the field! After all, they were the guests of U.N.C. at the game, and this was anything but hospitality. I felt it was completely incongruous with the spirit and traditions of Carolina, and I was ashamed to hear such a thing! I've talked with enough people to know that others feel the same way.

A letter like this may do no good, but, at least, I've gotten it off my chest!

Dear Mr. Wolff:

I can only say that if that review of THE DECLINE OF THE AMERICAN MALE wasn't up to standard, what wonderful pieces you must write when you are in that state of grace! Your review is another example of the fact that the quality of book reviewing in college papers these days often surpasses that of many of our most August journals.

Sunday evening two skilled and dedicated musicians shared with the University Community the fruits of many weeks of careful study. A grateful audience received the efforts of Walter Golde and Ethel Casey with obvious enthusiasm. An entire recital of the choicest Debussy song cycles is a rare treat indeed, and one scarce ly to be found outside the western world's greatest centers of population and culture.

Mrs. Casey's voice and musicianship were equal to the difficulties of the music. She approached her task of recreating Debussy's settings of symbolist poems with evident humility. Her interpretations were thoughtful and oftentimes very moving. While the three "Songs of Bilitis' remain my favorites, I was greatly impressed by her performance of the demanding "Froses Lyriques" and was pleased to be introduced to new beauties in the second set of "Fetes Galantes."

Mr. Golde, whose wealth of background and breadth of musical scholarship was doubtless responsible for both the idea and the preparation of this unique recital, provided informative introductions and presided at the keyboard with his usual superb skill and authority. One readily felt the rapport between the artists which again and again created moments of great beauty and expressiveness.

To both singer and pianist we offer sincere thanks for enlarging our horizons and for deepening our appreciations. A further word of appreciation is also due to the G.M.A.B. which promotes such programs; to Russell Link the energetic chairman of the Petites Musicales for his sincere interest in providing fine performances of serious music; and to whomever was responsible for the improved physical arrangement of the Graham Memorial lounge.

It seems that the staff of The Daily Tar Heel have read their own articles and those of Time magazine to such an extent that they are excluded from the world of reality. Perhaps it would be well to inform them that the majority of Southerners are against integration and are not "hatemongers." Most people south of the Mason-Dixon line do not hate Negroes but rather are deeply imbedded with custom and tradition. One of these traditional beliefs is that segregation is the right social pattern, and that integration is morally, socially, and intellectually wrong. Customs might be rather absucd to a freethinker or liberal, but I think if you examine these groups you will find prejudice, custom, and tradition within them also. Of course certain "arty" liberals think Southerners are artificial, but really, who's artificial?

For your information, the primary issue is no longer integration vs. segregation but Federal power vs. state's rights. If integration is to come, it must come slowly, or you cannot expect peace and the absence of "hatemongers." Never in the course of history have people abandoned traditions such as segregation and state's rights overnight.

Orval Faubus was a moderate, but he was forced to defend his and his state's actions and beliefs when the Supreme Court denied the people of Little Rock time for acceptance of this sudden change in their social pattern. Arkansas's integration program was well under way, and no one had raised any objections. When Faubus was warned of anticipation of trouble at Little Rock's Central High School, he sent in the National Guard, not to kill integration and defy a court order but rather to keep peace and order until integration would be accepted.

Your champions of humanity and civil rights—Earl Warren, G. Mennen Williams, Thurgood Marshall, and Paul Butler—are greatly responsible for the violence that has resulted. Of course the Deep South says, "Never," for now they detest the Yankee liberals who have cried and fought for the cause of humanity. (They must have a cause or they would find themselves quite boring.) These liberals have impaired race relations and sectional relations in such a way that the good will brought on by the two world wars may never be restored. Just a court decree would not have been so injurious; and maybe it would have helped speed up the evolution; but no, they cry out for revolution, not evolution. If there is blood to be shed, Faubus, Almond, and Eastland will not be the men responsible.

The above quotation is taken from an editorial of a leading state newspaper. It appeared late last year in conjunction with the controversy which arose out of a resolution passed as the North Carolina Student Legislative Assembly.

The author appeared greatly amused at the "funereal, sternly important reaction granted the little rebellionism of a small group of college students who don't really represent anybody." He seemed to think that the "unimportant" students were merely having their little laugh at the pompous severity which received their resolution in official state circles.

In the current renaissance of the dispute, the above-mentioned newspaper has thus far confined itself to merely reporting the decision of the Governor and his Council of State. That decision, however, smacked of an equally disdainful attitude.

This year, representatives to the Assembly will be required to present letters ascertaining sponsorship by college presidents in order to use the Capitol again.

Although not a particularly unreasonable request, it contains a vicious implication. Had this demand been isolated, it probably would be accepted with but little retort. Following as it does upon the relative heels of a widely debated issue, particularly one involving the race question, it cannot be condoned.

If delegates are to be confined by suggestions of repercussions from their representative schools in the event legislation proves unacceptable to certain individuals, then it is senseless for them to convene at all. Under such a system of censorship, bills presented in the Assembly would unquestionably prove to be unimportant, irrelevant, and most dull.

Efforts to please all citizens at all times will inevitably prove unsuccessful. The Governor, as evidenced by his recent attacks on the State Attorney General, obviously is attempting to please the group which, in his questionable estimation, is more politically advantageous. In his interests, I hope he has not forgotten the great number of voters and prospective voters now attending North Carolina's colleges and universities.

Regretable is the actual crux of this entire question—lack of confidence in the ideas and ideals of modern college students. They are constantly being repressed and ridiculed by ignorant, narrow-minded, and outright asinine individuals.

Voters on the 1957 free-choice-of-marriage resolution were dually characterized as fearful rabble-rousers and childish pranksters. I am sure they were neither. They merely expressed a dissatisfaction with the precepts by which our society is governed. In this, they failed to conform to the policies handed down and dictated by the all-knowing elders.

I sincerely hope that the 1958 group will rise above its environment and prove as individualistically forthright and sensibly realistic as its predecessor.

On Rock 'n' Roll

Ken Wheeler

There can be no doubt that the greatest kind of music ever written exists today in the form of the teenagers' favorite, "rock 'n' roll." Our music, friends, outshines any other in words, music, and beat. The majority of the people, supporting such insufferable melodies as "Nutcracker Suite," "Funiculi Funicula," and "Tennesee Waltz" are wrong. We are right. Allow me to prove it.

Let us take, from random choice, a "Rock 'n' roll" hit tune of today for example. How about the very beautiful "How the Time Flies"? Here we go.

It starts with a beautiful chorus softly humming incomprehensible sounds which the listener can make out as "Dixie-doo oo oo", or something on that order. After this effective beginning, the soloist brings us verse one: "How the time flies, when I'm near you. When I'm near you, how the time flies. Seems like heaven when I'm near you. When I'm near you, seems like heaven." Marvelous, friends!

Now enters a deep-sea bass, who retaliates with lovely, but again incomprehensible lines with such words as "kiss or two," "sun rise" and "night pass" somehow slipping through the fog. This chant sets the stage for verse two: "How the time flies, when I'm near you. When I'm near you, how the time flies."

A saxophone and cornet entertain us until the soloist recovers his nerve and glides into the third and last verse: "How the time flies, when I'm near you, etc."

Isn't that lovely? How can human ears adjust to trash like the 1812 Overture when teenagers offer such elegant compositions? Shun these classical music feinds, friends! Show them the light.

Care to try a faster current hit? "Rockin' Robin' should do . The lyrics of this ballad go "He rocks in the tree top all the night long, rockin' and a-rollin' and singin' his song. Every little birdy and every chickadee likes to hear the robin go 'Tweet, tweet, tweet.'" This is apparently the work of a genius.

Want to hear more? Then don't eat this week friends. Rush to the nearest record bar and gather all the tasty tid-bits 45 RPM discs have to offer. Hail the Zeus of Music, the King, the Exalted! All hail "rock 'n' roll!"

Last week they were flat as a Lenoir Hall pancake. This week they'll be up in arms and tough to handle. That's the story of the boys from Baptist Hollow, Wake Forest's Demon Deacons.

Due to last week's rather poor showing against Villanova, Coach Paul Amen has made changes at strategic spots. He said he would last week; apparently he meant it.

CARPENTER TO START

Charlie Carpenter, the ACC's second best passer two years ago, will start at quarterback today for the first time this season. He replaces soph Norman Snead, who has started every game so far. Snead last week completed only 1 of 10 passes. "Chucking" Charlie looked good even in defeat.

The starting halfbacks, Buster Ledford and Jim Dalrymple, may be replaced by Terry Ball and Kenny Ferrell. Neal McClean remains at fullback, although he didn't show too much last week.

CAN McCLEAN RUN OVER HEELS?

Speaking of McClean, he is regarded by many to be the top fullback in the ACC. He is a good up the middle runner. He may be the top fullback in the ACC, and he may run up the middle of that Tar Heel line today . . . but he's got to show us.

PASSES TO FLY

Both the Tar Heels and the Deacs are expected to be throwing football balls in all directions today. Both have tough defenses, which may force a passing game. Both have the horses to pass all day, and it should make for a very exciting contest.

The Tar Heel running game, which worked so well last week, may have its hands full today. Carolina fans are looking forward to seeing more of big Don Klochak at fullback, and Coach Jim Tatum has promised that "The Bull" will see a lot of action today.

TWO TOP KICKERS

Carolina's Don Coker is still the top punter in the ACC, but in today's game he faces his nearest challenger in Wake Forest's soph Wayne Wolff. After last week's games, Coker was averaging 44.3 to Wolff's 41.9. If things go well for these two guys, both teams may begin deep in home territory all afternoon.

Some 1,000 Wake Forest students will be on hand for today's big game. The college is providing transportation. The reason for this mass migration is that the athletic department switched the Deacs' home game with Clemson to Clemson, and the students didn't take to it so well. Thus, they came up with this idea to keep peace with the student body.

DEACONS POINT TO UNC

Down through the years, the Deacons have always pointed to Carolina as the team to beat, and this year is no exception. Coach Paul Amen has said that this will be the toughest game his team has had all season, and the one they most want to win.

Many fans will remember a few years back when a mass riot broke out in Kenan Stadium after a game between these two. Deac Freshman Coach Nick Consoles still has a couple of teeth missing from that one.

PREDICTIONS

Duke 14, State 6. The Blue Devils, despite last week's licking by Notre Dame, have steadily improved game after game. The Pack has looked good only in spots, and this won't be one of them.

Carolina 22, Wake Forest 7. Although the Deacons have an identical record, they haven't shown the constant improvement the Heels have exhibited. Carolina to win on a good defense and rejuvenated offense.

AUBURN BOUNCES BACK

Auburn 13, Maryland 0. The Plainsmen are still smarting from last week's tie game with Georgia Tech. The Terps are smarting also but there isn't much they can do about it against the top defensive team in the country.

Vanderbilt 20, Virginia 15. The Commodores looked very good in a losing cause against Clemson, and the Cavaliers have gotten progressively worse. Uncertainty about Reece Whitley spells doom to UVA.

Preview Of Today's Top Games

By The Associated Press

Today is a day unlike any other day so far in the 1958 college football season. Here, among other things, is what's going to happen:

1. A Lambert Trophy winner all but formally chosen.

2. A big step taken in picking the Ivy League, Big Ten, Skyline, Southern and Southwest conferences' champions.

3. Some highly ranked teams forced to prove just how good they really are.

The Cadets, with a 4-0 record, will have to play without fullback Harry Walters and with a highly curtailed Pete Dwakins, the star halfback with a charley horse. The Panthers, 4-1, are in good physical shape.

Veterans Win First Cage Contest, 84-65

The first full dress scrimmage for the varsity basketball team took place Thursday night in Woollen Gym with the veterans from last year's squad overpowering the sophomores 84-65.

The game, played before several hundred fans, had all the regular season trappings with four league referees calling the plays and Mike Ronman shooting films of the contest.

Harvey Salz and Ray Stanley led the scoring for the winners while York Larese was the big gun for the losers. In addition to Stanley and Salz, the Blue team was composed of Lee Shaffer, Dick Kepley, Danny Lotz, and Grey Poole.

Coach Frank McGuire said yesterday that he expects to hold a scrimmage about once a week with the next one tentatively scheduled for next Thursday night.

One of the players who didn't make the contest was junior guard John Crotty who is currently sidelined with some torn ligaments in his ankle. When the accident first occurred it was feared that Crotty would be out for as much as two months, but Coach McGuire now says that he expects him back within the next two weeks.

Band Day

The colorful spectacle of 50 bands in action at the same time will be the feature attraction today at the halftime of the UNC-Wake Forest game.

Bands from all over North Carolina and other states, each wearing its home uniform, will converge in Kenan Stadium during intermission. Band Day is an annual attraction at Carolina during the football season, and this year is no exception.

Tar Heels Wallop Wake Forest 26-7

FIRST TOUCHDOWN—Soph End John Schroeder gallioped 51 yards for the first Carolina touchdown after this play, eluding Ken Farell of Wake Forest at the Wake 10. The play started at the Carolina 49 when Jack Cummings threw a pass with the pressure on and Schroeder grabbed it for the score.

Big Second Half Spells Deacs' Doom

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's torrid Tar Heels rolled over stubborn Wake Forest here yesterday 26-7 for their 4th consecutive victory.

The Tar Heels used the home run type play to great advantage combined with long drives. The defense was tough as usual, allowing the Deacs only one score and forcing them into the air much of the afternoon.

Heels Strike First

After the first quarter had ended in a scoreless tie, the Tar Heels finally got rolling just before the end of the half. On a drive which started from their own 47, the Heels drove 53 yards for their first marker. The big play was a beautiful 51 yard pass from Jack Cummings to John Schroeder. Schroeder grabbed the pigskin at the Wake ten, faked out Ken Farrel, and galloped into the end zone unmolested. The try for two failed and Carolina led at intermission 6-0.

After receiving the kick-off to begin the second half, the Tar Heels struck hard and fast for their second touchdown. From his own 38, Wade Smith broke off left tackle, evaded the entire Wake Forest team, and romped 62 yards into paydirt. Once again the try for two was stopped but Carolina led 12-0 with 13:7 remaining in the third period.

Only Bright Spot

Wake Forest's only bright spot of the day was when they pulled within 5 points. The score came just after the third quarter began on a 56-yard sustained drive. The scoring play was Jim Dalrymple's smash into the end zone from 3 yards out. Neal McClean converted to put the Deacs back into the game at 12-7.

But Carolina came charging back to sew things up with another counter as soon as the Baptists kicked off. From their own 11, the Tar Heels drove 89 yards, the big play being Cummings' toss to Al Goldstein in the right far corner of the end zone. This time the Heels added the extra as Moose Butler split the uprights.

With only two minutes and 17 seconds left in the game, Carolina put the fourth nail into the Wake coffin when Moyer Smith set up the touchdown on a reverse good for a 9 yard gain to the Wake 3; then smashed over from that point. Phil Blazer converted to provide the final margin, 26-7.

The middle of the Carolina line was tremendous all day long, as were the defensive flankers. Neal McClean found the going indeed rough up the middle. McClean wound up with a good average, but gained all his yardage on draw plays.

The great defensive showing of the Heels forced the Deacon quarterbacks to pass fast and furious.

United Nations Day Celebration Offers Wide Range Of Exhibits

By RONNIE SHUMATE

A tattered matador's cape, stained with its owner's blood, hung on a mantle in Y building.

Representative of a foreign culture, this cape was also symbolic of just another nation within the world organization, the United Nations, whose birthday anniversary was universally celebrated Friday.

A Y committee, the U.N. Education Committee (UNEC), compiled colorful exhibits of UN countries, such as the matador's cape, in observance of the UN's birthday celebration. The UNEC collaborated with the Collegiate Council for the United Nations (CCUN) and the American Association for the United Nations (AAUN) in presenting the exhibition. Displays were donated by the Cosmopolitan Club.

Some of the many languages were there in pamphlets, posters and books. The tones of music from strange lands filled the Y and drifted outside the building.

Flags representing each of the 82 countries in the UN decorated the main exhibit table, which extended the length of the Y lobby. On the opposite wall were hung the Universial Declaration of Human Rights and the preamble to the UN charter.

A 20-minute film entitled "United Nations and World Disputes" flicked across a TV screen throughout the day.

A beneficial aspect was present in the selling of Christmas cards and cookbooks. The proceeds from the sales will go to aid in the rehabilitation of needy children in all parts of the world.

Children from Chapel Hill schools were entertained by a "Treasure Chest" filled with candy and toys from foreign countries and UN balloons.

The UNEC, just formed this year, will sponsor, in addition to UN day, three seminars to the UN in New York and will work with the CCUN on a model UN assembly here. Schools from various parts of the South will be represented, with each school representing a particular country.

Bill Sugg, president of the YMCA, was elected president of the state CCUN last year. North Carolina has the only state collegiate UN council in the country. The CCUN strives to further knowledge and appreciation of the UN on college campuses and in public school systems.

Betsy May, a co-chairman of the UNEC, said she was not confronted with any "headaches" in setting up the exhibition. She commended the nearby 50 students, as well as the local merchants, who co-operated with the committee in setting up the UN exhibit.

Right Owners; Wrong Auto — Or Vice Versa?

By CHUCK FLINNER

Two cars were just alike and the right owner drove off in the wrong car or the wrong owner drove off in the wrong car or the wrong owner drove off in the right car or anyway the case is closed.

A car was reported stolen and recovered the same day by the Chapel Hill police department.

Cecil Garret reported to the police that he had parked his car behind the Delta Sigma Pi fraternity house. When he looked for it in the evening it was gone. The car was described as a '54 cream and green four-door model.

Officer C. L. Byrd recovered the car the same evening. The car had been taken by mistake.

Carolina Air Force ROTC Harps On Lack Of Angels

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

The Air Force ROTC needs more angels.

Not necessarily the wings-harp-halo type, but they must have poise, personality and interest in the AFROTC. Also, they must be UNC coeds.

These earthly angels, official hostesses for the AFROTC, are giving a tea Thursday, Oct. 30, for nominees for the 1959 Angel Flight. Prospective members are nominated by the cadets and present members of Angel Flight.

A week after the tea, each girl will be interviewed by top ranking cadet officers, executive officers of Angel Flight and staff members. Only juniors and underclassmen will be considered for membership.

The Angels wear their sky blue Eisenhower jackets, skirts, stewardess' caps, white scarves and gloves all day every Thursday. Meetings, in which they learn military etiquete and rank, are held from 5 to 6 p.m. on Thursdays.

The duties of this honoray group include giving coffees for the cadets, receptions for visiting dignitaries, acting as hostesses at the military ball, riding in parades and participating in reviews.

Each year they participate in the Air Force area conclave in February. The 1959 conclave will be held at UNC. It is a weekend of banquets, coffees, meetings and fun.

The Angels are honorary members of the Arnold Air Society and yearly visit Pope and Johnson Air Bases for tours and luncheons. They correspond with the National Angel Flight and participate in flights twice a year.

These 25 busy "angels," while they don't quite make the AFROTC heaven, do manage to keep the fire and brimstone from being too noticeable.

TO PARALLEL SYMPOSIUM

March 8 Tentatively Set For Forum Of Fine Arts

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

A Forum of the Fine Arts, intended to parallel the Carolina Symposium, is in the planning stage on the UNC campus.

The weekend of March 8 has been selected as the date for the forum which will offer outstanding speakers in the fields of drama, the novel, poetry, music, painting, philosophy, motion pictures, radio and TV, the dance and musical comedy.

However, if money for the Five Arts Forum is not raised by Dec. 1, plans will have to be altered or abandoned, according to Mark Wilson, chairman ofthe Planning Committee.

The theme of the forum is "Creativity in Crisis" and the purpose is "to bring together in Chapel Hill some of the outstanding artists of today to share with the University community and with one another, in a week of lectures and open discussions, their ideas on what the arts should mean to the individual in a world in which crisis has become commonplace."

"Though each participant will be asked to give only one major talk, we hope that most of the visiting speakers will be able to remain on the campus throughout the entire week to participate in classroom discussions and rountable discussions with other speakers," Wilson said.

Tentative plans for the Forum began last spring. Approximately 20 students and faculty members have been meeting weekly this fall to work on it.

The officers of the forum, elected by the planning committee are Mark Wilson, chairman; Jack Raper, vice chairman; Jane Payne, secretary; Everett James, treasurer and Dr. Wilton Mason of the Department of Music, faculty advisor.

Coeds, Events Now Featured In GM Program

By FRANCES WALTON

The Graham Memorial monthly calendar has a new face, several new faces, in fact.

It is being published once a month and includes the picture of a coed plus more events than in previous years.

This calendar is the work of the GMAB Calendar Committee, headed by Angus Duff. It is compiled of dates from campus organizations Sam McGill's office calendar, GM events calendar, GMAB committee functions, athletic events and other administrative information.

The Calendar Committee operates under a yearly budget of $800, which must cover the cost of publishing 3,500 calendars a month.

WAC Offers Month Trial For Coeds

The Women's Army Corps (WAC) is offering a one-month trial period this summer for coeds as a sample of a future career as a commissioned officer.

A WAC officer will be here Monday, Oct. 27, at 2 p.m. in Gardner Hall to meet with any interested Carolina coed.

Women over 18 years of age who have completed their junior year are qualified to apply.

Upon selection, women will be called to four weeks active duty at the WAC Center, Fort McClellan, Ala., as a member of the WAC enlisted reserve. For this time $122.30 will be paid each coed at the end of the training.

Classroom work at Fort McClellan consists of eight 50-minute periods five days a week. The curriculum covers four subjects: general military, military operations, management and administration and military techniques.

Recreation facilities at the Fort include: hobbyshop and tennis courts, golf course and swimming pools, the Officers' Club, and bowling alleys and theatres.

Women who do not complete the course or decide not to apply for a commission as a second Lieutenant will be discharged from the U. S. Army Reserve.

Coeds participating in the training program are not obligated to enlist in the WAC after graduation.

Candidate Nominations On Student Party Slate On SP Agenda Monday

Nominations for various campus offices open in the fall election will comprise the program of the Student Party Monday night.

The meeting will be held in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2 at 7:30.

Class officers and legislative seats in town districts and dorm districts III, IV and VI and Dorm Women's II are the vacancies to be filled.

All students interested in running for these offices have been urged to attend.

Membership Drive Planned By Local Symphony Chapter

The Chapel Hill Chapter of the North Carolina Symphony will conduct its annual membership campaign the week of Oct. 27-Nov. 2, according to Capt. Walter C. Holt, membership chairmen. Goal for the campaign in $3,000. The North Carolina Symphony, organized in 1932, is the first state symphony in the United States and was the first symphony orchestra to receive state support by legislative act.

Conducted by Dr. Benjamin Swalin, the Orchestra is now preparing for its fourteenth annual tour. During the 1958 season, 107 concerts were presented, of which 63 were free concerts for children.

Memberships can be purchased from any Symphony worker or at the local Symphony headquarters on the campus in Bingham X. Prices range from $3 for singles and $5 for couples to $10, $25, and $100 for active, donor and patron memberships.

Aids Offered To Seniors On Employment

By LARRY PENLEY

The UNC Placement Service will be giving away two thick publications, listing a variety of information for job hunting seniors.

J. M. Galloway, director of the Placement Service, said yesterday that distribution of the 1959 editions of "Career: for the College Man" and "College Placement Annual" will begin on campus Monday.

All seniors may pick up free copies at 211 Gardner Hall.

A glance through this year's books hows that the search for qualified manpower by industry continues as intensively as last year. Teachers and engineers are again in great demand, Galloway said.

But the accent this year, as never before since World War II is on quality and proven undergraduate performance as a criteria for filling the best available jobs.

Both books feature complete indices of every company—broken down by locations, college major backgrounds preferred by companies, corporate summer work opportunities, and most immediately, by recruiting schedules on each campus.

Unique to "Career" this year is the College Interview Index, a complete cross reference showing recruiting season visits planned by employers at over 200 campuses across the nation. Many companies are listed to send representatives to the University of North Carolina campus this school year.

Talks Planned On Destruction Of Telephones

Damage incurred to dormitory telephones will be discussed in the near future by J. S. Bennett, director of the Operations Office; Don Furtado, student body president; Rudy Edwards, IDC president, and other concerned students.

Furtado said much of the damage to telephones occurs when they are dropped, allowed to swing against the wall or left dangling by the cords.

During the proposed conference, discussion will center on the feasibility of placing in the various dorms wall booths of the "hear here" type like those in the Y Building and Graham Memorial.

These additions might decrease damage done to the telephones and at the same time increase quiet in the dormitories, Furtado added.

Bennett said yesterday he will be willing to try such phones in a few places if that is what the students desire.

Demos' Campaign Errors Pointed Out By Nixon

LINCOLN, Neb. — (AP) — Vice President Nixon said last night the Democrats had made a "major error" in injecting foreign policy into the campaign.

Because of this and what he labeled as other mistakes of the opposition, he predicted a large reservoir of undecided voters will rescue the Republicans from what looked three weeks ago like a "disastrous defeat at the polls."

Summarizing five days of campaigning for GOP congressional candidates, the Vice President said in an address prepared for a party rally here that a Republican resurgence has made this "a brand-new campaign."

"I have never known an election on which more voters were undecided at such a late date as in this campaign," he said. "This I believe is a major advantage for us because there is not an issue on which our case is not far superior to that of our opponents."

Nixon, who campaigned earlier in the day in South Dakota, pointed to three issues he said he thinks "will have the greatest effect in shifting votes in this critical last week of the campaign."

"The Democratic Advisory Council made a major political error in insisting on making foreign policy an issue in this campaign by attacking our policy in the Far East and challenging us to defend it," Nixon said.

"In every speech I have made before all types of audiences in every section of the country, I find more universay support for the administration's firm stand on this issue than on any other."

Two weeks ago the Democratic Council assailed President Eisenhower's handling of the Quemoy-Matsu crisis. It said administration policies "have led us to the brink of isolation from our allies and to the brink of having to fight a nuclear war inadequately prepared and alone."

Nixon answered that the policies of the previous Democratic administration had led to war and the Eisenhower policies to peace. President Eisenhower deplored the injection of foreign policy into the campaign, as did Secretary of State Dulles.

SHE CAN'T SAY 'NO'—Margaret Starnes plays the role of fun-loving Ado Annie in the Playmakers' version of "Oklahoma!" which ends its three-day run in Memorial Hall at 8:30 this evening.

The Issue

The issue in the world at the present time is not peace, for surrender would accomplish that purpose admirably.

Indeed the issue is not world power, for a test of that is readily available, and perhaps the ultimate test of power is the test of mankind's power to annihilate himself.

The issue in the world today is one of whether man is able to preserve his integrity, and whether the world can exist under a system whereby man's integrity can be preserved.

This is the only meaning of the fight for freedom, and the only issue that, if Russia would win, the world would lose.

At stake in the world today is the right of man to speak, think, and act according to his beliefs rather than the beliefs of the community surrounding him.

The issue is freedom, the fight is real, and the war is being waged badly.

Communism as a force today offers the promise of economic improvement to the peoples it intends to attract, but veiled beneath this is the concept which permeates totalitarian systems wherever they are — the complete sacrifice of the individual to the will and purpose of the state. Through this system great technological progress may be made, but individual creativity, individual iniative, and the right of an individual to be honest with himself is lost in the shuffle.

The Communist challenge is real in terms of armaments as can be demonstrated in Hungary or Quemoy and Matsu, and in terms of of ideological and economic attraction as evidenced in the Middle and Far East, and the United States, as the supposed leader of "freedom", has failed miserably to lead in that direction largely by not acquainting itself with what its own freedom means.

Within the United States, the true selling point of democracy — freedom to think — has been disregarded for the sake of national security. So that one sees passport denials, second class citizenships, loyalty oaths, and the governmental idea of the common welfare taking precedence over equality under the law and the right to think.

These values express themselves in foreign affairs and have wrought much havoc with the validity of the United States' claim to the furthering of freedom.

Temporary expedients have replaced long range solutions and principles have been compromised in the face of short range aims. It comes presently to the impasse where no nation in the world can be sure of the stand of the United States on any significant issue.

The so called "uncommitted peoples" of the world would have a leaning towards democracy and freedom if the tangible evidence was not so unappealing.

The United States has a self which it can choose to ignore or to be consistent with. This self is manifested in the Constitution and in the way that this nation was formed.

"To thine own self be true" is the possibility under a democracy. It is a moral ought in Democracy's dealings with the rest of the world.

The integrity of the individual if protected and if fought for is the most worthwhile product of a democracy.

A society in which each person can bear "To thine own self be true" can be the personal motto of every individual and where every individual has some consciousness of that self is the thing to be sought. It cannot be accomplished unless the form of government which can possibly make this a reality uses this as its motto.

The time for reappraisal is now.

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

With the world seething over manifestations of the foreign policy of the United States this week, politicians stumping the country offered as many views as there are persons for solutions.

Campaigning party leaders debated the foreign policy amid charges of "surrender" and "smear." Former President Truman accused President Eisenhower and Secretary of States Dulles of bringing about the present crisis in the Formosa Strait through a policy of "blunder, bluster and brink of war."

He was answered by Eisenhower's press secretary, James Hagerty, who said Truman was doing some political rewriting of history. He said Truman would have a hard time selling it to the people.

Eisenhower himself stuck to domestic issues like the recession ("I feel confident it is over,") and labor unions ("Corrupt labor bosses who have betrayed their trust pose a great danger to all Americans.") Dulles said in a television interview that the U. S. is not going to tolerate an attack on the Chinese Communists in the Formosa Strait area. He lambasted the Democrats for trying to undermine our foreign policy by false charges and accusations.

BUTLER JOINS IN

Democratic Party Chairman Paul Butler got in his licks too. He accused Eisenhower of campaign name all and said the Democrats are indignant. He added that Vice President Nixon has been using ugly names and that Republican National Chairman Meade Alcorn has been trying to scare the voters by saying a Democratic victory in the forthcoming elections would lead to socialism.

Butler said Nixon had used "such ugly and divisive language as 'rotgut thinking,' 'political radicals' and 'appeasers' " in discussing foreign policy. He asked if it is unpatriotic to discuss foreign policy while the guns are roaring and the Republicans claim peace during a cease-fire?

Adlai Stevenson, Democratic standard-bearer in 1952 and 1956, joined in the crusade for clean campaigning in saying that charges against the Democrats were "the ultimate in demogogery." He said. "The old Nixon has been joined by the new Ike—or a new speech writer—in a desperate, intolerable, demagogery type of campaign."

The Democrats have internal troubles this year as bad or worse than the GOP. In Atlanta a definite possibility of a split in the party was forecast by Gov.-nominee Ernest Vandiver in the wake of a sharp attack on Southern Democrats by Butler. Butler had told the southerners to accept the party civil-rights platform or leave and form a third group.

Vandiver said it ill-behooved Butler and others to read anyone out of the party when it was founded on principles of states' rights, local self-government and constitutional integrity. He said Butler himself should leave and align himself with a group more near his leftist tendencies.

FORMOSA STRAIT

In actual foreign events this week the crisis in the Formosa Strait was the most important. Dulles flew to Taipei early in the week to confer with Chiang-Kai Shek, and the two agreed that the U. S. and Nationalist China must stand together against the Reds. The talks took place while Red guns shelled battered Quemoy and Matsu after violating their announced extension of a cease-fire.

Dulles warned the Reds that U. S. supply ships may return to ferry duty if the increased shelling makes it necessary. And to make it less tempting for the Reds to shell, Nationalist officials have decided to reduce the garrisons on the islands by one-fifth from the 100,000 stationed there now. The move would dramatize the U. S. announcement that the Nationalists would not attack in the area.

The millions of Roman Catholics throughout the world kept their attention focussed on Rome this week as the entire College of Cardinals convened in preparation for balloting on the successor to Pope Pius XII. The balloting began Saturday and will not cease until the new Pope is chosen. The historic Sistine Chapel, decorated by Michelangelo in the 15th Century, is the scene of the election.

Speculation grew as the Cardinals convened around the identity of the new Pope, and most observers agreed that he would come from the ranks of the elderly, conservative Italian cardinals. The words "transition Pope" are being heard frequently, and he would be expected to continue the police policies of Pius but not begin any of his own.

In Cuba next week nearly three million voters will go to the polls to elect a successor to President Batista, who is retiring, and a new congress. But in contradiction to their efforts to unseat Batista, the rebels operating from the mountains of Oriente Province under Fidel Castro have threatened bombings, sabotage and killings to break up the voting. He has also called for a general revolutionary strike.

The voters have four choices for President. And Batista has said he will turn over power next February to the winner, and that "only God can stop the voting." Batista has dominated Cuban politics for 25 years.

UN EMERGENCY FORCE

The United Nations declared on the day set aside in its honor that next week a special political committee will begin debate on a special standby emergency force by Monday. The U. S. has indicated it will settle for a planning committee for the force.

Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold has endorsed a general principle framework which might be used to set up a force, but not the establishment of the force itself. The Russian delegates are opposed to any consideration of the question.

In the school integration disputes in the South some new developments took place during the week —the Virginia Congress of Parents and Teachers balked on a tie vote at endorsing the massive resistance policies of the state. The vote was 557-557. Then in a 515 to 513 vote it urged that localities be allowed to determine whether to operate racially integrated schools.

The vote was a narrow margin of victory for the moderates who do not necessarily favor integration but who wish to have public schools open.

In Little Rock the first days of the Little Rock Private School Corporation's attempt at educating 230 white seniors in a plan to offset the closing of the city's four high schools by Gov. Faubus. No efforts have been made yet for classes for other high school students.

A mixup in registration sent the seniors home after two hours on the first day. Gov. Faubus said he felt the private corporation could not operate schools indefinitely on private contributions, then added he did not think it would have to. He said the state legislature might come up with something when it meets in January.

CIVIL RIGHTS

And in attempts from federal agents of the Civil Rights Commission to investigate voter records in two Alabama counties defiance and refusals to cooperate were the rule. Atty. Gen. John Patterson, already assured of the governorship in the next election due to his Democratic nomination, said the voting records were private rather than public and urged their withholding from the agents.

Macon County, site of famed Tuskegee Institute, and Montgomery and Mobile Counties were being investigated. The Civil Rights Commission announced it had settled on representatives in some southern states, including North Carolina, but said they would not be made public until the men accepted.

"Who's Going To Leash Or Unleash Whom?"

On Vending Machines

Ron Shumate

Tacked neatly on a door in the main lounge of Avery dorm yesterday was a little notice to the residents of said dorm. This notice, written on blue paper for some abstract reason or another, contained statements concerning the dorm's vending machines. It said, in effect, that the milk machine in the dorm had been subjected to vandalism, and other machines had been subjected to undue treatment. "It has been decided that any further acts of this nature will result in the removal of said machines," it stated.

All residents are required to "refrain from tampering with all machines and to report anyone who does not do so."

This matter was bound to come out in the open sooner or later. These vending machines give the first floor of Avery, and other dorms as well, a Las Vegas-like atmosphere. If one attempts to buy something from any and all of these machines he is literally gambing. My roommate and I have lost between $5 and $6 in these machines thus far in the year. Granted, this is no momentous sum, but the principle of the matter is what counts. Doubtless the firms which have machines in the dorms and all around the campus are not operating at a loss. They couldn't be, with all the money the students have lost in them. Only this afternoon, I lost a small sum in a machine in the basement of Graham Memorial.

If the firms which own all these machines don't wish to have them tampered with, why don't they fix them. If dorm residents, especially those in dorms far away from eating establishments, desire a midnight snack they must resort to the use of these machines. Of course, they could always hike all the way across campus, but that is hardly likely. Therefore, the students are handicapped, to an extent. The only alternatives they have are (1) drink water; (2) don't drink anything; (3) don't eat anythnig; or (4) as was mentioned above, walk across campus in the dead of the night. Another possible "out" would be for students to bring their bread and pastrami.

So what are the students to do? Obviously, none of the above "suggestions" are quite feasible. Something definitely should be done about the situation. The owners of the machines should not be allowed to continue to make profit on items they keep in their machines. I'm sure the students don't mind paying for their snacks, if they get them.

An energetic student scrawled a suggestion across the bottom of the notice. This student suggested that more machines be placed in the dorms. This would not solve the problem, for if the machines were like the other "one-armed bandits" nothing would be gained.

I do agree, however, that the students do not need to resort to vandalism to make their gripes known. The IDC has a standing Vending Machines Committee to which the students may take their gripes. The dorm officers also may receive such gripes.

A plan has been suggested which will provide for the reimbursement. This plan has been in effect in some dorms, for more than a year, and has apparently worked well. Measures are also being taken to provide for more machines in some dorms.

But until these measures, suggestions and so forth, are put into effect, the students will continue to write home, spend a portion of each evening in the gambling rooms of the dorms. And I thought gambling was prohibited by the IDC.

Two Views On Playmakers' "Oklahoma!"

Anthony Wolff

"Oklahoma!" opened on Broadway in 1943: five and one-half years and 2,248 performances later it's first New York run ended (it was later revived), but it probably safe to say that since its original opening there has never been an evening without a production of "Oklahoma!" by someone, somewhere. The original success of the show was due in part to the public need to escape at least for an evening from the heavy pressure of war, but its continuing success is due to its own virtues — light good humor, simple romance, and beautiful music.

Whatever its lasting virtues, though, "Oklahoma!" has been pretty well defined after fifteen years. Two Broadway productions and a tremendous Hollywood production, popular records of the music, and countless road productions have exhausted the show's novelty, and it would take an almost impossibly superb performance nowadays to make the musical anything but a worn copy of its original.

The current Playmaker production is no such thing. It has its moments, to be sure, but the total result is poor. The most discouraging aspect of this production is an excruciatingly slow-moving first act, during which there is hardly a single spontaneous moment; even the song cues are painfully obvious as they are almost invariably followed by a pause during which the singer moves to the front of the stage and checks with the conductor.

Even the enitial efect as the curtains open is weak. Tommy Rezzuto, who designed as well as directed the current production,, seems eminently capable of making the Playmaker Theatre stage expand beyond its actual small dimensions but unable to take advantage of the relatively huge stage in Memorial Hall. Instead of the wide open spaces of the state of Oklahoma, the setting is a shallow and bordered frame decorated with flat scenery which was very nicely proportioned but entirely lacking in depth.

The lighting, which too often throws severe shadows on the two-dimensional scene, is a contributing factor to the unimpressive setting.

Most of the individual performances are good, but few are first rate. Darwin Solomon, as Will Parker, has perhaps the most successful evening, closely seconded by Carolyn Myers' Laurie. Mr. Solomon's lack of anything resembling a singing voice doesn't hurt a bit: his timing is fine, his dancing impressive, and his characterization excellent. Miss Myers is a delightfully sweet Laurie, and her singing is the only example of real vocal quality in the cast.

In the minor role of Ike Skidmore, William Dixon develops an excellent and amusing characterization. Don Linney's Jud is excellently menacing, and his singing, although inconsistent, is generally good. For a few moments at the end of one scene, Mr. Linney succeeds in making Jud more human than he is often taken to be, and this is one of the few intense periods of the evening.

Lillian Prince's characterization of Aunt Eler is also excellent, although it is difficult to understand her at times. Certainly she seems more at ease on stage than anyone else.

Margaret Starnes misses a fine comic portrayal of Ado Annie by the easy fault of overacting. She mugs and grimaces, and seems more like a talented D. A. student trying Ado Annie than Ado Annie herself. But Miss Starnes is still very funny, and her mugging is darn good mugging, even if it is overdone.

Hunter Tillman's Curley, the leading male role, is the biggest disappointment. His voice is adequate, but certainly not extraordinary, and his acting is responsible for much of the slow pace of the first act.

As for John Sneden's characterization of Ali Hakim, the criticism is much the same as that of Miss Starnes. Mr. Sneden is something of a master at these characterizations, but he overdoes it considerable at the expense of the humanity of the character. It is a minor criticism that Mr. Sneden's Yiddish accent is not very kosher.

The finest single "event" of the production is Dorothy Berea's dancing as Laurey in the Dream Ballet sequence: Miss Berea is a pro, and in this production she stands out strongly.

Generally, the dancing seems to lack skill and spirit, except for Miss Berea and the square dance which opens the second act. Perhaps (strickly layman's criticism) the formality and discipline of Foster Fitz-Simons' choreography demands more talent and experience than he had to work with.

Irene Rain's costumes are the least successful of any she has done in the last two years. Curley's trousers, to pick at a minor but typical example, are ludicrous. Most of the men look as if they are out for "trick-or-treat," costumes by Rose's 5 & 10. Cowboys wear tight pants, for one thing.

It seems legitimate to question the wisdom of an other "Oklahoma!" at this time, and particularly in such an undistinguished production as this one. The only thing that saves it at all is a second act which almost erases the memory of the first, and a rousing finale of the title song.

Joel Chadabe

When Roger and Hammerstein wrote Oklahoma! in the early forties, and era of musical comedy was ending. Gershwin had, for the last time, dedicated an unpublished song to a female aquaintanee. For the last time, Barry Hart had been whisked away to an upstate New York hotel to be told by Rogers, "write!" Cole Porter was the last of the witty society writers still riding the crest of fame. But the time had come, foreshadowed by Showboat and Helen Morgan's "Bill", when the show stopped no longer for the music. The music had become an incorporated and essential part of the action, characterization and plot. Oklahoma! was a revolution.

An "angel" is a backer for a Broadway show. He invests a certain amount of money and receives a certain amount of the profits if the show is a success. Oklahoma! did not attract "angels". People were so skeptical about a show violating the traditional forms of musical comedy that no one wanted to invest. Imagine a show without a chorus line! And all about cowboys, at that! It was many long months before the production reached the Broadway stage, and many long years before it left.

This Playmakers' production of Oklahoma! captured the same spirit and energy that made the original production a success. And this, above all, is what Oklahoma! needs. Hunter Tillman sang with vitality and spontenaiety, as did Carolyn Myers, filling their songs with youth and tenderness. Margaret Starnes did an outstanding job as Ado Annie, fully capturing the comedy of "I Cain't Say No".

More important than singing the songs in a show such as this is acting them. The songs are caricatures of whatever they represent. They are meant to be exaggerated and obvious, and only then do they make a point. Not one of the songs heard Friday night was indispensable. Darwin Solomon brought Kansas City to Memorial Hall in a fine rendition of "Kansas City". "Pore Jud", sung by Mr. Tillman and Dan Linney, was appropriately wishful and humorous.

"Lonely Room" was the song that represented the revolution in musical comedy; it was the first time that a soliloquy, consisting only of characterization, had found a place in a show. Dan Linney sang and acted the song well, and, through the song, portrayed the lonely character of Jud.

All of the music was extremely well performed. The chorus sang well, and, as is too unusual in amateur productions, the words could be clearly understood. The orchestra, under the direction of Gene Strassler, played well, and the balance between the singers and the orchestra, though sometimes strained, was all in all uniformly good. Mr. Strassler, the musical director for the show, has done a fine job.

On Smiles

Frank Elkins

"When I look at him . . . I see only his smile: humorous, whimsical, tender; the window through which the divine light of the man breaks and glows on all who come within range of his radiant personality. That smile is the transparent covering of his soul."

People in Chapel Hill don't smile enough! Where is this widely-advertised affable atmosphere of "friendly" Chapel Hill? I'm beginning to wonder if it really exists anyway except during week-ends. A visitor finds a warm and friendly atmosphere on week-ends when all is gaiety and frivolity, but for a place reputed to be so friendly, Chapel Hill during the week can be the coldest, loneliest, most imposing place I know.

In talking with a group of boys in the dormitory recently, I heard several of them—mostly new-comers—speak of how, without thinking, they speak to the people they meet walking across campus — and nine times out of ten the people don't speak back.

Ever since this discussion, I have been paying attention to this as I walk across campus — it's true! People on this campus simply refuse to speak to one another.

I guess you people must have parents like mine who, as I left home for school, cautioned me with words like "Be ever on guard Son; Carolina is crammed full of Communists and atheists! Look neither to the right nor to the left, etc." But gee, in my home town, the "normal" people are those who smile and speak when they meet you on the street.

For those of us who involve ourselves in student activities through which we meet people, the magnitude of the school is somewhat reduced. But what about the fellow who came specifically to read, to study, and has to "dig" for what he learns and consequently hasn't time for extra-curriculars? And what about the freshman who came from a small town where people exchange smiles and speak when they meet? And what about the fellow who is used to a small crowd and is unable to join a fraternity and thus gain the closeness and brotherhood he had to leave behind him?

The Day Junior Went Away... Or Why Mother joined the Mah-Jongg Group

Who will ever forget that time? The whole town turned out . . . well, maybe not the whole town...to see little Bobby Collegebound off to the University. There he was in his hand-stained bucks . . . pleatless khakis . . . and his varsity sweater. (Badminton 1, 2, 3, 4.) Sonja . . . ah, Sonja, his homeroom sweetheart, sobbed quietly. Sonja had heard stories about the co-eds. She was worried.

As the Toonerville local pulled in, another small cry was heard. It was Bobby's mother. Who will look after him? Who will warm his milk and care for his shirts? Then came the unforgettable reply. Bobby, head high, shoulders back, anewered . . . "I will! I will wash my shirts." Ah, smart boy. He'll make the grade. Gone was the callow adolescence . . . for Bobby Collegebound had bought Van Heusen "Vantage" Shirts with his allowance. No longer need he be tied to Mother's apron.

His all cotton Van Heusen "Vantage" Shirts need not be ironed. Bobby Collegebound could wash his Van Heusen "Vantage" Shirts himself . . . and in a matter of hours they would be ready to wear. Day after day . . . far from home . . . Bobby would sparkle at college in his Van Heusen "Vantage" all cotton, wash and wear, no-iron shirts.

"Now," Sonja cried hysterically . . . "I've lost him forever. With all that free time in those handsome shirts, he'll be the target of every girl on campus. If only I had passed bookkeeping I could have gone, too."

As the train pulled away, Bobby's mother faced east and said . . . "Thank you, Van Heusen "Vantage," for being like a mother to my son!"

Win Over Deacons Makes Happy Saturday For Tatum

By ELLIOTT COOPER

"I'm as happy as I can be," said Tar Heel coach, Jim Tatum after his crew had won their fourth straight game, this time from Wake Forest by a 26-7 count. "We won from a very fine football team."

It took Sunny Jim and his players just sixty minutes of football to snatch away from Paul Amen the conference lead which he had held since last Thursday when South Carolina beat Clemson.

Tatum gave a great deal of praise to Wake for its passing attack us a much bigger problem which gained 216 yards on seventeen completions, "They gave us a much bigger problem than Maryland by using a spread formation," the Carolina coach stated.

"Their passing kept us in danger all the time," Tatum said. "Until we made our third touchdown my chitlins didn't rest well. I think Snead and Carpenter are both great."

Getting back to his own team, the Carolina coach again expressed that he was very pleased with the play of his squad both offensively and defensively. This time it was actually the offense which got into the spotlight by gaining 481 yards during the afternoon.

Why was Wake Forest's running game so effective towards the end of the first half? Tatum explained it this way, "I put in two safety men for my middle guards which left the entire center of our line open." The move was successful, however, since the Deacon running plays took up a great deal of time.

Pressure On Passer

Despite the fact that the Deacs got over 200 yards in the air, it was also apparent that the Carolina line was putting a lot of pressure on Snead and Carpenter causing them to hurry the pass or eat the ball. "Our whole line," Tatum said, "especially the ends and Ronnie Koes put a lot of pressure on their quarterbacks."

When asked if he thought his team had reached its offensive potential Tatum was quick to reply, "I hope not, we should have scored more in the first half.

"Our team has improved a whole lot because of readjustments in the backfield," Tatum added. For the coach one of the new bright spots in the backfield is Moyer Smith. "That boy is going to make a dandy," he said. "He makes every move like a halfback should."

Klochak Not At Potential

Again on the subject of big Don Klochak, the Tar Heel mentor stated, "He still lacks a long way of being the Klochack he ought to be. He was running too high out there today."

Tatum explained that the reason he did not use fullback Ed Lipski was because of a leg injury which the junior from Larksville, Pa. came up with in practice.

Sunny Jim did have one regret about the game; he played everyone he wanted to except sophomore end Frank Riggs. "He deserved to play and I apologize for not putting him in."

All in all it was a pretty successful day for Mr. Tatum; his team won and although it was a rough contest none of his players was hurt.

IN THE CORNER—Al Goldstein takes a 24-yard heave from Jack Cummings in th corner of the end zone for the third Tar Heel TD. This marker pushed the count to 19-7 for Carolina nd virtually sewed up the win. The Heels eventually won 26-7

Amen: Those Home Run Plays Killed The Demon Deacons

By STEWART PHINIZY

"Carolina has a very fine football team. You can't give three scores like we did and expect to win. Those two passes and the long run by Smith (Wade) killed us," said Wake Forest's Paul Amen.

"All three scores were home run plays. It's like in baseball when a team keeps hitting the home run you can expect to get beat," he continued.

Amen was referring to the great catches made by John Schroeder and Al Goldstein and the brilliant 63 yard dash by Wade Smith, each good for the all important six points.

Thought They Had Chance

Amen continued, "When we scored just after the start of the fourth quarter, I thought that we had an excellent chance to come back. We were behind 12-7 but there was plenty of time left for us to score again.

"Carolina then took the ensuing kickoff and marched 89 yards for its final touchdown . . . that settled it."

"Offensively we did just about what we expected we could do although we couldn't move with the consistency we would have liked. We missed Winston Futch both offensively and defensively today. Boy, has he got great speed. (Futch sprained his ankle last Tuesday in practice and never made an appearance)

"I thought that my quarterbacks made excellent use of the draw play.

When Norman Snead moved the Deacons deep into Carolina territory with five minutes gone in the second quarter, it marked the first time in a succession of twelve quarters that an opponent had penetrated beyond the Carolina 20.

"Not Much You Can Say"

Upstairs in the Carolina field house reporters continued to shoot the questions at Amen. "Listen fellows, the man you want to talk is Tatum. When you lose there isn't much you can say, is there?"

"I will say this, though. I heard that Carolina's total yardage was something like 480 yards. That amazes me." What did we have? Was it 366 yards? It must have been a great game for the spectators," Amen concluded.

It was. At least Carolina fans think so.

Duke Wins

DURHAM — (AP) — Duke, trailing 7-6, exploded for two fourth period touchdowns to defeat North Carolina State 20-13 in an Atlantic Coast Conference football game today in which most of the action was crammed into the final quarter.

Duke, outplayed the first half, turned a recovered fumble into a early fourth period score and then added two points on a pass from quarterback Bob Brodhead to end Doug Padgett to go ahead 14-7. The score came on a 10-yard aerial from halfback George Dutrow to halfback Wray Carlton.

Underdog State, showing surprising strength, quickly struck for a touchdown on a 53-yard pass play from halfback Ken Trowbridge to end Bob Pepe. A pass attempt for two extra points was no good.

But the action wasn't over. The Blue Devils took the kickoff and drove 59 yards for a score with Dutrow diving over from the two.

Levin Appointed Adviser To Student Audit Board

The Student Audit Board approved the selection of Richard I. Levin, instuctor in the School of Business Administration, as its faculty adviser, subject to the approval of Chancellor William Aycock.

The approval was made at the Board's meeting yesterday in the Woodhouse Conference Room. According to Erwin Fuller, Board secretary, Dr. Harold Langenderfer, assistant dean of the Business School and the present adviser, will be working with Levin.

Approval was made also for a salary increase of 10 dollars per month for Jesse Dedmond, auditor for the Student Activities Fund. Fuller said the increase was given "because of his high caliber work and successful financial operation of the Student Activity Funds office."

Similar increases were approved for other office personnel.

The secretary reported that the Board "discussed the formalation of policy regarding its relation with office employes." Because no overtime is paid, compensatory leave will be given respectively for the number of hours that an employee works beyond his schedule.

The Board reiterated its authority on pay rate, promotion and job classification for employees of student groups.

Fuller indicated that the agenda for the next Board meeting will center around discussion of another item of policy: employe leave because of vacation, sickness or any other reason.

Long range work on manuals for organization and fraternity treasures is planned.

During the week the Board will send a letter to student organizations not yet using the Student Activities Fund office for banking and accounting. In this letter the Board argues hat the office "could well save your organization considerable time, concern, and possibly money." The office presently handles the accounts of 55 campus groups.

Annual Co-Rec Carnival Being Held This Evening

By JERRY GARRISON

Through the combined efforts of the Women's Athletic Association and the Intramural Office, the annual Co-Rec Carnival will be held tonight at 7 in Woollen Gym.

The teams, composed of five members each, have been paired off in groups of ten people. Five of these will represent the women's organizations on the campus and the other five will represent the men.

These teams have been placed into four major groups with ten teams in each group. This will give some idea of the number of individuals that are participating in the Carnival.

The relays include block exchange relay, which is exchanging wooden blocks from one box to another; paper cup relay, which is running with a paper cup on top of the head; jump rope relay, which is circling a chair jumping a rope; and finally the potato spear relay where a potato has to be transferred from one box to another by means of a fork.

The third major event of the Carnival will be the carnival games. These include worm race, dart retrieve, boxing glove crip shot, bean bag toss, hula hoop, baseball game, shuffle bowl, bag burst, and bean hula.

To help with the officiating of the Carnival, the Intramural Department will have over 40 officials.

The Intramural Department predicts the Co-Rec Carnival will be the biggest and the best ever held.

Auditions For 'Angel' Are Today

Professor Harry E. Davis, of the department of dramatic art, has announced tryouts for his forthcoming production of "Look Homeward, Angel."

Tryouts will be held today at 4:00 and 7:00 p.m. in Memorial Hall. The play has roles for ten men and nine women.

The first off-Broadway production of this Pulitzer Prize and Critics Award play is made possible by special permission of Kermit Bloomgarden, the New York producer; Ketti Frings, the playwright; and Edward C. Aswell, administrator of the Wolfe Estate.

All residents of the Chapel Hill area have been invited to tryouts.

Copies of the script are available in the Reserve Reading Room of the University Library.

Third Football Contest Won By Carrington

The winner of this week's Merchants' Football Contest for the second time is Ken Carrington. Carrington correctly guessed 8 out of 10 games.

This is the third in a series of contests sponsored by the merchants of Chapel Hill.

November 18 Set As Date For Elections

The annual fall elections for Legislature seats, class officers and vacancies on the three highest judicial bodies will be held Nov. 18, according to Bob Furtado, Elections Board chairman.

In Student Legislature 25 seats are open. The University Party and Student Party this week are completing nominations for Legislature candidates, as well as for class officers.

Nine members of the Men's and Women's Honor councils and Student Council will be elected this fall. There are three vacancies in both Men's and Women's Honor councils and three vacancies, two juniors and one sophomore, in the Student Council.

Interviews for the three council's candidates are being conducted by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board this week.

Weapons And Court Are Phi, Di Themes

Phi To Debate Weapons

The abolition of nuclear weapons will be debated by members of the Philanthropic Literary Society tonight at 8 o'clock in Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East.

The bill, if passed, would call for the General Assembly of the United Nations to be given the power to search for and seize all illegal weapons in the various nations.

Also, any nation found violating this international law would be held liable before the International Court of Justice.

Di's Topic Is Court

The Dialetic senate will debate the powers of the Supreme Court tonight at 8 p.m. in Di Hall.

The bill will call for limitations of the court's power and with respect to the right of review of cases in lower courts and will be critical of the court's reversal of previous decisions in earlier cases.

Coming on the heels of controversy generated by the segregation decision and the cases involving alleged or real Communists, the bill calls for a greater adherence to the idea of separation of powers so that Congress may perform the legislative function.

Campus Political Parties' Election Slate Incomplete

SP Elects Dorm Unit Nominees

By STAN FISHER

As of presstime last night the Student Party still lacked various town districts and class officers as it moved to complete the SP nominations for campus positions open in three week distant fall election.

In the opening minutes of the meeting dorm legislative districts left open from last week's meeting were dispensed with as the following persons received Student Party endorsement.

Dorm Women II — two one year seats: Anne Lucas, Anne Ekerson; six months seat — Pat Pearson;

Dorm Men's IV — year seats: Lin Butler, Dave Matthews;

Dorm Men's V — Bill Porter;

Dorm Men's VI — year seats: Dave Jones, Bob Noble; six months; Henry McPherson, Bob Thompson;

Nominations available for town district seats:

Town Men's III — Pim Pittman, year seats;

Town Men's IV — Gary Greer, Bill Miller.

Early in the meeting, shortly after nominations began, Ed Levy, president of the campus NSA Committee, was called upon to introduce Fred Warner, national vice-president of the National Student Association.

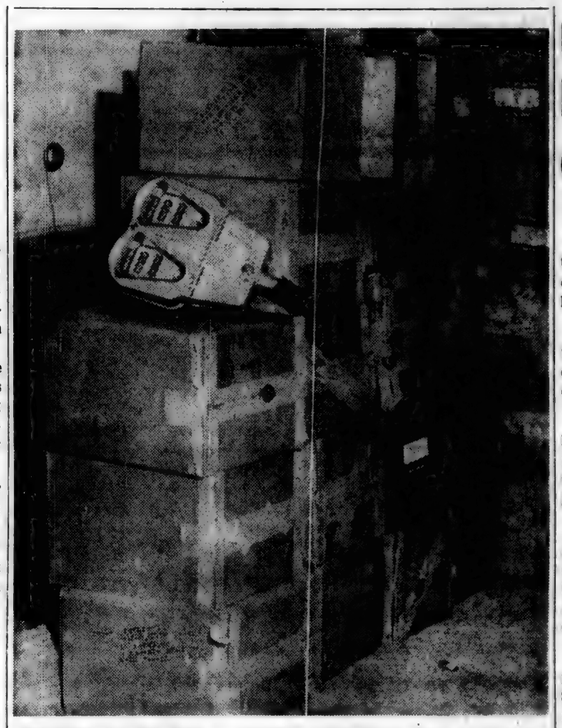
Warner, in briefly addressing the group, said he had been told that Carolina had one of the best systems of student government in the country.

"I must say what I have seen this afternoon has confirmed it," he concluded.

As the meeting moved past the 9 o'clock hour party members began slipping away. Because of the dwindling of membership, motions were made to adjourn the meeting. Ralph Cummings moved that the selection of nominees be referred to the Advisory Board. Another party member moved for the limiting of speakers on behalf of candidates to one and one-half minutes. All these motions met with defeat in the voting as those who remained betrayed signs of haste to complete the party's nominations.

As various party members protested the lack of enthusiasm shown in attempting to adjourn the meeting, Chairman Leon Holt asked for a halt to time consuming bickerings.

Further reports on Student Party action will be available tomorrow.



WAITING TO BE FED — Parking meter heads were stacked in storage last week in the Town of Chapel Hill's garage at its disposal plant property on Plant Rd. Installation is expected this week.

Parking Meters Stored, Installing Starts Soon

Metered parking in Chapel Hill is just around the corner, with installation possibly taking place this week.

Alec Andrews of Raleigh, a representative of Dual Parking Meters, Inc., the company from which the meters were ordered early in September by the town of Chapel Hill, said yesterday that "as far as I know" an installing team will be here "right away."

Posts for the meters were installed by a Georgia firm Oct. 19, and the meters themselves arrived last week and have been stored in the town's garage at its sewer treatment area on Plant Rd. pending arrival of the installers.

When the meters are finally installed, the Chapel Hill Police Department will assign Patrolman Eugene Cozart to servicing and collecting from the machines. Cozart last month attended a training program conducted at the company's factory plant in Statesville, Ga.

Chief of Police Bill Blake said yesterday he believed servicing and maintaining the meters may take Patrolman Cozart's entire time—the meters have to be serviced twice weekly—but that he didn't know whether the detailing of a meter policeman would necessitate adding a new man to the police department staff.

Currently, the local force has 20 patrolmen.

When the dual, automatically operated coin machines are installed, they will meter 405 parking spaces in the downtown area, and will give up to two hours of parking time. Dual meters will be used except when space calls for a single meter.

Show Group Sets Time For Meeting

Sound and Fury, the annual student-produced musical comedy, yesterday issued a call for students interested in working with the script committee of the show.

Wally Kuralt, director of the show, will meet with these persons at 9 a.m. Tuesday in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

Kuralt stressed that the writing of the script is intended to be a group effort and not the work of just a few. For this reason, he said, completed scripts will not be considered.

"One of the purposes of Sound and Fury is to let anyone who wants to work on any phase of the show do so," Kuralt said. "Experience is handy, but not necessary."

The meeting for Tuesday night Sound and Fury, the annual stu- wil be only for the script committee and not for acting or production.

Sound and Fury is original, including music and lyrics, and has a budget of $1,200. The production will be presented the first week in April and, according to Kuralt, may be presented at Women's College and State College.

"Though the script is now in reasonably good form, there is much left to be done," Kuralt said. "And it will probably be revised many times before it is staged."

The meeting will consist of a reading of the present script and criticism by the group.

UP Choses Freshman Candidates

By DEE DANIELS

The University Party nominated their candidates for freshman class officers in a packed Gerrard Hall last night.

The party decided to dispense with the nomination of junior class officers and dormitory legislature seat candidates until next week.

From a field of five candidates, Jey Deifell was selected as freshmen class presidential candidate. Running with him were Ray Ferris, Al Fox, Archie Allen and George Campbell.

Nominated as candidate for vice president of the freshman class was Stuart Priddy. The other two nominees included Charlie Gonzales and Hank Patterson.

In between vote counting and nominations Ed Levy introduced Fred Werner of the United States Student Association. Werner told the assembly "you have reason to be proud of your student body."

After nominations, each nominee gave a short speech enumerating his or her qualifications. While the nominees left the room, a speaker for each urged the selection of his nominee and listed qualifications further.

As party members and guests began sifting out, there was little opposition to the suggestion by Lawing that junior class officer candidates be selected next week.

A motion was then voiced to chose the dormitory legislature seats at this time as well.

With that, the meeting was adjourned.

BENNETT DEFENDS POSITION

Extinguisher Shortage Under Study

By CHUCK FLINNER

J. S. Bennett, director of operations, last weekend defended his position on the lack of fire extinguishers in the dormitories.

The lack of this fundamental fire-fighting equipment was brought to the attention of the campus recently when fires broke out at Spencer and Alexander dormitories.

But even before these two fires occurred, Bennett had written a letter to the chief fire marshall's office in Raleigh, requesting information and recommendations. The chief fire marshall is responsible for fire prevention and protection in all state owned buildings.

As yet, Bennett has not received a reply from the fire marshall. The information and recommendations he is seeking concerns: whether the fire fighting apparatus was necessary in non-fireproof buildings and which type should be used. In the letter Bennett pointed out that the extinguishers had been stolen and disappeared.

Bennett's problem was "what is best to do?" He said requirements were not what he was interested in, but what was best was the important matter. The office of the chief fire marshal inspects the fire facilities each year but had not indicated the facilities were inadequate.

Bennett said that he was not aware that most extinguishers in the dorms had not been checked in two years. When brought to his attention he said, "That is the fault however, that the inspectors from of our own office." He pointed out, however, that the inspectors from the the state office had not indicated the failure to check the extinguishers.

A cursory check of 10 dorms revealed that five lacked fire extinguishers. The other five checked had two extinguishers at most. Graham, Stacey, Alexander, Joyner and Lewis have none, while Manly and Everrett have two each. Aycock, Grimes and Mangum have one each. Only one of the extinguishers has been checked since 1956. Many have not been checked since 1955.

The Chapel Hill fire department indicated it was advisable to have a fire extinguisher within 100 feet of everyone. The location depended on the type of fire probable. The soda and acid type was recommended for the dormitories. Extinguishers should be checked each year, according to Chapel Hill Fire Chief J. S. Boone.

"Roughly 85 per cent of the calls to the fire department could be avoided if fire extinguishers were available," said one local fire fighter.

The lack of fire-fighting apparatus in the dormitories was brought to light as a result of two recent dorm fires caused by homecoming displays. It was believed that fires in Spencer and Alexander could have been brought safely under control with the use of fire extinguishers.

Fire extinguishers reduce the rate of fire insurance in most cases but the state carries its own insurance on its buildings. Sprinkler systems reduce the insurance rate considerably.

Bennett wants used the water-filled type extinguisher. He said the water type would probably handle most normal dorm fires and could easily be checked and refilled. The water type apparatus would not damage walls and paint if misused, he pointed out. Some of the soda and acid type had been mis-

Education

The basic fallacy at the University and in higher education in general is the assumption of self stimulation of the student on the part of the administration and faculty.

The assumption is basically that students want to learn and that the learning procedure is interesting to them. It just isn't so.

The students have come up from high schools which have not awakened them to knowledge and from grammar schools which have awakened them still less.

However, whatever the fault may be, students come to college without having a perspective wider than the home town, or if one is lucky, the country.

There is no question that the best place to attack this problem is on the lower level, but this does not mean that teachers in higher education should abdicate entirely their responsibility in this area of stimulation. Once a teacher abdicates, he is no longer a teacher, for mere knowledge of the material in a course does not make a person a teacher.

The problem is what to do about the many students, indeed the vast majority, who do not think, who have never thought, and who frankly are not very interested.

There is a school of thought that says that these should be cleared out of the system, but before very long the illiteracy rate in America would be staggering.

Indeed the only thing one can do is deal with the problems as it is. The object of education is to breed a thinking individual and to give him the tools in the form of facts with which he can think.

The problem is simply how to make this process so palatable as to be interesting, even to the point of developing a ravenous thirst for knowledge.

One thing is clear. It cannot be accomplished by just handing out the facts and expecting students to be interested in the facts being handed out. They are at the present time interested only in that the retention of those facts over a period of three or four weeks may give them a satisafctory grade. This is clearly not enough.

The student must be awakened. Negatively the picture must be clear by now, but positively in respect to what can be done, the picture is by no means so clear.

The widest latitude of freedom must be given, but also within the idea of freedom there also must be some positive stimulation. This relates in the classroom to the method of teaching, to the use of examinations, to the requirements for attendance, to the use of term papers and other creative pieces, to the amount of seminar facilities, and to the factor of graduate student teaching in the basic courses.

Outside of the classroom there is a crying need for development of facilities with the student in mind. Academic buildings are wonderful, but when students are not interested in academic affairs, then these buildings will not be used. The activities of the campus must be channeled into providing a greater awareness of the world of ideas, so that a thinking populace may bedeveloped.

It is impossible in the short space of one editorial to point out in detail all the needs to build an inquiring student community, but the need is there, and there are many areas currently not looked at that bear inspection. Proposals more concrete will be discussed later.

To breed a thinking populace out of a reacting mass will be quite a job, but the job must be done.

This is one of the most improbable movies ever made.

It features three unbelievably precocious children who make the kind of statements which only Hollywood children make, and for which any non-Hollywood child would be soundly thrashed and taken to an analyst.

It takes place largely on a houseboat which despite its ancient vintage, is miraculously transformed in a few yards of film into a floating split-level all- American dream house, only cuter.

And it stars Sophia Loren who, as any student of the subject will testify, is merely a figment of the masculine imagination. Needless to say, the hallucination is quite pleasant.

This leaves Cary Grant as the only real thing in the movie; a couple of generations of fans have made Mr. Grant an Established Fact.

Luckily, Mr. Grant's probable reality does not interfere with the picture's unreality, and "Houseboat" drifts along quite amusingly with no mental energy at all.

GERVAISE. Starring Maria Scholl, Francois Perier. At the Varsity Theater through tonight (Tuesday).

"Gervaise" is a great movie, which is to say that it is a very rare and precious thing. This is not to say, however, that "Gervaise" is a pleasant picture: anyone looking for enjoyment in the usual sense might as well wait for "Houseboat," reviewed above. "Gervaise" is the film version of Emil Zola's "L'Assommoir," one of the central and most successful novels of the Rougon-Maquart series, in which Zola set about to demonstrate his conviction that heredity and environment are the absolute determinants of human fate.

In this movie version, heredity is not emphasized as a cause of depravity in order to present the movie as a work complete in itself. Zola's twenty book series, in which "L'Assommoir" plays a central part, is the story of one family, each member of which is tainted by his parentage. In all but this aspect, however, "Gervaise" remains true to its source, retaining the depressing setting of Paris slums during the Second Empire and the unrelieved pessimism which marks all "naturalism."

Obviously, then, "Gervaise" is not a pretty picture. Moreover, it illustrates a doctrine which, popular in the last century, has since been repudiated. Such pessimistic determinism refuses to consider the human reason and will as having any bearing on human destiny, is derived from a misunderstanding of Mendelian theories and an invalid application of the scientific method. Nevertheless, the tragic implications of the "naturalist" doctrine are not altogether invalid, and our modern refusal to consider them attests not so much to their invalidity as to our own insensitivity.

In Zola's series, Gervaise is the daughter of a couple of drunkards and the grand-daughter of another. In the movie, we are ignorant of this, seeing her for the first time after she has come to Paris and borne two illegitimate children. (One of these is Etienne, the hero of "Germinal," another book in the series.)

When her lover leaves her, Gervaise marries a tinsmith named Coupeau and bears him a child (Nana, whose career as a prostitute is portrayed in the famous book of the same name). Coupeau falls from a rooftop, and his confinement drains all the savings with which Gervaise had intended to open a laundery of her own.

The money is borrowed from a friend, however, and Gervaise is in business. Things are going well for her until Coupeau, now fully recovered, begins to drink up all the profits. In addition, he invites Gervaise's former lover, who has returned to the neighborhood, to live with them.

As circumstances become even more unbearable, and Coupeau deteriorates even further, Gervaise is drawn into resuming her long dead affair with her former lover. The childen witness their mother's conduct, and she loses their love which until now has been her sole solace. Etienne, her firstborn, leaves to meet his own cruel fate.

Finally, in a fit of delirium tremens, Coupeau wrecks the laundry which he has already bankrupted, and is taken away to the asylum where he dies.

Gervaise at last succombs to the alcoholism which is, in Zola's view, her inheritance, and Nana, neglected, still a young child, begins her life of depravity.

The movie has retained all this, and the vital scenes of the book, but has successfully excised all of the excess material which Zola included in the book in an attempt to be scientific in his observation. Rene Clement has directed the taut script beautifully, with an unfailing poignancy and immediacy: the result is a film without any noticable weaknesses, excellently performed throughout, and with staggering impact.

Maria Schell, who plays the title role, may well be the most beautiful woman in film history (the older generation may possibly forgive this violation of the Garbo Myth), and one of its finest actresses as well. Her portrayal of Gervaise is perfect — everything that it could possibly be. (Those objecting to such unqualified praise have only to see the movie to be forced to agree.)

The rest of the cast is almost as excellent: the film is excellent in all its aspects, and the sum of its virtues is greatness.

On Humane Societies

Sidney Dakar

Recently I saw where an old man wanted to leave a large sum of money to care for homeless dogs. This at first seems to imply that this man has a noble heart. But, does he really? Is it more noble to help dogs than people? Indeed, it seems ignoble to help dogs before helping people. The thought of a humane society trying to get a court injunction to prevent boys from sending rats up in a small rocket comes to my mind. A howl was heard from hundreds of humane socities around the world when the Russians sent a dog up in a rocket. I didn't hear anyone say the dog howled.

At first thought all of these actions may seem humane, but on second thought they seem to be an insult to the starving people who cover this globe. Of course I don't go around kicking helpless dogs. I enjoy pets, but I try to keep a proper perspective.

I can think of nothing more ridiculous than trying to protect rats. Rats are a plague to mankind. These disease carrying rodents have caused untold death to humans in the past and continue to do so. It would be far better if all rats were sent into outer space.

These humane socities did not, or at least I did not hear hem, raise their voices when the Russians were slaughtering their fellowmen in Hungary. I didn't hear anything from them when the French murdered and maimed helpless women and children recently in an air attack in Tunisia. Why don't these humane societies use their time and resources to do something constructive for the human race? They don't seem to have any sleepless nights thinking of the starving disease ridden orphans in Korea, Indo-China and other parts of the world.

It is time we organized more humane societies for humans. Missery is all around us. Our fellow humans in all parts of the world are suffering every day. Millions of people go to bed hungry every night. Indeed, many do not even have a bed. Not many Americans know the feeling of perpetual hungar.

Humane societies are only found in parts of th world where people have time to waste after being well-fed and sheltered. If we have any free time, it should be used to ease some of the many burdens of our fellow creatures. These poor people are to be reckoned with in the years ahead. Revolutions will drasticly alter societies that spend much of their time in wasteful pursuits. The Middle East is only one of the many examples in the world where this very thing is being saliently shown to us.

"Who's Going To Leash Or Unleash Whom?"

Toward A Better Understanding

Gottfriend O. Long

Along with the other Western countries which have a high standard of living, the United States has contributed substantially to the economic and technical development of the so-called underdeveloped countries. Returns, however, have not been commensurate with the money and effort which have been expended.

Today, in spite of U.N., I.C.A. and similar efforts, sixty per cent of the world's population still get less than twenty-two hundred calories a day. As Josue De Castro puts it, "These people are living in a state of almost chronic fast and are being consumed in a kind of autodestruction." And if our intention was to win the good will of non-Western peoples, along with raising their substandard level of living, we have failed in both respects. It may even be said that Western, and particularly American, popularity has reached a new low in most of the non-Western world.

Some of the reasons for this unpopularity are of course beyond our control. They may be related to adverse propaganda, to envy of our high level of living and to the historical fact of colonialism, with its train of unforgotten injustices and present-day problems. At best, the transition from a dependent pre-industrial status to that of a free industrialized nation is fraught with difficulites. But there are factors over which we do have control, and which are not directly related to dollar-aid abroad. These are our own attitudes and methods of approaching the problem.

We can and we must give our help when so-called underdeveloped countries ask for aid. But our help will be effective only if it is based on a real understanding of these people. We must be able to communicate with them. This does not merely involve language skills (though these are very important indeed), but, even more importantly, the need to understand the messages sent to us in their proper cultural context.

Underlying much of our dealings with peoples from the underdeveloped countries are some fallacious assumptions about ourselves and others. We long ago progressed beyond the problem of how to feed ourselves, and have developed a highly advanced technology, variously ascribed to the type of government we have, to our values in regard to work, to our morals and our thrift, and so on. We feel that our civilization is superior to those where the material standard of living is lower or less valued than our own. We proceed on the assumption that all people want the same things we want and should therefore imitate our way of life. Many, of course, do try to imitate our technological know-how. But we cannot understand why they do not also want our other values, spiritual, moral, esthetic, political and social.

Thus we feel hurt or even outraged when the recipients of our aid refuse our values while taking our technology. For instance, with our characteristic American attitudes toward work and success, we cannot understand why people in an underdeveloped country, faced by chronic food shortage, do not avail themselves of farm lands newly created by a much-needed dam. The fact that these peope have been migratory herders for centuries makes necessary a deep understanding of their traditions before we can communicate to them the potential value of such a move. Too often our efforts have resulted in misunderstandings, frustrations and threats on our part of withdrawal of aid.

We tend to assume sometimes that the people of so-called "backward" lands are hardly capable of achieving a modern civilized status. It is a case in point that the American Indian was only recently given the full franchise theoretically guaranteed through the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, because of belief that the Indian was not capable of responsible citizenship. Elsewhere, too, the native has often been kept from assuming political responsibilities or taking on supervisory posts, because he was believed to be unable to cope with the complexities of modern life.

Another fallacy that plagues our approach to other peoples is the opposite of this. It assumes that "human nature is pretty much the same the world over," and therefore "people ought to change since they can do so easily if they want to." Although all men have the same basic needs, the ways in which these needs are met by different peoples vary enormously. Thus medical help much needed by Moslem people may be "illogically" restricted to only the male population because the medical personnel are all men, forbidden to see the Moslem women.

Still another fallacy, not unrelated to the first, suggests that primitive and less civilized peoples are incapable of change. This view, though recognizing the diversity of life-ways of different peoples, assumes that primitive cultures are static.

The coed visiting agreement for the dormitories should go a long way to help in improving the spirit and morale of the dorm men.

When this agreement is implemented (things seem to be moving fairly rapidly towards this goal), the dorm residents will have some place to take their date other than a public establishment.

This consideration is a very important one. If after a movie the night is still young, it is customary to go somewhere before taking your date in.

If you must go to a public establishment, then there is less money to spend for entertainment; therefore, fewer dates.

The new agreement breaks much tradition. The dorm men will no longer live quite so austerely. There is nothing like a few girls (in the social room, of course) to enliven the individual's interest in his appearance and the place in which he lives.

The open social rooms should encourage double-dating. If people are able to get together in a social effort, then it is much more easier for them to work jointly on other matters.

The dorms will be able to provide one of the advantages of a fraternity—a semi-private place to be with your date. The dormitories should become more of a social organization.

If dorm parties are held in the social room, they should certainly be better attended than those given in the past usually were. The parties could be relatively inexpensive and consequently more frequent.

Before this time, the dorm men have not had a sufficient outlet for their social activities. Because this phase of their life was not developed, the fraternity men gained a pyschological edge in the social world.

However, this edge apparently extended to other fields and had a depressing effect in some cases on the activities of the men of the dormitories.

Now with the new agreement, things should change for the better. Activitiy in one field should encourage it in another. Participation of dorm men should increase.

With this new privilege comes an added responsibility. As the dorms are state-owned property, the University will be placed in a very bad light with the rest of the state should anything go amiss.

It will take only one careless act to get the University much adverse publicity (always bad, especially in a year when the State Legislature is considering the school's budget). It will take only one selfish person to destroy what promises to be a revolutionary improvement in dorm life.

If this new responsibility is accepted maturely, dorm life should be improved greatly.

Letter From Olympus

There is a chief Warrent Officer in Quantico, Virginia, who observed of civilian life that it is just a throng of people, always milling. Thousands of people milling, just milling around, with no one in charge. The innacle of this observation is a fraternity party.

Picture people rocking and rolling in a smaoke-filled, beer-smelling room, imagine a horizontal freshman in an obscure corner, swilling his last draft of Michelob, mentally voting twenty votes for Miss Rheingold. Perceive the smoking choking crowded room, and enlist in the navy, where at least there is room to roller skate. That Warrent Officer definitely has something there.

But for those who prefer rock and roll parties to roller skating and chess tournaments, we can only suggest organizing a group of people in a room too small to hold them comfortably, and the following:

Beat with foot on floor in a moderately slow, unwavering rhythm. Using hands, beat on table three beats to every beat on floor. Sing, off key perferably, these words: Honey, ah ain't comin' out! Ah ain't comin' out! Ah'm stayin' behind this chair!

If these directions are followed, not only will one fraternity party have been attended, but all of them. The only difference between them is the date on which they are thrown. —C.L.

On Nixon

Russell Eisenman

Just what kind of man is Richard M. Nixon? The current vice-president has made an unusual about face in attempting to fool the American citizens. Now billed as a liberal, this is the same Nixon who supported Senator McCarthy.

Richard Nixon is the man who, in campaigning during the 1952 election, told the public that Adlai Stevenson had testified as a character witness for Alger Hiss, convicted perjurer. This is mud slinging. With all his legal experience Nixon knew that Stevenson was doing his duty when he testified that, to his knowledge, Hiss was a man of high character. To show how meaningless this argument was, Republican Secretary of State John Foster Dulles also was one of Hiss' character witnesses.

Nixon's career is one of fanaticism. As a Senator he introduced a bill to outlaw the Communist Party in the United States. Even if you ignore the question of whether a party per se should be outlawed, it was a bad bill. F. B. I. head J. Edgar Hoover opposed the bill saying it wouldn't help the F. B. I, indeed it would hurt them since it would drive American Communist underground. The bill did not become a law, but Nixon stands indicted as the man who led the fight for its passage.

The more you look into the career of Richard M. Nixon the more sordid the picture becomes. He has worked against the people to such a great extent that the frequently used excuse that it's just politics is no good. As I see it Richard M. Nixon is not a liberal. He is a fanatical man of the Senator McCarthy school who puts his personal career ahead of the interest of our country.

Letters

Dear Mr. Malone:

Before you establish yourself in the position of official spokesman for, and authority on Anglican Theology and Catholic Teaching, do you not think it would be a good idea to organize the heirarchy and lowerarchy within your Church along some consistent lines of theology? Are you happy also that what you say is the doctrine of the Episcopal Church is not upheld by large numbers, if not the majority of the laity and clergy of the Episcopal Church? Are you happy that some Episcopal Bishops, including the Episcopal Bishop of Virginia, have openly invited members of Christian Churches outside the so called Catholic Faiths to partake of communion in the Episcopal Church? And what about the other six Sacraments of the Church—or does the Church have only two Sacraments?

Could these be the inroads of some new heresy in the Episcopal Church, or in fact is it that from its very obscure beginnings this unique "branch of the Catholic Church" has served mostly as a battleground for armies of confused, misinformed members, led by Frustrated Catholics and High Class Protestants?

The answers of Episcopalians to these questions are the subject of many phamplets and books—and they run the full gamut. While some try to answer these questions one way or the other, there are some who say that these are not "proper questions." Others say that the Episcopal Church has a place for everybody—decide what you believe and get with that segment of the Episcopal Church.

In your answers to these questions, Mr. Malone, will there be found that unmistakabble ring of truth that will rally thinking Christians to the fore? In the meantime the Roman Catholics are working and growing in the South. The Methodists and Fresbyterians are building new colleges and homes for the aged. The Episcopalians are fighting with each other.

What, Mr. Malone, is the answer?

Fred Hurlburt

Editor:

I fully agree with the decision of the Di concerning the abolition of the campus code. It is much too vague to function on a campus this size, although if it were not, it is an unnecessary infringement on the rights of the individual. A brief reminder to the student during orientation to consider his responsibility to the university would be sufficient.

There are usually consequences, either good or bad to a person whose behavior deviates too markedly from the standards of the majority. Moral behavior must stem from thought, experience, and personal attitude on the subject or it is not valid. It cannot be handed down as an ultimatum by any group.

East Carolina NSA Meet Attended By Cummings

Using Student Government resources to Improve the Campus Intellectual Climate" was the theme of the regional NSA conference at East Carolina College last weekend, according to Ralph Cummings, student body vice president, who attended the seminar.

Schools from Virginia, South Carolina and North Carolina were represented.

Working on the premise that most college campuses have a predominately social, rather than academic, atmosphere, the seminar consisted of "thought sessions" in which student leaders and academic deans attempted to exchange ideas concerning the need for a more intellectual climate.

Questions which the representatives attempted to answer included: Does a campus climate really exist? What is the climate reflected in the classrooms and the attitude of students toward their education? How is the climate reflected in bull sessions? What is the relationship between student attitudes on your campus and the college's stated educational goals? Who sets the prevailing attitudes at your college?

Cummings said the general belief seemed to be that this "social" climate prevailed in, as well as out, of the classroom. In too many classes information is "spoon fed" to students and they are expected to simply parrot it back on a quiz with little or no thought involved in the process.

This feeling is not limited to students alone. Several books concerning this were recommended to the conference representatives. Quotations from them are all related to the same theme.

Cummings said that he brought back "several ideas," but did not wish to discuss them until he had presented them to the administration.

Also appearing for the fall German's will be the Gladiolas, rock and roll group, and Bob McFadden, comedian.

A new policy for the German's dance, as announced by the club, is informal dress. Previously, girls had been required to wear evening dresses.

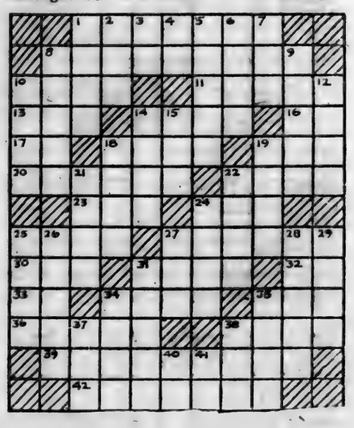
Yesterday's Answer



John Schroeder Is Athlete Of Week

In the closing moments of the first half last Saturday Jack Cummings drifted back to pass, frantically looking for a receiver as the Wake linemen bore in. Finally, at the last minute, he threw it. A long desperation pass down the field thrown from the Carolina 49, and John Schroeder grabbed it on a spectacular catch, then raced the remaining distance for Carolina's first touchdown. Schroeder eluded Deac Ken Farrell with the skill of a veteran halfback at the 10, then went in to score unmolested.

This play put the Deacs in a hole, a very big hole. After leading 6-0 on this touchdown, the Tar Heels were never headed, and went into the dressing room at intermission with a big psychological advantage. The man responsible, John Schroeder, is Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week.

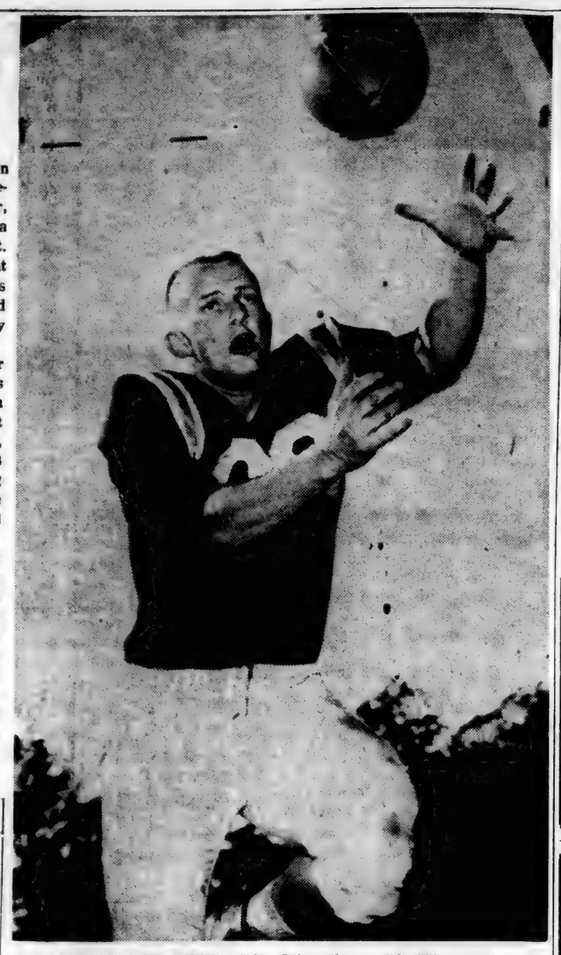
Demon On Defense

Schroeder also was a demon on defense all afternoon, often crashing through to smear would-be passers Charlie Carpenter and Norman Snead for losses. Just at the beginning of the second quarter, Schroeder racked up Snead for a 13-yard loss at a strategic point. The Deacs had had 2nd and 2 at the Carolina 43, but after John's great defensive move it was 3rd and 15 from their own 43. They were forced to punt.

Later on in the quarter, Schroeder pulled two of these defensive gems in a row. With 2nd and 15 John rushed Snead so hard he couldn't hit his receiver. With 3rd and 15, Schroeder smeared the Deacon QB for an 8-yard loss on a shoe-string tackle. Snead was so furious he beat the ball against the ground after that one.

Schroeder was ineligible for play last season, having just returned from the service. He started the year as second unit end after showing up well in spring practice. John moved up to the first unit when Don Kemper was injured and has held on to that position.

John Schroeder is a 23-yard old 6-3 203-pounder from Alexandria, Virginia.



ATHLETE OF THE WEEK—John Schroeder, a 6-3, 203 pound sophomore end from Alexandria, Va., is Daily Tar Heel Athlete Of The Week. Schroeder was selected for his outstanding play last Saturday against Wake Forest.

Booters At Pfeiffer Today

By JIM PURKS

MISENHEIMER — Anxious to return to the victory trail, the varsity soccer team will face Pfeiffer College today in another non-conference contest.

Still reeling from the 3-2 defeat handed them last week by the Washington & Lee Generals, the Tar Heels will play Pfeiffer at 3 p.m. in Misenheimer.

Leading the Carolina squad on offense will be scoring ace Mike Thompson at center forward. Thompson scored both goals against Washington & Lee, and all three goals in Carolina's 3-2 conference victory iver Virginia.

Today's game will mark the first meeting between the two teams. Pfeiffer adopted soccer only a little over a year ago. Last year's game with Pfeiffer was called off due to the seige of flu which had hit both schools.

Carolina will have a 2-1 record going into today's contest, with the two victories being registered over Lynchburg College and Virginia.

Afer the Pfeiffer game, Coach Marvin Allen's squad will have a week to prepare itself for a home contest with always-tough Roanoke College.

Soccer is the main sport at Roanoke, and scholarships are awarded there for soccer players. Carolina has not played Roanoke in the last two years. Three years ago, a strong Roanoke eleven defeated Coach Allen's team by a 3-2 count.

Following the Roanoke game, the Tar Heels are scheduled to meet N. C. State Nov. 7 in an important conference game at Chapel Hill. The Wolfpack defeated Carolina last year in Raleigh, 2-1.

Goff Returns

Halfback Daley Goff rejoined the Carolina football team Monday after missing the first six games of the season with a sprained knee suffered in pre-season workouts.

The availability of Goff, the Tar Heels' leading ground gainer of 1957, means that coach Jim Tatum's team, winner of its last four contests, will be at full strength for the first time this season.

Claims By Brooks To Affect Election?

JOHN BROOKS
reapportionment unconstitutional?

Brooks' complaint centered on the reapportionment of district representatives in Legislature, which was passed last Thursday by Legislature.

OTHER FACTORS

Brooks yesterday hinted at the unconstitutionality of the reapportionment passed by Legislature, saying, "Legislature was not apportioned strictly according to population, but other factors entered in."

These "other factors" included such things as district participation in elections, Brooks said.

Brooks pointed out that the Student Constitution calls for a Legislature apportioned according to population (Article I of the Constitution).

If the Student Council decides to investigate his claims, this body has the jurisdiction to make the apportionment comply to Student Constitution regulations, Brooks said.

TOWN MEN'S II

As an example of inaccurate reapportionment, Brooks pointed to Town Men's District II, whose representation has been increased from two to five legislators. Town Men's II includes around 450 students. On the other hand, in Town Men's IV, Brooks said only four seats have been assigned to represent the 1,300 students in this district.

If Brooks' suggestions are acted upon, the Legislature seats could be juggled before the Nov. 18 student elections.

Annual Picnic For Sororities Will Be Today

Durham To Speak To YDC

Carl T. Durham, 6th district representative, will speak at a meeting of the Young Democratic Club tonight at 7:30 in the courtroom of the Law Building.

Congressman Durham is a native of Orange County and a graduate of the UNC School of Pharmacy.

At present he is vice chairman of the joint Committee on Atomic Energy and third ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee. For 20 years he has represented the 6th district in Congress and is up for re-election next Tuesday.

Elections for the positions of vice president and members of the executive committee will be held at a short business session of the YDC.

Inexpensive Foreign Tours Are Available

Ed Levy, National Student Association coordinator, Tuesday said a subsidiary of USNSA was providing a low cost foreign travel program to give students an opportunity to travel abroad.

He said Educational Travel Inc. was able to offer inexpensive foreign tours because they cooperate with European Student Union programs. E.T.I. is a non-profit organization.

"General Intefest tours cover anything from three to eight countries during the summer," added Levy.

Levy said people interested in the tours should talk to N.S.A. campus director Pete Litman at his office in Graham Memorial.

Meeting Site Changed

The Assembly-Smoker for nearly 150 part-time UNC instructors will be held in the Carolina Inn ballroom tonight at 8 o'clock.

The place for the event has been changed from the Knapp Building, which had been previously announced.

Rev. Crane First Forum Speaker Here

Speaker on the Carolina Forum being held here Friday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall will be the Rev. Henry Hitt Crane, Methodist minister of Detroit, Mich.

His public address is sponsored by the Carolina Forum, official agency ofthe UNC student government which provides speakers in government, labor, industry and education.

The subject of the Rev. Mr. Crane's speech, according to Robert B. Foushee, chairman of the Carolina Forum, will be "The Fate We Face."

Pointing out three major alternatives confronting the American people and discussing the role that religion should play in the face of the situation are among the topics of his speech.

DULLES ROULETTE

Statements about "the insanity of the present nuclear armament race and the suicidal nature of our brinkmanship policy that inevitably involves the constant loading of more and more bullets into the chambers of Mr. Dulles' roulette revolver" have previously been made by the Rev. Crane.

Ada President Hits Southern Strategy

By DEE DANIELS

"The major factor behind the attacks on the Supreme Court are those who believe in segregation to the end," stated Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., vice chairman o fthe Americans for Democratic Action, last night in the second of the 1958-59 Heck Lecture Series in Manning Hall.

In speaking of the Southern politicians' methods of "winning," Rauh said that since direct attack on the Court was impossible they resorted to two other measures. These were (1) keep Congress from endorsing segregation and (2) have Congress undermine the court in other areas.

He feels they have succeeded well in their attempts to resist the Court.

But "If you have a right to go to court, to get integrated schools, you have a right to be free from harassment because of going to court," Rauh believes.

Due to the mixed feelings in the South, he thinks the Supreme Court is going to call a halt to investigative powers for stopping integration.

Concerning the accusations stating the Court is radical, he says, "We have been sold a bill of goods in this country that this is a radical Court."

The "hottest water" for the Supreme Court has been their segregation decisions. They delayed the issue as much as possible, because they recognized the dislocation it would cause in the country.

Rauh says the only way to end such attacks on the Court will be if Congress says we support "the principle of desegregated schools in America and do anything to carry it out."

LOYALTY OATH REQUIRED

Godfrey Explains Teacher Selection

By JAMES HOLMES

University faculty, the Personnel Office indicates, are currently required to sign an oath of loyalty and to declare any affiliation with the Communist Party.

A UNC Board of Trustees resolution, now in effect, states in part: ". . . no official, teacher, or other employee (who is a citizen of the United States) shall be considered an employee of the University of North Carolina or receive payment of any services rendered unless, or until, he or she has taken the oath as specified in Sections 3193 and 3194 of the Consolidated Statutes of North Carolina."

This required "Oath of Allegiance," adopted June 7, 1941, requires all above mentoned personnel to pledge: 'I, _____, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States; so help me God."

Continuing with paragraph two: "I, _____, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the State of North Carolina, and to the constitutional powers and authorities which are or may be established for the government thereof; and that I will endeavor to support, maintain and defend the constitution of said state, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, to the best of my knowledge and ability: so help me God."

REQUIRED

In view of recent national clamor surrounding such oaths required by various schools Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty, said, "This resolution is required by an agency higher than the University," the Board of Trustees."

Dean Godfrey did not elaborate because of a previous appointment he had.

Besides signing this "Oath of Allegiance" each applicant for faculty appointment must answer the following categorical questions:

(1) Are you now, or have you been at any time in the past, a member of or in anywise affiliated with either the Communist Party or with any organization or association controlled to your knowledge by Communists?

(2) If so, please explain fully.

OUTLINES METHOD

Dean Godfrey outlined the usual method of obtaining a new faculty

Co-Rec Relay Carnival Is Great Success

By JERRY GARRISON

Over 400 students participated in last night's Co-Rec Carnival. Those who witnessed the event saw one of the most successful carnivals in its history.

The evening began with the relay events beginning with the block exchange and followed by the paper cup relay and the jump rope relay in that order. Two teams from each division went into the semi-finals of each relay. After the three relays had been run, a fourth relay was to decide the champion of the relay division of the carnival.

The final relay event, which was the potato spear relay, was won by Pi Kappa Phi No. 1 and Alpha Gamma No. 2 The second and third places were won by Chi Phi No. 2 and Kappa Delta No. 2; Zeta Psi and McIver No. 1.

After the relay events were over the group gathered in the center of the court for the first of two drawings for door prizes. The prizes were a sport shirt and an exercise kit for the boys, and a record album and shirt for the girls. The winners of these prizes were Paul Leonard, Roy Cashin, Lyn Johnson and Jean Whiting.

The prizes in the relay events were plaques to the winning boys and girls teams and trophies to the individual winners of those teams. These awards were presented by Ray Jefferies, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs.

After the awards were presented the group broke up and went either to the sporting events or the carnival games.

Out of these games a Co-Rec champion would be crowned and also a team champion in both the girls and boys divisions. These would be decided by the total number of points collected by each team and individual.

Harper Announces Four In Running For Rhodes

Dean George Harper announced Tuesday that Curtis Bernard Gans, Donald Atlas Furtado, Robert McDonald Gray Jr. and Albert Lewis Goldsmith Jr. wil be the UNC's representatives to the State Committee for Rhodes Scholarships.

Dean Harper said, "After considering their records, personalities, self-assurance and activities; these four have the best chance. They have a good chance or they would not have been chosen to represent the University."

The UNC committee, consisting of Dean Harper, Dr. Shepherd Jones, Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson and Dean Corydon P. Spruill on a consulting basis, has sent the four nominees on to the State Committee which will meet in December.

Dr. Harper pointed out that since these students will be in competition for only two scholarships spread over an area including several states, the competition will be unusually keen.

The four UNC representatives were selected from nine applicants.

Coed Dorm Presidents Meet, Make No Decision

Women's dormitory presidents met Monday afternoon to discuss the possibility of forming a social standards committee for UNC coeds. The committee was proposed last week by ancy Adams, chairman of Women's Council.

According to Mary Montgomery, president of Alderman, the meeting was simply a discussion and no decisions were reached.

The presidents will hold another meeting Monday to discuss further Miss Adams' plan.

IDC Sees Dress Style Change

By BEN TAYLOR

The Interdormitory Council Honorary Society forsees a change in campus style of dress.

Wednesday from 11 to 4:30 p.m. the IDC Honorary Society will sponsor the sale and fitting of college blazers in the YMCA lobby.

The men's blazers are priced at $31.95 and can be bought in charcoal black, Navy blue and Carolina blue. Women's blazers range from $18.95 and up and come in white doeskin, black nad Carolina blue. The flannel blazers are manufactured and sold by one of the nation's leading college clothiers.

This year is the first time the sale has been conducted by an organization other than the IDC proper. Proceeds from this sale will go toward setting up scholarships for needy Carolina students.

The blazer sale on campus has met with only relative success for a number of years. Apparently the tradition, so firmly entrenched in campuses throughout the country, has taken a back seat to windbreakers, all sporting the University's seal in various patterns.

"There is a need for a blazer tradition on campus," blazer chairman Paul Woodard said. "A school the size and importance of Carolina is in need of some dress emblematic of the University's proud and lengthy history."

Woodard emphasized that fraternities, sororities, and various clubs can have their own insignias or crests substituted for the UNC seal if they desire.

Blazers have been adopted as group dress by the Men's Glee Club, the Monogram Club, the basketball and football teams. Other than these relatively large groups, there has been only a trinkling of the tradition of blazers found on the UNC campus in the past decades.

Then There Are Days When You Can't Win

It happened in Dr. William A. McKnight's Spanish literature class.

She came across a word she didn't know and paused a moment. A male student, also some distance away from the professor, decided to help her out. He whispered the translation, a bit too loud, however.

The coed, apparently pretending she didn't hear the whisper, maintained the pause, couldn't come up with the right word.

Dr. McKnight looked up, a half-smile on his face, and said to her, "Well, didn't you hear him? I could hear him all the way up here."

CHOOSES JOHN XXIII AS NAME

Cardinal Roncalli Is Named Successor To Pope Pius

VATICAN CITY — (AP) — Angelo Giuseppe Cardinal Roncalli, an Italian skilled in Vatican diplomacy, was elected Pope Tuesday night. He chose the name John XXIII.

The bells of St. Peter's and 500 Rome churches rang out a carol of triumph. Hundreds of thousands in St. Peter's Square roared an ovation as the Patriarch of Venice became Pope at the age of 76.

His election ended three days of intense suspense centering about a deadlocked conclave of the 51 cardinals, gathered to choose a successor to Pope Pius XII.

JOYOUS FRENZY

Disappointed in five other vigils—through 11 unsuccessful ballots in the past three days—the crowd broke into a joyous frenzy as John XXIII made his first appearance on the balcony overlooking St. Peter's Square.

They roared "Viva Il Papa!" — long live the Pope!—over and over as the new Pontiff slowly raised his arms in benediction.

The new Pontiff, Italian like his predecessors for 436 years, is regarded by Catholics as the 262nd Vicar of Christ on earth and a direct successor to St. Peter.

Some might regard John XXIII as a "transition Pope," not destined to institute any notable changes in church policy. But John XXIII, like his celebrated predecessor, has been a diplomat of many years experience.

MILITANT DEFENDER

Though his policies may prove conservative, he is expected to follow the general direction laid down in the 19 years of Pius XII's reign and to be a militant defender of the church's interests in world affairs.

The drama of the conclave's last day was the sort of spectacle Romans love. Faithfully, day after day, huge crowd had assembled in the great square to await the news. Five times before, each forenoon and evening, smoke had puffed from a little grey chimney, indicating failure, and the crowd had turned away.

But hundreds of thousands were on hand again to await the sixth signal. It came in the form of a tiny wisp of smoke. None could say for sure whether it was white, indicating a new Pope, or black, showing another failure. But there was just a little smoke. It was a favorable sign. The crowd stood stock still, with bated breath, and waited.

Searchlights were trained on that balcony door and so were the eyes of all the hundreds of thousands in the crowd. For nearly an hour they waited in an agony of suspense.

A police band in colorful cockaded hats marched toward the square playing a triumphal march. The crowd roared.

"I announce to you tidings of great joy. We have a pope," he said in Latin.

The crowd broke into a frenzy of cheering. They waved hats, banners and handkerchiefs.

'URBI ET ORBI'

Slowly, in a firm, loud and resonant voice, the new Pontiff chanted the "urbi et orbi," the traditional message of newly elevated popes to the city of Rome and the world. The crowd joined in a thunderous amen which reverberated through the vast square.

The throng remained after the new Pontiff slowly turned and reentered the Basilica and the papal flag was draped over the balcony.

Loyalty Oaths

It seems that the University of North Carolina does not take the words "academic freedom" quite as seriously as it might.

North Carolina has been reputed to be one of the most liberal colleges and universities in the nation, but despite this fact every since 1941, faculty members have been required to take loyalty oaths on their allegiance to the federal constitution and to the state constitution, except where the latter conflicts with the former.

Moreover on their application for membership on the UNC faculty, staff members must put their former organizational membership and whether they are now or ever have been a member of the Communist Party or a Communist controlled group.

It is high time the University's Board of Trustees realized that this type of restriction and this type of question is an invasion of individual privacy, and from a purely practical standpoint, it isn't helpful in ridding subversive elements.

Freedom of conscience is something is the possibility in a democracy. It is a possibility that is being strained by the University loyalty oath demands. A man does not have to accept the United States constitution article by article to be a good citizen. Indeed, even more to accept the State constitution to be a good citizen. He need not accept either to be a good teacher, and would have difficulty signing an oath if he was a person who believed in freedom of conscience and the privacy of man's thoughts.

Moreover, no communist would have the slightest qualms in singing an oath, for if subversion was his object, scruples would not matter in the slightest.

Even worse is the statement in the aplication form, which obviously sets up as a criterion of a person's teaching merit his associations now and prior. There was a time not too long ago that it was fashionable to be a member of the Communist Party, when reflected the ideas of Karl Marx and would benefit the large majority of people. Yet, this can be potentially held against him in an application form. The plain fact of the matter is that none of these criteria bears any relation to the merits of a person as a teacher.

Academic freedom has meaning. Freedom of conscience has value. Things such as lovalty oaths which tend to tarnish the meaning should be eliminated.

Fire Extinguishers

The situation concerning fire extinguishers in the dormitories is shocking. That only a handful of dorms have the means to eliminate fires is appalling.

An old cliche says something about an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and in pure dollars and cents evaluation, the lack of fire preventive devices may cost the University great amounts of money.

What is more important, however, is the human factor. The University which makes pious statements on student conduct such as drinking and takes upon itself the responsibility of a mother away from home, should think somewhat better of having no preventive measure for the sake of human life in the dormitories.

Mr. Bennett ought to awake to his responsibilities in this area. Money and the loss of fire extinguishers just do not equate.

Mostly Shades Of Gray

Norman B. Smith

I drew back with horror at the sudden realization that my uncle had two fingers missing from his right hand. I gazed fixedly, fearfully for a long time at the Red Cross handbook illustration of a person whose head was bound as is a mummy with only two eye holes visible in the swaths of bandages. Panic welled within me when my father, looking somewhat puzzled and annoyed, half dragged and half prodded me into the room where the blind man sat. These are among the most vivid of my childhood memories.

Though not so obviously manifested, this revulsion and fear of people who are somehow "different" stayed lodged in me, and all the reasoning I imposed on myself would not jar it loose.

Last month I met Bernice "Chick" Mikeal who lives downstairs. It wasn't long before I noticed that he was blind. "Chick" has been blind since birth. He sees light and notices a blur when he looks directly at a large well-lighted object, but since the visual association areas of his brain have never developed, these views of the outer world are meaningless in form and dimension to him. When he dreams, he dreams of sounds, of smells, and of feelings, but never of sights.

"Chick" comes from a family of relatively limited financial resources. None of his brothers or sisters have gone on to college. He went to the School for the Blind in Raleigh, completed two years at Appalachian College, and he is here to get a degree in Radio-TV. Later will come graduate work in religious education.

He wrestles and swims, has a single room with no one to help, travels by himself, and has now learned to go just about any place on campus without assistance. He types with amazing speed, doesn't write at all, takes and reads Braille with great facility, learns most of his lessons from tape recordings.

As is common among the blind, he has an almost infallable memory for both what he hears and what he feels with his hands. His hearing is so sensitive that the presence of trees, buildings, and other large objects are determined by echo sounds as he approaches them.

I walked into the dark room where Chick sat with Ed Edens, a blind law student, and then I shut the door. They identified me as soon as I spoke. (I notice later that I had to turn around and look before I could recognize my roommate when he addressed me on the street.)

Now it was I who had the handicap. I sat there surrounded by an impenetrable black veil, knowing I couldn't move without tripping over some silent object nor reach for anything without getting a handful of emptiness. And "Chick" talked with Ed as though nothing had changed with the closing of the door—for them there had been no change, for the world of darkness had been conquered long ago. There had been adjustments, modifications, adaptions, accustomization, and its mysteries were not more.

But something had changed for me. There was a consummation, an insighful grouping of the impressions I had gained from being with "Chick" every day; something changed dramatically in the dark room on that dark night. The last of the surpressed revulsion, and fear, and agression left me, and so did the inordinate pity. I began to think of "Chick" first as a person, only a person who had made particular behavior alterations to meet particular conditions, and just incidentally and secondarily did I think of him as being blind.

The fear, revulsion, and agression we harbor for those who are "different" are deep feelings. Sometimes they are "different" because they are blind or deaf or lame; sometimes they are "different" because their skin is not white or because their great grandfathers and grandmothers were bound in involuntary servitude; sometimes they are "different" because their God doesn't appear to be the same as our God. Because of the environmental circumstances that have attended them since the day they first began to breath, they have met situations and solved problems in ways different from those ways which we in our conceit have fixed as norms. Therefore we have developed Faubias and Eastmanias against them and we self-righteously bomb their temples.

Overweight Problem

Ken Wheeler

What is the greatest problem on this great campus? Is it lack of school spirit? Or money? Could it be drinking ? Maybe walking on the grass? After a consultation with the crystal ball of Stacy Dorm (which has failed to be incorrect in 78 decisions), I find that trouble around here is obesity. (That's fat to the layman.)

The enigma occurs, of course, in finding a working method to eliminate superfluous flesh. May I offer a few humbles suggestions certain to work:

1. Don't eat- Although this method is certain to bring about lowering of poundage, it is 99.86% fatal. Be careful. The only existing case in which the patient survived the cure was that of Sturgeous M. Quixote, class of '32, who became chief engineer of the Vanguard project.

2. Eat 21 meals (using the term loosely) a week at Lenoir Hall- If you don't believe that this suggestion will cause weight lowering, ask the man who eats there. That food poisoning does wonders for cutting scale embarrassment.

3. Diet- The overweight person should locate a prescribed diet, approved by doctors, for the easiest and quickest method of losing some of that avoirdupois. If you like, I will list the sure-fire diet devised by Mother McCorkle's in her Masterpiece of Handy Date:

Breakfast:
- One raw egg
- One egg shell (cooked if preferred)
- One small glass of milk

Lunch:
- One potato salad sandwich with pickles
- One minute glass of tea (unsweetened)

Dinner:
- One slice of lettuce

This diet does not-repeat NOT-work for freshmen or chemistry majors unless Venus is in the first quarter stage. It is reported that Myron I. Terjskly, son of bookmaker Sherman A. Terjskly, attempted the diet as a freshman and consequently lost the sight of all three eyes. For this reason, Mother McCorkle, imprisoned by authorities, devised the Venus ¾ rule to give legal leeway in the future. Also Check "The Congressional Record" for Sen. Thurmond's latest filibuster, which provides exceptional dieting rules.

4. Exercise- My friends tell me that the best way to lose weight is to touch your toes 35 times a day without bending your knees. So how can a man with 44 inch waist bend over?

After close scrutiny of the existing possibilities for dropping bulk, I would suggest that the obese grin and bear it, for tomorrow you may die.

Cultural Understanding

Gottfried O. Lang

Our tendency to moralize makes for another stumbling-block in our relations with the peoples of underdeveloped lands. The moralizer is either shocked by the lack of adherence to our kind of "ideals," or he accepts the reality of another people's behavior and goes along with it, but showing his contempt and condescension. He feels morally superior, but is willing to make "concessions" in order to get his goals accomplished.

All of these unfortunate attitudes can be corrected by a proper understanding of the concept of culture. To recognize the reality of cultural differences is to recognize that culture acts upon its bearer like spectacles, through which the wearer views the world and which modify what he sees according to the character of the lenses. The difference in the way peoples "see" things is particularly obvious in our dealings with Latin America. Although Latin Americans share with us many cultural traits common to the Western heritage, some of their attitudes differ significantly.

For instance, we tend to look at the social world with a strong egalitarian bias. We admit that we live in a class society, but we are proud of the fact that an individual can move up in the class structure. In much of Latin America, however, social relationships are much more rigid and defined along lines of dependence and submission. With us, there is a tremendous value placed upon pushing ahead, fostered by ideas of independence and freedom. In contrast, change in Latin America is not valued for its own sake, and freedom which also means responsibility may be thought undesirable. If in being free to make a choice one should make a mistake, it would not only be an error and possible loss for the individual, but one which would also bring loss of status to an entire family. The family, which includes many relatives, is very important to the Latin American, and disgrace to the family is a greater crime than failing to get ahead. We, of course, separate our public life and our family life.

Failure to see that social class is relatively immutable in many sectors of Latin American society may mean that the Yankee innovator, with his egalitarian attitudes, may appear as a threat to the whole social structure. If he begins his work without recognizing the established social order, the Yankee's well-meant attempts to help may well result in frustration and failure—and all because of a failure to recognize the importance of cultural differences.

On the other hand, it would be equally wrong to assume the inalterability of the rigid social structure just sketched. Changes under the influence of industrialization are taking place everywhere, including Latin American countries. In ever more instances the peon of former days does take on responsibility, and when he finds it is rewarding, he develops a whole new set of expectations and attitudes. Obviously, then, changes that are occurring must be taken into account just as much as traditional patterns.

Letters

Editor:

After watching a week of rehearsals and then taking two dates to see the Playmakers production of "Oklahoma," I want to say that I thought that the production was great.

I have seen the Broadway production and the Hollywood production—and I still enjoyed seeing the Playmakers production more than either of the other two.

I liked Oklahoma because it made me laugh at times, it made me sad at times, and other times I felt exhilarated by the songs and dances.

But it did reach me!

When a singer was weak I listened harder, if an actor was scared I took into consideration that this was the first time he had even been on the stage.

I liked it because of the particular people that were cast in it and the way they executed their part.

Furthermore, I think that two best performances in it were done by John Sneden (who is always good) and Margaret Starnes. It is primarily because of them that I kept coming back to see the show rehearsal after rehearsal.

I was sorry to see your art editor pan the show (as usual). I am also curious to know why he has panned Margaret in everything she has ever done.

Why does he compare the Playmakers with the top productions?

To be sure the Broadway and Hollywood productions were better They certainly should have been. After all they do have month's of rehearsals, top salaries for all the main characters, equity for the little ones, and they both have a purely professional staff and cast who do nothing else.

But is the comparison fair?

Absolutely not!

Would you compare the writings of John Steinbeck with those of Anthony Wolfe? If you did, then Anthony would most assuredly get the short end of the stick. He, too, would be panned to death by the critics.

But as soon as you compare Mr. Wolfe's writings' with that of his peers, then he will stand out as a very good writer, along with Gail Godwin and Norman Smith.

Every writer seems to have one particular field or subject in which he is completely subjective and blind. Here the ego does the writing and not the intellect as it should be.

Mr. Wolfe's major weakness lies in exactly that. He can't write drama reviews! Furthermore, he never has been able to!!!

He has never praised the Playmakers for anything. Certainly no group that sells out at almost every performance can be that bad.

It is unfortunate that the only reviews printed around here are done by such a subjective critic.

The same critic that does such an excellent job on book reviews, and in most all other fields of journalistic writing as well.

I say, get another critic who will criticize a performance for it self and not for the history of the particular play.

I propose that at the next home game all right thinking Carolina fans supply themselves with a bag of very squashy tomatoes, plus a few hard apples, and when we are subjected to the volunteer entertainment of a bunch of arrogant stupid drunks—let them have it! Of course, some of the solicitous friends of the drunks might accidently get conked! I have never seen such tender loving care extended to slobbering boors.

In her letter to Mr. Wolff, Miss Ennis praises him thusly, "Your review is another example of the fact that the quality of book reviewing in college papers these days often surpasses that of many of our most August journals." Capital "A", August, a nice month, but poor for book reviews. Evidently we are to understand that Mr. Wolff's reviews would not merit such praise if the reviews of the September through July journals were considered. Second the motion.

On Friendship

P. W. Carlton

Of all the many virtues in this life, one of the most valued is that of friendship. For from friendship springs cooperation and brotherly love. My roommate and I enjoy a sterling relationship, the epitome of true filial affection.

We have devised a system for assuming personal rights in matters concerning dorm life. Our room is divided squarely down the middle, half his, half mine. Here the true spirit of friendship appears. Up until recently he let me peer from his window and I let him utilize my door with utter recklessness. However, since he is a blasphemous character of inferior morals, we recently came to dissension over some triviality or other. Following our argument he bisected the room with a broad black line and advised me to stay the perdition on my side of it. This suited my purposes perfectly, as I intended denying him access to the exit. It was fascinating to watch him spring across "no man's land" on his new pogo stick and land triumphantly in the hall. However, I discouraged this evasion by denying him air utilization on the west side, emphazing legal rights by sniping at my airborne associate with bits of limestone, shoes, and an occasional goose. Actually it has been quite pleasant save for the fact that it's pretty crowded sharing my bed with the bureau. (It was on his side of the line.)

A little dissension stimulates intellectual endeavor and artifice. We're both constantly busy thinking of ways to harass one another. Roommate knows how I love fresh air and sunlight in the morning, so he closes the window tightly and pulls down our blackout curtain, smugly enjoying my agony. I tried to open things up one moning, but the vile wretch had emplaced several mouse traps which thwarted my furtive, barefooted overtures. He's also trying to develop a technique for preventing air from diffusing across the line into my half of the cubicle. In my research lab I am now perfecting a method of bending the rays of light emitted by the overhead fixture so that they'll be confined to my part of the cell. Scientific endeavor is thus being promoted by our relationship.

There's another little sport I have with my reprehensible companion. It consists of waiting until he allows some portion of his anatomy (usually pedal digits) to hang cross the boundary, at which juncture I neatly remove said portion with machete. At present I have four of his toes and one belonging to a hapless neighbor. In return for this tender of my affection, roommate has burned a cigarette hole squarely in the middle of my post prized abstract, (though I'm not sure it isn't the better for it. Hard to tell about abstracts.) He also painted a mustache on my mother's picture and sprinkled popcorn kernels and salt in my bed.

These little skirmishes are carried on in the most jovial of attitudes, with delightful oral accompaniment. Roommate habitually attacks my night attire, consisting of a stylish blue (or a little purplish) warm up suit, likening my appearance to that of a gigantic purple grape. I, in return, comment bitingly upon the emaciated condition of his legs and advise immediate medical treatment for his mutilated visage. He intimates that my vocal attempts closely approximate those of a passion-striken bovine, at which juncture I advise his sojourn in that warmer climate located someplace beneat our feet. Thus it goes. We like each other.

I've been attacked violently for my printed views, and have been complimated to some degree. For both I am grateful. In my writing I have always attempted to present a view liberal enough to be reasonably compatible to the mass. There is logical reasoning involved. I believe strongly in friendship and in the virtues of humanity as a whole. I do not enjoy hurting people and feel that often times more thought can be provoked by humorously constructed satire than by a biting excoriation. For we tend to close our minds to attack, while we clasp to our hearts those thoughts that make up happy.

The joy of true friendship is almost unsurpassed, since it embodies love, trust and mutual understanding. Those who truly strive for friendship are among the happiest souls treading this orb. Communion with fellow mortals tends to bring out the goodness that is an integral part of us all. Observing the grossest personality from a positive angle will reveal something one can admire about him and thus will the experience of both be enriched. By giving of oneself in the search for friends, a person is assured a plentiful harvest of goodness and respect in return.

On Writing

Sidney Dakar

How many pages must we write? This question never fails to be asked when a professor assigns a term paper or any other paper to be written out of class. Almost everyone seems to have the belief that it is twice as hard to write a ten page report as it is a five page one. Anyone who has used the written word to express himself many times will say just the opposite.

It is far easier for me to explain some idea in a full length column than it is to express the same thought in half this space. To go over your writing and discard the unrelated thoughts and make the related ones more concise is one of the hardest jobs of writing.

A good short-story writer must be much more skillful in choosing his words than does one who writes full length novels. Every word must count in a good short-story. A writer of novels can ramble on for pages without really saying anything.

A friend once asked Franklin Roosevelt how long it would take him to prepare for a five-minute speech. Roosevelt said that it would take about two days. "What about a fifteen-minute speech?" asked his friend. "Oh, about a day," replied Roosevelt. "Well, how long does it take for you to prepare for a thirty-minute speech?" the man continued "I'm ready right now" was Roosevelt's answer.

Who's Jonas? Curiosity Gets Better Of Coed

By ANN FRYE

"Who's Jonas?"

Mary Crow's curiosity got the better of her Sunday afternoon. She'd passed my Jonas-literatured door on third floor, McIver, many times—too many times to let go unanswered the question, "Who's Jonas?"

Naturally I told her that Charles Raper Jonas is the Republican candidate for re-election to Congress from North Carolina's 10th Congressional District.

But she still wondered why I had on my door a car sticker saying "Re-election Jonas to Congress" and a full page ad from the Charlotte Observer on my congressman.

Just whom would I influence? Mary asked. Was it some form of super psychology I was employing?

More accurately, I told her, the public display of my political preferences is good psychology for me because I can't help Mr. Jonas back home in Hickory.

My roommate, Lynn Moody, kids me about the irony of it all: that the one person (me) who really wants to vote for Jonas will reach the legal voting age—19 days after the Nov. 4 election!

Selection Of Teachers Explained By Godfrey

ty member, all the while stressing that the initiative almost always came from the department involved, not from his office. Taking the History Department as a typical example of how appointments are made, Dean Godfrey pointed out several reasons for seeking a new faculty member, such as if one should resign or die or if the Legislature should appropriate more money to enable additions to the faculty.

When such a vacancy occurs the faculty of the department meets to discuss what field needs strengthening most. This "pooling of judgment by the faculty of that department," as Dean Godfrey termed it, is as influential as the chairman of any department allows. "Some chairmen may be more democratic than others; some may be more arbitrary.

TRY FOR BEST

"After it is decided what part of the department needs a new member they then try to get the best person at the salary they offer."

The faculty of the department meets to decide on one of the applicants for the open position after all applications have been narrowed down by a committee or the department head. The department, using history as an example, then recommends its choice to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. This dean then meets with his Advisory Board composed of the dean of the Graduate School, the dean of the General College and the chairmen of the divisions of social science, natural science and humanities.

USUALLY AGREES

If this board agrees with the choice, "and they usually do," said Dean Godfrey, the name is passed on to the Faculty Advisory Committee composed of nine elected members from the faculty at large, Chancellor Aycock and Dean Godfrey. This Advisory Committee usually sees fit to tell the Chairman of the department to go ahead with the appointment.

"However," said Dean Godfrey, "if the appointment is above the rank of instructor, the Chancellor must recommend the appointment to the Board of Trustees before final approval. We must remember that the Board of Trustees is the only agency in the University who can make faculty appointments."

The above method, which begins within the departments and works up through the higher administrative offices, is used almost entirely, said Dean Godfrey.

Dean Godfrey was asked if it were true that several times in the past he or the Chancellor had recommended specific appointments to department heads. He replied that he would consider it "extremely unwise" to "advise" a department head to make a specific appointment.

However, he said, he might call to the department head's attention some outstanding individual which he knew something about or had observed, such as a graduate student or assistant. "But I would never go beyond that,' he said."

Dean Godfrey classified as a rumor of which he had heard nothing substantial that the head of the Department of Music last year refused to make an appointment which had been "recommended" by a high administrative officer in the University.

"The reason initial plans for a new appointment must occur within the individual departments is because they, more than anyone else, know their own needs," he said.

McGuire Gets Trophy

Carolina's amiable basketball coach, Frank McGuire, was recently presented the University Club Service Award trophy for his outstanding work toward the betterment of sportsmanship among the students at the University.

McGuire has long been an opponent of hissing and booing opposing players during games, although his opposition has often been loud and strong.

The presentation was made in the main lounge of Graham Memorial by University club President Dave Jones.

The most outstanding example of McGuire's efforts at promoting sportsmanship occurred last season when on several occasions he stood up from the bench and asked the students to be quieter when opponents were shooting foul shots.

When Carolina played at Maryland, the Terp fans almost ran the Tar Heels out of the stadium with their loud booing. But when Maryland came to Chapel Hill to play Carolina, the students were urged by McGuire to remember that booing the Maryland players as they had done us would do no good.

So, instead of booing, the Tar Heel fans cheereed for their home team but made no bad actions toward the visiting Terps.

Last year's trophy winner was football coach Jim Tatum. The trophy is chosen by secret ballot of the members of the University Club, which includes a representative from each dorm and fraternity on campus.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND
DTH SPORTS EDITOR

It is obvious that Carolina's football team is snowballing, gaining in strength with each passing week. Their fourth straight victory, 26-7 over Wake Forest here Saturday, was enough to rate a vote of confidence from the AP, who picked them 17th in the weekly poll.

This week the momentum will either increase greatly or grind to a sudden halt. Carolina meets tough Tennessee at Knoxville, and the saying goes that "nobody beats Tennessee in Knoxville." It has, however, been done; and it has been done by Carolina.

IT'S BEEN A LONG TIME

During the Justice era, the Tar Heels rolled over the Vols twice in as many seasons. Since then (1948), however, Carolina just as well could have not shown up. The Volunteers own 9 straight wins over the Heels, and are the only team on the slate to have a winning record against Carolina with the lone exception of Notre Dame.

Last year, Bobby Gordon, Tommy Bronson, and Co., spoiled Carolina's homecoming with a 35-0 rout. The single wing power was just more than the Heels could contend with.

BETTER THAN THEIR RECORD

This year Tennessee has a disappointing, and disconcerting, 2-3 record. They are highly underrated;; their record doesn't show what they can do. A single play swept victory away from them against mighty Auburn. They were not mentally prepared for Florida State.

The Volunteers have beaten Alabama, and have upset heavily favored Mississippi State. They have another Majors in the backfield calling the plays. He is Bill Majors, younger brother of the famous John.

ANOTHER MAJORS

Majors, while only a sophomore, has ably filled the shoes of Gordon with the exception of the Auburn game. He resembles in spots his all-American brother John. His status this Saturday is not known for certain at this time, though he will probably play. He was injured in the Florida State game and did not return to action, but he did walk off the field under his own power.

Tennessee, under Bowden Wyatt, are still the same old Vols. They have rather light, but extremely quick and tough, linemen. Their backs are all able to go the distance on any play. They concentrate on the running game, pulling guards and running to the strong side.

VOLS STICK TO GROUND

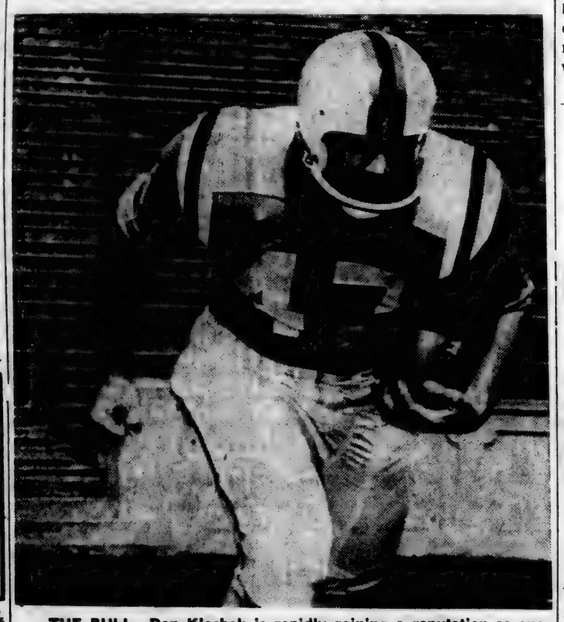
An interesting point: Coach Fred Tulai, who scouted Tennessee, stated that the Volunteers rarely pass unless their ground attack isn't going. We raise this point: What team, in the last four games, has had a successful ground attack against the rugged Tar Heel line? Nobody.

So now you may jump in to say that Carolina's pass defense is leaky as a $2 hat. It just ain't so, brother. Sure, Maryland and Wake Forest both threw a lot and they both completed a lot, but how many times did they complete a long pass? How many times did a man break past the Carolina secondary for a long run? It hasn't happened yet.

HEEL DEFENSE TOUGH

In its last two games, the Tar Heel defense has literally forced the opponents into the air. Maryland got 56 yards on the ground, and Wake didn't do much better even with Neal McLean.

Of course, neither the Terps nor the Deacs run from a single wing. But it has been stopped before and it can be again.



THE BULL—Don Klochak is rapidly gaining a reputation as one of the hardest running fullbacks in the country. Klochak, after playing in 2 games, is averaging better than 6 yards per carry.

Booters Bomb Pfeiffer College 3-1 For Third Win Of The Season

MISENHEIMER—Carolina's varsity soccer team bombarded the goal of Pfeiffer College all day Tuesday afternoon and emerged with a decisive 3-1 victory.

The 3-1 score didn't tell the story as the hustling Tar Heels kept the ball in Pfeiffer's territory almost the entire game.

Quick Lead

Carolina jumped to a 1-0 lead in the second quarter when left forward Joe Perkins scored his first goal of the season with three minutes gone in the quarter.

Minutes later, left wing Rick Grausman, who had set up several scoring plays this season but had been unable to score himself, increased the Tar Heels' lead to 2-0 when he booted the ball into the Pfeiffer goal.

Ghanim Scores

In the third quarter, right forward John Ghanim also scored his first goal for the Tar Heels this season when he booted the ball past the Pfeiffer goalie to give Carolina a 3-0 lead.

Pfeiffer's Jim Brison spoiled the Tar Heels' bid for their first shutout victory when he scored for the home team with only two minutes remaining in the contest.

Record Now 3-1

The win marked the third victory for the team as against one loss, which was suffered last Friday against Washington & Lee in Lexington.

For the first time in four games, Mike Thompson was held scoreless at his center forward position as the Pfeiffer defense had apparently made plans to try and stop him. Thompson has scored eight goals for Carolina so far this year.

Defense Ready

Carolina's defense was keyed for the game, and rarely allowed Pfeiffer to start a sustained drive into Tar Heel territory.

Coach Allen's squad will play away from Chapel Hill next week in a contest against Roanoke College on Nov. 4. N. C. State will be the Tar Heels second conference opponent when the two squads meet on Nov. 7.

Michigan Gambling Ring Exposed; Athletes In

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Oct. 28 — (AP) — The first string fullback and the basketball captain of the University of Michigan today were arrested along with five other students in connection with an investigation of football gambling on the university campus.

Charged with engaging in an illegal occupation in connection with gambling — a misdemeanor carrying a maximum sentence of 90 days in jail and $100 fine — were:

Jack Lewis, 21, varsity basketball captain from Chicago; Tony Rio, 21, first string football fullback from Chicago; Carl M. Riseman, 21, Detroit, Associate Sports Editor of The Michigan Daily, campus newspaper; Nick E. Mitea, 21, Ecorse, Mich.; Durwood J. Collins, Houston, Texas; John Miller, Detroit; Mike Dodgson, Grand Rapids.

Detective Lt. George Stauch said the sudents were charged in connection with the circulation of football spot cards on the campus. He estimated the alleged gambling racket amounted to about $10,000 a week among students.

Policy said they broke up the racket Friday night, but were unable to make any arrests at that time.

"We believe this thing starts and ends with a Chicago syndicate," Stauch said. He added that investigators had worked about four weeks — since the start of the football season — on the probe.

Rio, a senior, was listed as Michigan's third string fullback when fall drills started. But he improved steadily and got the first string job three weeks ago when Capt. John Herrnstein suffered an injury that shelved him for the season. Rio starred in Michigan's 20-19 triumph over Minnesota Saturday.

Football spot cards are used for gambling purposes by purchasers who select from four to 10 of the nation's top games.

Charles Coley Reminds Group Of Dance Rules

Charles Coley, chairman of the Dance Committee, yesterday announced the rules and regulations that will govern the Germans Club dance Friday night.

The rules, adopted by the Dance Committee, state that the conduct of all dances in the University will be completely under the control of the committee.

All clubs, classes or groups sponsoring dances must get permission from the committee—represented by assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, Ray Jefferies—and pay a $2 fee. These dances may only be held on Fridays or Saturdays, except by special permission.

All chaperones must be approved by the Dance Committee.

The NSA meeting has been set for 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Roland Parker I.

Levy said yesterday that every member of the UNC student body is a member of NSA and, as such, should want to learn the objectives and actions of this group.

GM Special Events Group Plans Game Reception

By FRANCES WALTON

The Graham Memorial Special Events Committee will hold a reception for Duke and Carolina students prior to the Duke football game Nov. 22.

MISS EDNA FAYE PUGH
. . . the chairman is a girl

This reception is one of many activities throughout the year sponsered by this GM committee to meet the needs of students at both graduate and undergraduate level.

One of the committee's major jobs this year will be to coordinate plans for a special committee to work on bettering facult 'ystudent relationships.

Other activities for the year include free dance and bridge lessons, musical concerts a special Christmas program, and a talent contest.

Chairman of the committee is Edna Faye Pugh, a senior sociology major and member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority. This year she was ADPi rush chairman and is a member of Angel Flight, the AFROTC sponsored squadron. She is also a member of WUNC-FM staff and the Panhellenic Council.

Discussing the aims of the committee, Miss Pugh said, "We are not here for a particular group of students, rather we are here to serve the student body."

In an appeal for suggestions, she said the only way the Special Events Committee can provide the campus with activities its students ike is for the students to indicate their interests.

Minister From Detroit Is First Forum Speaker

The Carolina Forum, which is sponsoring the Rev. Mr. Crane's speech, is an official agency of the UNC student government which provides speakers on government, labor, industry and education.

Armed Forces Honor Society Trains Pledges

Pledges of Scabbard and Blade National Military Society will begin their formal training this evening. The pledges were tapped recently at the regular drill periods of the NROTC and AFROTC units.

Pledges were tapped for their interest and ability as exhibited to their fellow cadets. The Scabbard and Blade is an interservice military society made up of junior and senior members of the ROTC units.

The pledges nominated from the ROTC unit were: J. A. Alexander, J. T. Alexander, H. C. Embry, A. A. Hutchinson, E. J. Kelly, B. E. Keys Jr., T. C. Moore, H. L. Patterson, M. Rhoades, G. D. Sheets, H. P. Troutman and F. E. Wirkus.

From the AFROTC unit pledges included: L. J. Davis Jr., Wm. S. Golwin, J. A. Caldwell, J. C. Ray, A. B. Salem, L. D. Sanders, M. F. Smith, L. A. Stephenson, J. E. Vickers, K. R. Walker.

Special Committee Named To Study Brooks' Charges

A special committee, appointed by Student Council Chairman Jim Long, met last night in the first of a series of sessions to examine two problems concerning the elections laws and the council's powers in this area.

John Brooks, member of Legislature, appeared before the council Tuesday night. He urged an investigation of questions pertaining to the reapportionment of Legislature and pertaining to the right of a duly-elected legislator to hold his seat until his term of office has expired.

After Brooks had presented these two questions, Long appointed a special committee to study the issues and make recommendations to the Student Council.

Regarding the reapportionment, Brooks questioned the fairness of the recent action of Legislature, which, he said, did not apportion its seats strictly according to population. This was the criteria set up in the Student Constitution, he said.

Brooks also asked the council to define student rights as regards the possibility for a legislator to lose his seat before his term has expired.

This has occurred when a legislator, elected in the springs, must relinquish his seat because his district loses one representative in fall Legislature reapportionments.

Commending the council, Brooks said yesterday he was pleased the Student Council is considering civil cases in addition to Campus Code cases.

Brooks said both are difficult problems which need to be answered. He commented that if the council answers these problems, this will be a step forward in student government.

Jury System Conversion Measure Coming Before Student Legislature

By DEE DANIELS

When Student Legislature assembles tonight, six bills will be awaiting action.

The meeting will be at 7:30 in the Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East.

Bills coming up include:

(1) A bill concerning change in the selection of jurors, Gary Greer (SP). This was passed out of the Ways and Means Committee, but came back to it for amendment to give a more realistic approach toward selecting the jurors.

(2) A bill for the restoration of the basic NSA declaration concerning academic freedom—Greer (SP). This was passed unfavorably by the Ways and Means Committee.

(3) A bill for appropriations for a TV set in Whitehead—Rudy Edwards (SP).

(4) A bill to provide a filing clerk for Legislature—Dave Biron (UP). This will come from the Rules Committee.

(5) A bill to establish a definite policy for the publishing of the Yackety Yack by student government and to appropriate funds necessary for the enactment of this policy—John Brooks (SP). This will come from the Rules Committee also.

Honor Council Head Won't Comment On Bill

Hugh Patterson, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, declined comment Tuesday on Gary Greer's bill before the legislature to revamp the Carolina honor council system.

"I decline to comment now in favor of speaking before the legislature when the bill is introduced," Patterson said.

Phi Rules Out Atomic Disarm Impracticable

The Phi Society Tuesday night defeated a bill favoring the abolition of nuclear weapons on the general ground of impracticability. Guest critic for the evening was Richard P. Douthit, faculty adviser for the Debate Squad.

A vote of confidence for the newly elected Pope John XXIII was defeated six to five by members and guests.

Rep. Bill Jackson introduced the nuclear weapons bill for the Ways and Means Committee, stressing the economic drain of nuclear armaments and the danger of total destruction of mankind.

Five Carolina Middies Recognized For Activity

Midshipmen H. P. Troutman, T. C. Moore, R. T. Corbett, E. F. Knight and R. G. Cashwell were recently reviewed by Capt. Carl Tiedeman.

Capt. Tiedeman commended them for their high individual standing which they received during their summer training. The men were cited for their outstanding leadership qualities.

Midshipmen Corbett and Knight went on a naval cruise to Europe, visiting ports in Spain, Portugal, Sweden and Denmark.

Midshipman R. G. Cashwell, battalion commander, attended the Marine Corps School at Quantico, Va., where he received basic instruction in field tactics, close order drill and command in the field.

Traffic Group Name Changes Are Approved

By STAN FISHER

Meeting yesterday afternoon, the Traffic Advisory Commission approved proposals giving various traffic committees names more aptly describing their functions and a more detailed explanation of their role in campus traffic affairs.

These proposals will probably reach the Student Legislature shortly for legislative approval as an attempt is made to establish a more effective and efficient traffic control system.

The Traffic Advisory Commission itself would receive the name of Motor Vehicles Advisory Commission with nine members: six workers and the chairman appointed by the president of the student body and chairmen of the Traffic Board and Student Traffic Council. (These last two have proposed new names.)

The new Motor Vehicles Advisory Commission would have investigative powers over any traffic problem which might arise and the power to make appropriate recommendations to the proper bodies.

It would make periodic reports of its investigations to the Student Legislature.

The Traffic Board would issue summons and collect and present to the Student Traffic Council all pertinent information concerning a case. Its new name under the changes would be the Traffic Council Investigation Staff.

The Student Traffic Council would receive the name of Traffic Court and have the right to levy graduated parking fines.

Additional Nominations Made By Student Party

After deadline time Tuesday night, the Student Party added to its slate for the coming elections.

Troy Blanton will run for one of the two one-year Legislature seats in Town Men's IV district. Ed Levy was nominated to vie for the same position from Town Men's III district.

The party also voted to nominate class officers.

Court Curbing Unanimously Defeated By Di

A bill agreeing with Congressional legislation to restrict the power of the Supreme Court was unanimously defeated Tuesday by the Dialectic Senate.

Senator Curtis Gans introduced the bill and spoke for it. He said the Supreme Court is taking too much of the policy-making power of the government and that this is specifically reserved for the President.

Senator Peblcy Barrow opposed the bill in saying that interpretations do differ at various times, but this was the intent of the Constitution. He pointed out that the 1954 decision regarding segregation was more correct than earlier decisions which upheld "separate but equal."

The bill was also opposed by Senator Rick Wolfer, who said the Supreme Court is doing its job in interpreting the law. He said the law is not a static affair and there are already safeguards against too much Supreme Court power.

Senator Gary Greer said that unwarranted power should be curbed because otherwise the balance of power concept in govern ment would be destroyed.

Speaking again, this time in opposition to the bill, Sen. Gans said the only way Congress could limit the power of the Supreme Court was to limit its jurisdiction. Sen. Gans also said the Supreme Court happens to be the largest single place where individual rights can be reserved, and to limit its jurisdiction would make a situation where a person would not have redress for his grievances.

An Editorial

The Charlotte Observer, if conservative in its viewpoint, is usually mild in its presentation. However, somewhere it slipped up this week when it editorialized on the promotion of Hyman Rickover.

Admiral Rickover won his promotion largely for the creation of the atomic submarine, and although the Observer grudgingly granted Admiral Rickover the fact that he deserved the award, they proceeded in a paragraph to run his character into the ground.

This is not the place to discuss Rickover's merits as a person, and they are many—more than most of the cooperative individuals the Observer loves so well. What was particularly appalling in the editorial was the last sentence of the paragraph which after giving Rickover's character a beating in several sentences concluded "and besides he is a Jew."

In this era of race and religious prejudice reaching a high point, it could be hoped that responsible journalism would not fan the fires of prejudice and bias. It could very well have been a mistake of the editor who did not delete the sentence from the editorial writer's copy, but if this is the case both men should be fired.

Anti-semitism in the South does not need another advocate. It can only be hoped that the Observer could offer an apology.

Right To Know

Unless something miraculous happens, the Student Legislature will not consider the bill concerning jury trial revision, the most significant proposal to be considered by the legislature. Moreover, Honor Council Chairman Hugh Patterson does not seem to want to tell the public his objections to the bill until the legislature has acted upon this.

From this one can gather that there is not very much wrong with the bill, apparently Mr. Patterson's objections are not adequate to meet the public's scrutiny. The ways and means committee should take this into consideration when it hears Mr. Patterson's objections.

According to a report, the bill will be held in committee in order to find a "more realistic" method of selecting jurors. It seems hard to find many people who are acquainted with the United States very well, for if they were they would realize that jurors are selected at large from the entire populace. Indeed, in any democracy, and the campus is a democracy, each citizen is charged with the responsibility of seeing it work, and contributing to it. Hence, it is only right that the entire campus be used in the selection of a jury. It needs not mentioning further why permanent jurors should not be in the jury system. Suffice it to say, that with permanent jurors, the jury trial system is not a jury trial system.

Finally, a word ought to be said about the public's right to know the reasoning behind the objections to the honor council bill. The public votes in the end of November for legislature. This undoubtedly will be an issue in the campaign, and the public has a right to see both sides of the issue. It is too much to expect that the introducer of he bill will speak against his bill if he is for it. Hence, the people who are opposed should suggest what is wrong. To withold this from the public is to withold the necessary facts for the campus to make wise choices at election time.

In order to acquaint the campus with those who will not give the public the information that they need at the time they can have it to make their will felt on their representatives, The Daily Tar Heel will run "refused to comment" stories on those persons who will not give their viewpoint on these issues. It is hoped through this process the public will be able to separate the sheep from the goats.

N.S.A.

There have been several articles about the National Student Association in The Daily Tar Heel. Yet, many people seem to be in the dark as to how the organization works and what it stands for.

It is the only organization through which students can voice their views on a national level. For more about the National Student Association, attend the meeting tonight. The more campus participation N.S.A. can get the better off and the more representative of student opinion throughout the nation it will be.

Letters From Many Readers

Dear Mr. Greene:

Sincerely in the spirit of friendship for as you so rightly suggest, hate-morgering is despicable—may I ask you some questions? In your first 20-odd years, how deeply imbedded have your customs and traditions become? Have you not had occasion to change your mind during them? In your next 20 or 40 years, do you think you will have occasion to change or modify any of your present views?

If the majority of southerners is against integration—and this is perhaps debatable—what about that major majority of the nation and of the civilized world? Much as we might like it, it is not possible to discount the also deeply imbedded views of the rest of our country and of the rest of the world, that social or ecomonic discrimination on the basis of color is violently anachronistic, and morally and socially and intellectually wrong. (Governor Faubus and segregation were the first topics we were questioned about from Copenhagen to Istanbul, in trains, schools, private homes, all during the autumn months of last year.) You understand, I know, the part white "superiority" has played in the post-war surge of nationalism among colored peoples of the world, which has resulted in the sometimes bloody, always costly overthrow of white colonial rule.

And it is not that the colonialists never did anything for their natives. They raised considerably education and health levels, they brought to backward areas the fruits of higher European civilization. They even took promising youths out of the jungles and sent them to Paris, Amsterdam, London, and gave them excellent educations. But somehow the proper gratitude and complaisance did not appear, even after all this, when these colored recipients of white generosity were told, that while they had much promise and many fine qualities, they were not quite ready to associate freely with their benefactors.

May I ask you Mr. Greene, sincerely and without sarcasm, have you ever tried being devil's advocate? Have you ever put yourself in the place of a young college-educated Negro living in the South, say in Chapel Hill? Have you ever been kept out of a place for a reason you considered invalid? Have you ever been jeered at because of some unremovable characteristic you were born with? What must it be like, Mr. Greene? How can we possibly know? Of course we can't—but because we've never been in the Sahara doesn't mean we doubt that we'd fry there in August.

As for your conclusion that not integration but states rights is now the primary issue, I am forced to feel doubt. Your very placement of reasons seems to indicate that your prior concern, Mr. Greene, is really integration. And it then seems too possible that the states rights issue is a morally less controversial blind behind which to shelter your intentions to maintain the status quo.

You rightly say, "If integration is to come, it must come slowly." But, Mr. Greene, it must come. "Overnight?" It is almost 100 years since the idea was stated as law. I am genuinely sad to trink this, and perhaps I am mistaken, but isn't it possible, Mr. Greene, that what you and other honestly-intentioned and moderate Southerners mean and want by "slowly" and "time for acceptance of this sudden change" is after your generation, and after that of your children? A change is a change. The future state will not be as the past. And it may seem "sudden" and shocking if it is never been considered a real possibility for you yourself.

So we don't like it. So it does take effort. It is not necessary—or a law of nature—that we like everything we do. Though it may have come to seem so to us who have grown up in this fortune blessed country—to us white people, that is. It may be that in doing something distasteful, but something which very many people in many different places and for many years have decided is right, will prove to be less horrible than we feared. But we will never learn to do it if we continually put it off or shove aside until "later."

One last thing. To bring this discussion out of theory into actuality, may I mention the following incident, which occurred this week, and which brought me up face to face with reality. And can we not agree, Mr. Greene, that at the least it was regrettable? A European graduate student here on one of the most highly selective U. S. scholarships, went to a new Chapel Hill restaurant with the girl across the hall. They enjoyed the meal very much, and after it the European student went back to talk with and congratulate the owner, whose forbears came from her country. He was pleased, but asked her not to bring the girl with her in again since she was colored. That she was an attractive, well dressed, accomplished UNC graduate student was immaterial; she was a Negro and therefore her presence might endanger his budding enterprise.

Do you feel, Mr. Greene, that since UNC students can tolerate the presence of Negroes in the room next to them in the dorm, or in the seat next to them in class or at the table next to them in Lenoir or Danziger's, that it is morally, socially or intellectually wrong to tolerate treir presence at the next table in Antonio's or any other restaurant in Chapel Hill? And what do you suppose the European student thought as she steamed out of the restaurant swearing never to go there again? And what will she tell of the democratic US when she returns to her home to talk with her friends and teach other university students there in a country where the Communist Party has fairly strong representation?

With the genuine wish that some meeting point between your views and mine may be found, I should like to hear your answers to these puzzling questions.

Even More Letters

Editor:

"A few of Mr. Greene's recent criticisms of the intolerance of liberals, almost approach the truth. But I refer here to certain statements he made that are not so close to the truth. He says that Faubus "was forced to defend his and his state's actions and beliefs" when the Supreme Court denied the people of Little Rock time for acceptance of this sudden change," and that, consequently, "he (Faubus) sent in the National Guard, not to kill integration and defy a court order but rather to keep peace and order until integration would be accepted."

In the first place, the Supreme Court was not, in September 1957 figuring in the Little Rock matter. The first court actions, those instigated by the local White Citizen's Council, were decided in Chancery. And the next decisions came from a single Federal Judge.

Sandwiched in between the passages quoted above is the statement that the integration program was "well under way, and no one had raised any objections." This is almost true, but it lends no support to his argument. Actually there were some objections (by the White Citizen's Councils within and without Little Rock, and by a few others), but these did not represent the Little Rock people. The very fact that there were few responsible objections tells us that Faubus was not "forced to defend his and his state's actions and beliefs." And whether Faubus meant only to "keep peace and order until integration would be accepted" will be seen in due time.

But let us look beyond September, 1957, in Arkansas for a moment. In 1956 when Faubus won re-election, one of his principal opponents was a certain Jim Johnson (now, with the direct or indirect help of Faubus, an Associate Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court) who, with his single planked-platform "let's keep them out," amassed about 60,000 votes. It was the renewal of this defeated movement by some plantation farmers (not from Little Rock), a Baptist minister, a local politician, and the White Citizen's Councils, all working in conjunction, which was truly the force that prevailed upon Faubus to summon the Guard.

This group was forming around the Attorney General, a Mr. Bruce Bennett, who, in the summer of 1957, was making overtures to it that he would gladly accept its backing as a candidate for the next Governor's race. While this was developing, the Mayor and the Police Department of Little Rock and the School were continuing the plans, which had been in the making for two or three years, to integrate 9 students into a school which usually enrolls over 2,000. What were the people of Little Rock doing? They probably were not paying much mind to either side.

And what was Faubus doing? He was becoming worried about his political future. He was afraid, though needlessly I believe, for he probably would have been re-elected anyway, since the people of Arkansas were not then giving much notice to the fire-eaters' yells—he was uneasy that if he did not appease this segregationist faction it might, with its cotton money, put Mr. Bennett in the mansion and he would have to go back to Huntsville. (If you had ever seen Huntsville you would know why Faubus wanted to stay in the mansion.) Therefore, when he sided with the segregationists, he lowered the sails of Mr. Bennett's political chances and those of any other segregationist because he left them no rallying point. Besides, they no longer needed one.

Was Faubus, then, forced to defend his people's rights? He was forced by one commanding desire—to remain governor. If he had been forced to defend States-Rights he had pelnty of earlier chances to call the Guard—at Fayetteville, Van Buren, Hoxie, and at other Arkansas cities which have integrated since Faubus became governor and before Litte Rock.

Faubus has always avowed, like a good politician, to do what the people want. Now the question in the Little Rock case is "what people?" Mr. Greene says the "state's actions and beliefs." Rather, was it not the city's "actions and beliefs" which were paramount? In Faubus' earlier political speeches he said that he would not force integration upon the local school boards, but would leave it up to them as to whether they wanted to integrate or to remain segregated. Thus, he was speaking of local rights, not "state's-rights." The question is whether Faubus left it up to the people of Little Rock, represented by the School Board, or whether his action was selfishly directed.

When I returned to Arkansas (about a week before "black Monday") the first Arkansas Gazette" I saw had an editorial and a special front-page feature describing the anticipated smoothness of the opening of the integrated classes the following week. There had been attempts to prolong the matter, as I said, but they failed when Judge Davies refused to controvert the School Board's plans.

It was evident to many even before this time that Faubus was siding with the segregationists in their attempts ot stall the opening of school. He would not make a public statement that he would support the School Board's plan. Mr. Virgil Blossom, the Superintendent, said in his later testimony to the FBI that he and the School Board had tried on numerous occasions throughout the summer of 1957 to get Faubus to state publicly his support or his non-inteference with the integration plan. Mr. Blossom related that on each occasion Faubus refused, and that at their last meeting two or three days before the Guard was posted he tried again, but Faubus again refused. The Governor then said that integration would probably succeed without any trouble, but that he still was not going to let them do it—integrate. He told Mr. Blossom that he was already committed to some people. Winthrop Rockefeller quoted Faubus as saying that he had to do "it" in order to be re-elected. As far as I know Faubus has never denied making this statement, one that has been attributed to him by people other than Rockefeller.

Is it any wonder then that one could simply not give anf credence to Faubus' statements that there was imminent danger to the safety and welfare of the Little Rock school children, especially after one considers all that happened before and during the time in question. I did not believe it then as I sat listening and watching the Governor justify himself by saying that great caravans were converging on the city and that people (implying the Negroes) had been buying inordinate numbers of knives, guns, and stiletto-umbrellas. Nor have I believed it since. The FBI found that fewer weapons had been and were being bought than usual; and, as to those caravans, I do not think they have got to Little Rock yet. It was all too plainly a political fairy tale.

Now you might ask: Does he not now have the support of the majority of the people of Arkansas, and of Little Rock? Quite so; he does. But any reasonable person in Arkansas knows that he created that support. Witness the recent Van Buren fiasco; this is a school that integrated peaceably; but when invited to demonstate, it willingly obliged. Even most of those whose dormant emotions he aroused are not really fooled by Faubus. If some are they probably wanted to be.

Yet the question arises whether those emotions, which needed to be demagogued forth in order to express themselves, were really very seriously held in the first place. The passivity of the people prior to Faubus' initial action attests that either this "social pattern," as Mr. Greene calls it, was dying out, or its holders were giving it up as a bad thing.

And there are other reasons why the Arkansans supported Faubus in such great numbers. One friend of mine said he voted for Faubus, not because of Faubus' supposed beliefs, but because he (the friend) did not like the Northern liberals and their, to him, insulting magazines and newspapers. Others found in Faubus a hero who was fighting the big Northern elephant. It did not matter about the cause he was espousing so long as he was fighting and making headline history. The cause, well, that would die down, but in the meantime Arkansas was niching its notch.

No, Mr. Greene, Faubus was not forced; he was not maintaining law and order. He was making himself the third-term governor and a little history to go with it. Many people in Arkansas expected Faubus to begin to look for a way out of his dilemma after the July primary this year; that, with his main objective obtained, he would not interfere with the opening of school this past September if he could give in while making it look like a victory for himself or the fault of someone else. But this did not happen. Why? Well, Faubus apparently is not one to count birds in bushes while he has one in his hand. Although he was in effect re-elected in July, there was still the usually perfunctory November general election. This was perhaps in his mind when he closed the schools this past September. Now he is already shewed-in. Of course, it could be, too, that Faubus said that he did not go into anything without knowing what he was doing. For once I want to believe him."

To Mr. Fred Hurlburt:

This is in answer to your letter of October 28.

I express some deep concern on this matter for I, myself, am a member of the Episcopal Church that you were in doubt about.

I do not know you, but I wish I could, for glancing over your article, I noticed that there was a series of questions about our church.

As far as any weakness in our church, I would like to state that the fact that there are some weak spots and confusion in our church makes it all the stronger.

In criticizing our church you automatically criticize the members in it. Such is true in any group. But what about George Washington and the greater percentage of our Presidents who were Episcopalians?

I would like to add, Fred, that if you are even mildly interested in our church, we have a study group every Tuesday night at 7 o'clock in the Parish House. The group would welcome you and I, personally, would welcome you.

More Letters

Dear Editor:

I'm not mad at you or anyone. The day has been too beautiful to include soapboxes of reform. I've been walking about the campus, scuffing leaves, being late for class, talking with whomever has the time to talk back, and just generally enjoying this small world we have here at UNC.

As I crossed the campus here and there, an article in the DTH, printed a few days ago came to mind and made me want to laugh. It ended with something like, "You, snobs! Would it hurt you to crack your icy faces and smile!"

I'm quite satisfied with the status quo on this smiling issue. My under-graduate college demanded a big smile and a loud, "Hi!" from everyone. Our catalogue insisted on our friendly informal spirit. Nothing made me more homesick those first freshmen weeks as knowing I would have to place an insidious grinning mask on my face if I wanted to get to my classes without undue comment. After four years of this hi-and grin-and bare-the-lips habit, I had numerous repercussions in New York (not all good) before I learned to discard it.

Being a girl, I say I prefer the present state and have found the stare-'em back in the eyes the best technique—for casual attractive approaches there's a certain flicker about the eyelids that tells you very delicately if you've made contact. Perhaps it is less friendly than the wide grin, but who ever proclaimed sex friendly?

In this interesting war between male and female, I refuse to be a conscientious objector and smile, damit, smile (except, of course, on a day as beautiful as this).

NANCY COMBES

Editor:

I wish to offer some suggestions regarding the DTH policy on publishing "letters to the Editor," particularly as regards letters similar to the recent one from a Mr. "Philip S. Malone, Sr."

Several things should first be noted:

First, this Mr. "Malone" is not a student at UNC. The Central Office of Records, in response to two separate inquiries, can find no record of him

Second, a letter identical (minus DTH misspellings) to that appearing in DTH on October 24 appeared in the Durham Morning Herald on the previous day. It was postmarked in Greensboro.

Third, these letters were sent to newspapers just prior to "Communion Sunday," a Sunday on which members of other denominations are expressedly welcome at Episcopal services.

Fourth, this type of letter has been frequently employed by a particular lunatic fringe in the Protestant Episcopal Church, in order to either spread their own rather peculiar beliefs or to gain some prominence for themselves. It can be recalled that such letter provoked a flurry of letters to the DTH last year.

These four things considered, I am inclined to doubt the "Real Presence" of this Mr. Malone. The letter seems rather to be part of a not-so-clever little propaganda campaign, a campaign which embarasses many members of the Protestant Episcopal Church and which offends many members of other denominations.

The DTH policy has long appeared to be one of publishing all letters, written in good taste, which were signed by bona fide students. This is the implication of many past editorial statements. Frequently faculty and townspeople have contributed letters, but I can recall no occasions when they have been responsible for letters which did not to some slight degree pertain to previous DTH articles or to university affairs.

Such letters may be useless, but they fall far short of the Mr. "Malone" class. A policy of printing similar wierd letters from non-students opens the DTH to all varieties of cranks, crackpots and fanatics. I doubt seriously that this will contribute to the quality of the DTH, and feel assured that most of the students do not wish to subsidize the publication of such material.

These things considered, I suggest an editorial statement to the effect that only letters from students will be published, excepting letters from non-university persons only when they pertain directly to something associated with the life of the university. And please use discretion in making these exceptions.

NAME WITHHELD BY REQUEST

Editor:

Several members of the Editorial Staff seem to be totally unconcerned with whether or not their reviews and appraisals are fair or unfair, accurate or inaccurate, honest or dishonest. As controversialists they attempt only to foster a reaction, any reaction, in order to "stimulate thought." This is a questionable policy in itself, and in the hands of such immature writers it becomes reprehensible.

Our immediate reference is, of course, to Mr. Wolff's review of the Playmaker's production of "Oklahoma!". It goes without saying that the Playmakers is an outstanding amateur theatrical company, and to anyone not expecting a production equal to Broadway standards, their production was far more than adequate.

We feel that a critic has responsiblity as well as authority, and Mr. Wolff failed to exercise any responsibility whatsoever when he tossed his words around as derisively as he did in his review. We question whether he is competent to review as many fields of artistic endeavor as he does, and we suggest that he at least be honest enough to acknowledge fairly the efforts of others.

Close-Up View Of Moon Offered By Planetarium

Because of current public interest in the moon and the planet Mars, persons attending the Morehead Planetarium program will be permitted to view — weather permitting — the two heavenly bodies through its 15-inch reflector telescope on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings through November.

Supervised observing sessions of the moon or Mars, whichever can be favorably seen, will begin immediately after the Planetarium program.

Manager A. F. Jenzano made several test observations last week and reported the moon comes in very clearly. Its craters and even shadows on the inside of the craters are plainly visible. As for Mars, only its polar caps were observed, but Jenzano said that it should be better seen as it arrives in a more favorable position about the middle of November.

Jenzano said public interest in the moon and Mars at this time comes from the United States' "moon shot" efforts and the worldwide study of Mars in the next three weeks by International Geophysical Year scientists.

Yack Beauties Get Late Hours At WRC Meet

Women's Residence Council announced last night that a joint resolution from the dean of women's office and the WRC gives to all coeds participating in the Yackety Yack beauty contest late permission on Nov. 11.

Freshmen participating in this contest will not be granted a free permission. The late permission will count as one of the late permissions granted to freshmen.

Nancy Aubrey was selected by the WRC to serve at a tea representing the council for a representative from Mademoiselle Magazine. The tea will be held Nov. 3 at 3:30 p.m. in Spencer Dorm. The Mademoiselle representative is coming to the campus to introduce a college board contest through which those eligible may win the opportunity to do two assignments for Mademoiselle.

The rewards for the best tryouts and assignments are cash prizes, and for the 20 college board members who have done the best work throuhout the year, there is offered a trip to New York and a month with pay on the staff of Madeoiselle as a Guest Editor in June 1959.

J-Schoolers Plan Trip To See Paper Operate

The third annual trip to the Charlotte Observer for seniors, graduate students and staff members of the School of Journalism will be made Nov. 6.

Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the Journalism School said yesterday the group will leave at 1:15 p.m. Nov. 6 by chartered bus for Charlotte.

At the Observer office, the journalists will be greeted by the editor, general manager and advertising manager along with other members of the staff.

The journalism class will be guests, along with representatives from Davidson and the University of South Carolina, of the Charlotte Observer for dinner, afterwhich the students will break up into small groups and observe the various phases of the paper in operation.

Dean Luxon said the purpose of the trip is twofold: to give students a chance to see the state's largest newspaper in operation and to give the Observer a chance to look over some of its future prospects.

Mat Practice Begins For Tar Heels Today

Barnes said, "No experience, no talent is necessary. We supply everything but guts."

Three Tar Heel Linemen Praised

By KEN ALYTA
Associated Press Sports Writer

Nine linemen, five repeaters, are on this week's honor roll of the Atlantic Coast Conference area Associated Press All America footbal board.

Three of them are members of the Carolina team, currently the hottest club in the ACC with four straight victories after dropping its first two games.

The Tar Heels are beginning to look like the team that was placed among the nation's leaders in the pre-season poll.

Each caught three passes and scored a touchdown against Wake Forest. Schroeder gained 106 yards on his three pass plays and Goldstein 60.

In addition, Schroeder was a key man in rushing the Wake Forest passers.

Schroeder's nomination was his first as were those of soph guard John Bodkin of South Carolina, his junior tackle teammate, Ed Pitts and Ben Scotti, Maryland's senior end.

The blocking of Pitts and Bodkin was exceptional in the South Carolina rout of favored Clemson and board member Jim Foster of the Spartanburg, S. C., Herald added that "Pitts usually came up off the bottotm of every pile of tacklers."

Scotti took a six-yard pass and raced 62 yards more for Maryland's only touchdown in the loss to Auburn to help the Terps lead the unbeaten Auburn club in the third period of a game that saw Auburn strike back for an uphill victory.

Back for repeat nominations were Mike McGee, Duke guard, named for the third straight week; Ronnie Koes, North Carolina center; Maryland guard Rod Breedlove and Bill Rearick, North Carolina State guard. Breedlove and Koes also drew a third citation. Goldstein also was nominated previously.

THE GUIDING LIGHT—Quarterback Jack Cummings' expert passing and play mixing has led his Tar Heel mates to four straight wins. Cummings now leads the ACC in both total offense and passing.

Soccer Game Added

Another game has been added to the schedule of the varsity soccer team.

A new arrival to the soccer world, Emory University, will send a squad to Chapel Hill Friday to meet Carolina on Fetzer Field at 3 p.m.

Due to the addition of the Emory game, Carolina will have three home games within eight days. After the Emory contest, the Tar Heels are scheduled to play tough Roanoke College in Chapel Hill on Nov. 4, and then N. C. State on Nov. 7.

Emory University, located in Atlanta, Ga., only recently adopted soccer as a school sport.

Hawkins And Smith Rated Best Backs

CHARLOTTE (AP)—The name of Alex Hawkins isn't found among the top 10 in the various statistical tables of fthe Atlantic Coast Conference, but the South Carolina halfback is this week's No. 1 back of the Associated Press All America regional football board serving the ACC area.

The 185-pound senior co-captain of the Gamecocks from South Charleston, W. Va., is the type of player who can do everything a football player is supposed to do and do it well. Clemson assistant coach Banks McFadden, an all-time Tiger great, calls Hawkins a "fierce competitor who can do everything well. He is just naturally mean on a football field. He's going to fight you any way he can," observed McFadden before South Carolina clipped Clemson from the unbeaten ranks a week ago.

Fouur other backs came in for repeat nominations.

Hugo Germino of The Durham Sun declares, "It's time we sat up and paid attention to Smith, probably North Carolina's best running back since the Charlie Justice days of 10 years ago."

Smith ran for 62 yards for a touchdown and netted 123 yards in 14 carries. His work and Cummings' seven completions in 15 passing attempts for 166 yards and two touchdowns led the way to victory over Wake Forest.

Legislature Seats Reapportioned

By ANN FRYE

In quick action Wednesday night, the UNC Student Council: 1) declared Legislature's district reapportionment unconstitutional and 2) called Legislative representation a student privilege, not a right.

In making these decisions, the Student Council for the first time in several years assumed its jurisdiction in determining the constitutionality of legislation.

After the Council's action, the Elections Board rearranged district Legislature seats to conform strictly to population in the 13 districts.

SWIFT WORK

The swift work by both the Council and Board came in answer to two questions presented by John Brooks, student legislator.

First, Brooks questioned the constitutionality of Legislature's recent reapportionment of seats. He also wanted the Student Council to answer this question: can a student who has been elected to a seat in the spring lose his seat in the fall through reapportionment?

Directives to both the Elections Board and Student Legislature came from the Council regarding the reapportionment Council.

The Board was asked to and carried out reapportion according to population. In declaring the Legislature-approved reapportionment null and void, the Council also ruled that it does not have power to change Legislative enactments.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Article III of the Enactment Appendix to the Elections Laws, called unconstitutional, would transfer legislative power to the judicial body, the Student Council. Jim Long, chairman of the Student Council, said the transfer of power to the judiciary is unconstitutional in this Article. "The following apportionment shall be applicable to the forthcoming election subject to change by the Student Council."

The decision of the Council on Brooks' second question was that "holding office is a privilege, not a right. Therefore, when necessary, a person may be removed from office through reapportionment, without suffering the loss of any right."

An important directive of the Council to the Elections Board called for a formulated uniform policy for redistricting Legislature seats after reapportionment.

POLICY SPELLED OUT

Bob Furtado, chairman of the Board, yesterday spelled out formally what has been the policy all along: that of allowing candidates who won their seats with the greatest number of votes to have priority in retaining these seats.

This policy statement was a mere formailty because there have been no complaints from legislators who lost their seats.

In reapportioning the Legislature seats, the Elections Board made the most notable changes in Town Men's IV. This district's representatives were increased from four to 10.

The increase was made because the population in the district is an overwhelming 1,215.

REAPPORTIONMENT

The 12 other districts, their student population and number of representatives noting any changes are:

Dorm Men's I (424 students), three Legislature seats;

Dorm Men's II (496), a decrease from four to three seats;

Dorm Men's III (496), five seats;

Dorm Men's IV (486), from four to three seats;

Dorm Men's V (338), two seats;

Dorm Men's VI (576), four seats;

Dorm Women's I (450), from four to three seats;

Dorm Women's II (437), from four to three seats;

Town Men's I (251), from four to three seats;

Town Men's II (403), from five to three seats;

Town Men's III (440), from four to five seats; and Town Women's (372), three seats.

COUNCIL PRAISED

Elections Board Chairman Bob Furtado and Student Legislator John Brooks both highly commended the Student Council yesterday for its quick action in answering Brooks' two questions.

The early decisions, they said, allow the two parties to carry out nominations for Legislature seats next week as planned.

In the Nov. 18 fall elections, 25 of the 50 seats in Legislature will be elected, plus a number of six-month seats.

Talent Show Is On Lookout For Students

Enjoy singing in the shower? Well, you no longer have to let your talent go wasted on the confines of bathroom walls. The UNC Talent Show may be able to use you.

Tryouts for the third annual Talent Show will be held Monday and Tuesday in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial for student acts in the Nov. 18 show.

Jim Talley, one of three directors of the show, said yesterday anyone with leanings in music, acting, dancing, comedy or other so-called talents should sign up in the GM Information Office for tryout appointments.

TRYOUTS START

The tryouts Monday and Tuesday will be from 2 to 6 p.m.

Talley said this year's show should at least equal the 22 acts that performed to a full house in Memorial Hall last year.

This year's Talent Show will get underway at 8:30 p.m. Nov. 18 in Memorial Hall.

One act already secured for the show is songstress Kack Anthony, Talley said.

PRODUCTION

The three show directors, Talley, Wally Kuralt and Ess Bruner, are looking for students interested in helping out with the production, such as sets, finances and programs.

Anyone interested in front stage or back stage work in the third annual Talent Show may sign up with either of the three directors.

Honor Council Candidates Are Announced

The Bi-Partisan Selections Board has released the names of nine candidates endorsed for the Women's Honor Council.

Interviews with prospective candidates for the council were completed Wednesday. The Board's endorsement will appear beside the candidate's name on the ballots this fall. Any student may run independent of the Board's endorsement, however.

Nancy Adams, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, yesterday announced the following candidates for the Women's Honor Council endorsed by the Board:

Carol Carruthers, Roberta Dono, Ann Walston, Patty Faires, Sandy Trotman, Susan Cordon, Lee DelGreco, Libby Johnson and Kathy Ross. These women were selected from 45 candidates.

Nancy Adams said she was "very pleased with the interest shown by the number of women who applied."

Spooks, Ghosts Go Out Tonight, Or Will They

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Spooks and hobgobblins, witches and ghosts—all will sneak out of the hiding places where they have closeted themselves all year and bring terror to the world tonight—or will they?

Reports from reliable sources in that far off Black Land which these unearthly spirits inhabit seem to indicate that there has been a radical change in the policy of the Spooks Union. Union officials have reported that, this Halloween, trick or treating will be unlike anything this world has ever known—the whole nature of the spooking business has been changed.

Tonight trick or treaters who wear tags bearing the emblem of the United Nations Children's Fund are goodwill ambassadors on a mission of aid to the more than 45 million children who will benefit this year from the milk, medicines and health service provided by UNICEF.

HELPS CHILDREN

UNICEF is the largest international organization set up exclusively to assist children by combatting malnutrition and disease wherever it is found.

These trick or treaters, the youth of Chapel Hill, are asking for money this year instead of candy and apples. The young spooks are trying to help UNICEF scare away the "spooks" of TB, rickets, yaws, leprosy and malnutrition that more unfortunate children must live with constantly—not just on Halloween.

Quite a difference from the "good old days" when torn up mailboxes and cats on rooftops were the order of the day on Halloween. Did anyone say anything about the younger generation going to the dogs?

North Carolina Must Invest For Education

GASTONIA —(AP)— UNC Education Prof. Guy B. Phillips said here Thursday night North Carolina must invest more money in education to properly prepare the leaders of tomorrow and insure continuation of the state's progress.

"Education of youth is significantly dependent upon faith because its results are often delayed," Phillips said. "It requires a long look ahead to get people to invest in education which prepares for the demands of our entirely new and strange world."

Yack Deadline

Tuesday is the deadline for seniors to select their pose from the proofs of their class pictures for use in the Yackety Yack, according to Yack editor Cameron Cooke.

The proofs will still be available after Tuesday, however, if seniors wish to buy extra pictures, he said.

Student Legislature Approves Four Bills; Jury Selection Revision Held To Next Week

Yackety-Yack Measure Referred To Committee

By DEE DANIELS

By press time last night the Student Legislature approved bills (1) to set up a committee to study the fraternity parking problem, (2) to set up a study area committee and (3) to provide a TV set in Whitehead dormitory.

The governing body voted to refer back to committee a bill to establish a definiate policy for the publishing of the Yackety Yack by student government and to appropriate funds necessary for the enactment of this policy — John Brooks (SP).

In presenting changes in his bill, Brooks proposed that (1) student government pay for "the whole thing" except what the book's regular income would be and the organizations indirectly connected with the student government. (2) student government appropriate the sum of $3,700 from general surplus for refunds to those organizations already having space in the 1958-59 Yack, (3) any sum of this amount not so used will go back to the general surplus and (4) the policy stated in the first article of the bill shall become effective for the 1959-60 Yack, with the submision of the Publication Board's report to the Budget Committee.

The importance of the Yack, Brooks noted, is that it is the only record the University has of student activities.

Therefore, accuracy must be stressed, we should cut down on things "we don't necessarily need," such as beauty queens, he added.

Charlie Gray (UP) opposed the bill on the basis of the financial status of the general surplus fund. He doesn't feel "we can afford to take this money out of student funds."

Debate folowed concerning the investment funds which could be appropriated if necessary.

As no one was an authority on the matter, it was moved and passed that the bill be referred back to committee.

Norman Smith (Ind.) presented his bill to establish a study area committee on the basis that there are not adequate study facilities on campus. This was approved with no opposition.

Traffic Court Gives Final Auto Warning

The Student Traffic Court yesterday issued a final warning to students who have not yet registered their automobiles.

Saturday is the deadline for registering an automobile on campus. The license numbers of those cars not dispalying the proper registration stickers wil be checked through the departfent of motor vehicles of the licensing states.

Car owners with Bell Tower permits should pay strict attention to the regulations concerning their use, according to Mike Lanham, chairman of the Traffic Advisory Commission. He said summons to the Student Traffic Court are issued for violations of the restricted zones. Penalties for violations include such punishments as fines.

CUBANS FOR GERMANS—The De Castro Sisters, natives of Cuba who have gained popularity in this country with their smash record of "Teach Me Tonight," will share the spotlight with Bob McFadden, Charlie Barnet and his orchestra and the Gladolias at the German Club concert and dance this afternoon and tonight. The concert will begin at 3:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall and the dance in Woollen Gym will start at 9 p.m. Coeds have been given late permission for the dance. Cocktail dresses and dark suits may be worn.

Dr. Crane's Speech Tonight Opens 1958 Forum Series

The 1958-59 Carolina Forum series opens tonight with an address by Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, Methodist church minister from Detroit, Mich.

He will speak on "The Fate We Face" at 8 o'clock in Hill Hall tonight. The speech is open to the public free of charge.

An outspoken critic of the Republican administration's foreign policy, Dr. Crane will discuss three major alternatives confronting the United States. These three are: incalculable regress, incredible progress and imperative egress.

One of the organizers of the Sane Nuclear Policy Committee, he has made previous statements about "the insanity of our present nuclear armament race and the suicidal nature of our brinksmanship policy that inevitably involves the constant loading of more and more live bullets into the chambers of Mr. Dulles' roulette revolver."

The Methodist minister did his undergraduate work at Wesleyan University, Conn., and completed his seminary training at Boston University. He did graduate work at Harvard.

Dr. Crane's pastoral work has been in Maine and Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.

A YMCA secretary in World War I, he was one of the first Americans to go overseas where he remained for the major part of a year, during which he developed his interest in the cause for peace.

Dr. Crane comes from a line of five generations of Methodist ministers, which will be extended to six by his son who is interested in the ministry.

Carolina Forum Chairman Roger Foushee has also released the names of four other tentative speakers for the Forum. These are: George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn), Sen. Jacob Javits (R-NY) and Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky).

FOLLOWING NATIONAL TREND

200 Per Cent Enrollment Increase Recorded By UNC Russian Classes

By EDITH MacKINNON

"It's really a national phenomenon."

Professor Walter Arndt was speaking of the rising enrollment at the University in Russian classes which has tripled in the past year, a trend which is growing over the country.

Enrollment in beginning Russian classes this year has grown to such an extent that Prof. Arndt has had to divide his class, one section now meeting in the evening.

During the past year the initial enrollment has tripled from around 12 students taking Russian to approximately 36 students at the present. Thirty of these are beginning their studies.

University students are not the only ones taking an interest in the subject, Prof. Arndt points out. A number of people are auditing the course, and the class has one local high school student, Joe Straley, enrolled.

ALSO AUDITS

Miss Pat Hunter of Chapel Hill also audited the course as a high school student and is now continuing her studies at the University.

UNC's 200 per cent increase puts it in the "middle range" of those colleges and universities which are seeing a growth in Russian studies, according to Prof. Arndt.

In comparison, he points out the increase shown by several of the Northeastern colleges. For example, Smith College has increased Russian enrollment from 17 to 100 students in the past year, Bryn Mawr, nine to 41, and Wellesley, eight to 46.

TULANE, DUKE

Among Southern college sand universities, both Tulane and Duke offer a Russian curriculum. Within the past year Duke has initiated an undergraduate major in the subject.

In tracing the development of Russian at UNC, Prof. Arndt says that for the past 15 years it has been in an "embyonic form."

Prior to 1956, one year of Rus-

In 1956 the faculty position of an assistant professor was estabished. Dr. Arndt holds this position at the present.

SECOND YEAR

At the same time a second year of Russian anguage was added, making, with a course in 19th century Russian literature in translation, a total of four courses. The credit rating of Russian language courses was also raised to a sophomore elective.

In 1958 Russian has been admitted as satisfying a language requirement for the bachelor of arts degree, making it substantially on a par with other foreign languages.

Russian courses are now offered under the Department of Germanic Languages, although it is an Indo-European language in origin and uses the Greek alphabet.

FUTURE EMPHASIS

As for a forecast of the future, Prof. Arndt says that progressive stages of development are hoped for. Future emphasis will be placed on scientific development, study of literature, a reading and translation course of literary progress in the country, and ultimately, an undergraduate major in Russian.

Under the director of Alexander Heard, dean of the graduate school at the University, a study is being undertaken to determine future possibilities for an area study to tie in with the Russian program. Such a study would bring in topics and studies related to that area of the world.

Punishment

It seems that a freshman girl is being punished for the fact that she is good looking, or at least this is the way is sounds.

A freshman girl under the new freshman coed regulations can compete in the Yack Beauty Contest, but also must count it as one of her cuts from closed study, for which she is only allowed one per week.

It seems that from the new coed restrictions, it pays to be plain.

Student Council

The Student Council has ruled wisely on the election reapportionment, although it has created a district of ten legislators which is entirely too much for the number of people who vote in that area.

However, this is correct according to the Constitution, and the time for revision of this provision is during the next legislative session.

The creation of certain at-large legislative positions may supply an answer.

Nuclear Testing

Henry Hill Crane comes to speak to the Carolina Forum at a most unique time. The founder of the committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy has no doubt seen in the papers how Russia has refused to accept a one year nuclear ban, and how the United States has refused to ban nuclear weapons tests until Russia does.

He must wonder as others do how like children the actions of the two major world powers seems, and he must recall with horror when he realizes that what the two nations are toying with is the power to destroy the world.

It must come as a shock that the administration of the United States cannot see its duty written in large clear letters — to suspend indefinitely nuclear testing of any sort of weapon for peaceful or non-peaceful purposes, but apparently the government is blind.

Moreover, it is a little overpowering to think that it was not too many months ago that the United States announced that it would suspend tests today, and that the administration is again going back on its pronouncement.

If the issue at stake were less than all the lives in the world, there might be room for political machinations, but as it is today, there is very little time for this.

With Russia exploding nuclear weapons, the United States has the opportunity to show which side wants war and which does not. It has the opportunity to turn world pressure on the Soviet Union, and it has the capability of eliminating a good percentage of the future strontium-90 in the air. All this can be had without material damage to the military plant of the United States, since the power of total devastation is still with this country.

It is indeed unfortunate that the United States has to act like a spoiled child now. This is the time for clearheaded statesmanship.

Election Laws

The Election Board forgot a small provision, which is unlikely to come up at this election but may come up at several in the future. This provision is to provide for run-offs in legislative elections in case that there are more than two parties, and in the case that there is more than two candidates for any one seat.

In this microcosmic democracy at UNC, there can be a nearer perfection than can be attained in a larger system, where the cost of a run-off would be exorbitant. Here one can have a clear mandate.

Parking Meters

Gracious living in Chapel Hill is suffering another blow in favor of the coffers of the town.

The advent of parking meters is sure to bring no more beauty, and many more complaints to Chapel Hill. It will bring an extra policeman and fewer shoppers, but the town's revenue will be increased.

And while speaking of the revenue situation, a problem bears looking into. This problem is one of the revenue from all parking tickets for violations on campus going to the town, while the University is required to maintain an adequate campus police force.

Education

Sidney Dakar

Our editor has written on a subject which should be foremost in the minds of all educators and students, viz. the lack of interest by most students in the courses in our universities. This is by far the greatest obstacle which our universities face in trying to turn out thinking men. The problem is so complex that it is even difficult to state concretely. It stems from many different phases of our culture. Our culture is based upon materialistic values; so why should students who want to be a "success" worry about interest in intellectual endeavors? After all, doesn't Ted Williams, Elvis Presley and Nat King Cole make more than any intellectual? Every student can tell you of one or two men of his acquaintance who have "made good" with no more than a grade school education.

It is very alarming to see such a gross lack of interest in anything which pertains to intellectual fields. Examples are endless. Here is only one. Sunday I was looking at a TV program, a rare thing for me. Some world famous scientists were discussing the problems facing our civilization today. Almost everyone in the room didn't have the slightest interest in what was being said. Most were nervously waiting for the football game to start. (It is difficult for me to concentrate at this time; the boys have the Lone Ranger going full blast on the set down the hall.) When a student won't even passively watch an intellectual program, how can we expect him to read on his own?

Studying can be compared with one aspect of religion in that it brings joy to the people who believe in it, but leaves the unbelievers wondering how anyone could possibly get any pleasure out of that. Really, studying is very enjoyable to people who have developed an interest. It gives them a great sense of well-being to know that they are learning. The person without interest looks upon people who enjoy studying as ones who should be humored rather than emulated. This feeling is very strong in our high-schools. No real "he-man" would ever be caught dead making the highest or even near the highest grades in his class.

Most students who enter our universities are not only uninterested in their subjects; they don't even wish to become interested. Obviously there isn't much that a professor can do to change such opinions within a few short months. The other type of student has a desire to become interested, but can't seem to do so. These are the students that the professors should try to help most. Bold changes must be made in our school systems if this is what is necessary to create interest. If necessary, 75 per cent of a professor's time should be spent in creating interest and the other 25 percent reserved for presenting "facts." Learning facts alone are of minor importance except in such obvious fields as medicine and engineering.

An education is only started in a university. The major portion of an education must come after graduation. The man who graduates with only facts in his mind is not educated. He is more than likely a frustrated truck driver; he has his degree, but somehow he doesn't feel any different than he did before entering the university. The years after school should be the ones where we learn the most. Without the interest that should have been developed while in school, we will stop advancing intellectually. A man can be taught for years and still not be educated; education must come from within.

Let me urge all students to try their best to develop an interest in their studies. With an interest, the work is much easier and enjoyable. Remember, it is going to take long and hard hours, or even years, to accomplish goals of the future. All of the men who have made great contributions to society have had an extreme interest in their work. This interest is absolutely necessary if one is to keep working after many discouragements.

I believe it was Thomas Edison who said that "there is no labor that the average person will not go to avoid the labor of thinking." Are you one of the average?

Toward Better Understanding

Gottfried O. Lang

(This is the third part of Dr. Lang's article which appeared in Commonweal last week.)

Another American trait that strongly colors our relationships with other peoples is the particular form of individualism which we believe in. To us, an individual has the right to express himself as he sees fit, to get ahead, to do what he wants to do and, through this individual effort, to achieve success. In fact, our society richly rewards those who exercise a high degree of this sort of individualism. But this is not true for every society, and to assume that it is can lead to disastrous consequences.

There is the famous anthropological example of the missionaries who brought the technically superior and efficient steel axes to the Stone Age natives of Australia. The giving of steel axes for cutting firewood to man, woman and child, in complete disregard for the established social order, had a devastating effect upon these people. In the past the stone axe had served to regulate social relationships through a pattern wherein all tribal members borrowed the axes from the old men in authority. Everyone had to cut firewood, but in this gerontocracy the old men owned the axes and gave them out. Not knowing the social function of the stone axe, the missionary quite inadvertently contributed to the downfall of the social and ultimately the moral order before he could substitute something in its place, simply by distributing a "helpful" tool.

There are many similar examples in anthropological literature, showing cases in which our brand of individualism has been thrust upon a functioning society and has contributed toward a tragic disorganization of social life. In spite of all good will, technological projects are going to be resented when people feel that the innovation poses a threat to their own system of social security, based on interpersonal and reciprocal relationships.

Then there is our tendency to pass moral judgment on other peoples, which may obscure the functions of their cultural patterns and institutions. In East Africa, for instance, certain societies still practice polygamy. To us, who consider the monogamous family as morally rigid and "natural," this appears as simply an immoral practice. Yet we fail to understand that this ancient form of the family, where a man is married to many wives, has important sociological functions.

In these societies, having several wives means economic security, because each wife, together with her children, is a productive unit. In addition, by having several wives a man is tied closely to many other families by marriage. These ties are not only emotionally significant but are maintained by social sanctions. Through the instiution of bride price, for example, the family of the wife is assured good treatment of their daughter, or else the husband will forfeit the wife and the price also.

With tribal peoples who have weak central governments, the larger extended family binds a social unit together through these marriage ties and through mutual obligations within the extended family. Thus an attempt to outlaw polygamy, without first substituting some other institution which will take over its functions, may have devastating effects upon the people concerned. Furthermore, an unsympathetic attack on any central social institution suggests a contempt for that institution, which jeopardizes mutual understanding and communication, if it does not create outright hostility toward us.

Another serious difficulty arises out of a cynical type of moralizing that is not too infrequent among us. The cynically righteous may note, for instance, that people in positions of authority, especially in newly independent countries, have reached that position apparently through manipulating people, accepting presents, and so on. On closer inspection it may turn out that the "manipulation" of people is a customary social relationship based on the superiority of and deference due title-holders and people in positions of authority; while the "favoritism" is merely the fulfillment of obligations demanded by kinship; and the "'bribery" is the exchange of gifts associated with social relationships.

All peoples have moral standards, although they may be variable. We must recognize that variance of standards does not mean laxity, that under given conditions the seemingly easy standards may be more rigorous and demanding than some of our own. The point that needs to be made here is simply that judgment of other people must be made in the context of their culture. As long as we continue to judge others by our standards, we will fail to understand them.

Because our Western approach is often systematic, we tend to deal with large and complex social and cultural problems by attacking one facet of the question at a time, neglecting the remaining problems for the time being. That this has tragic consequences in so-called underdeveloped countries has many times been demonstrated.

Letters From Olympus

We have talked with many students lately, who, through a desire to live, study and entertain off campus, have rented apartments around town. Some of them were satisfied, some of them were not, but in the course of discussion, several problems came to light.

The landlords in Chapel Hill are working in a seller's market, and many of them do not hesitate to take advantage of this. Although some of them charge unreasonable rates, this is not our protest. We protest the conditions of the apartments, and the terms by which a student must rent.

Mr. Creech's apartments on Rosemary Street are inadequately heated for the winter, they are fire traps in other seasons, and the wood and furniture are breeding places for fleas and other insects.

Mr. Basnight, whose apartments are on the corner of Henderson and Rosemary Streets, requires the tenant to deposit a certain amount of money, in addition to his rent, against his breaking a year-long lease, which the tenant must sign in order to rent the apartment. Also, another deposit is required, which is held against any damages to the apartment that might occur during the year. On the surface, this seems to be a fair arrangement, but it is not. While it is legal, because both parties agree to the terms, it is highly unethical and strives to exploit the tenant, usually a student. The landlord has control over a great deal of the student's money, and, in any dispute over the conditions in which the money will be refunded to the student, the student is forced to take the initiative. An hypothetical situation, in other words, is this: The landlord claims that either there are damages to the apartment, to which the student does not agree, or that certain terms of the lease are not fulfilled, to which the student does not agree, and the landlord refuses to refund a certain amount of the money. He is depending on the student's attitude in cooperating, through inexperience, or he is depending on the students inability, financially, to take the case to court.

What, then, can be done? The Student Affairs Office can advise the student and discuss the situation directly with the landlord, but it cannot initiate legal proceedings on behalf of the student, who is, in effect, helpless before either the animosity or generosity of the landlord.

We do not mean to say that all landlords in Chapel Hill do their best to exploit the students, but this is the practice of far too many.

If any student wishes to move into an apartment, which has many obvious advantages, he should make sure, beforehand, that he will not lose more than he will gain. He should investigate the situation as thoroughly as he can. As long as there are people to be taken advantage of, there are people to take advantage—C.L.

The communications system at the University of N. C. is grossly inadequate when conditions are normal. There is usually one telephone serving a dormitory floor. This is generally in use during the evening hours and when it is free its incessant ringing is a plague to those living nearby whose responsibility it is to answer it. To be able to use the phone after six o'clock requires a good half hour's waiting in line and then the desired number is often busy because of similar conditions at the other end.

To add to this already trying situation, a wave of vandalism has now entered upon Cobb dormitory. The number of telephones here has dwindled from an insufficient eight to a meager two as the result of malicious and wanton destruction. Four hundred men have difficulty enough with eight telephones. Two are impossible. I have recently been assured that after much persuasion the Chapel Hill Telephone Company, owned by the University incidentally, has agreed to repair them one last time. But this will leave us with the same problem, namely, insufficient service and no guarantee that the phones will not be destroyed again since the vandals have not been apprehended.

It is clear that the authorities can do nothing about this vandalism. But much can be done to improve the phone system: (1) more public phones should be installed; (2) a central switchboard can be installed; (3) private phones should be permitted for those who wish to undertake the expense of installation and maintenance.

Thus we have those possibilities before us, any one of which would be an improvement on the status quo, all of which should be adopted. It is my hope that this letter will receive the attention of the proper authorities and that they will rectify the situation with appropriate action. I would also urge them to remember that the University population should not have to suffer from the vandalism of a few.

It seems to us that we have listened to enough of this pious bigotry from the advocates of the W. C. T. U. on this campus.

The famed "Carolina Spirit" is completely non-existent. Carter Jones is noisy enough, but one man cannot shout down 1000 fanatical Wake Forest students, as was proved last week.

At the last three games we have sat in three different parts of the "rooting" section and we have yet to see anyone speak above conversational tones, expect a very few people, drunk or sober, who are still proud of their football team.

If it takes a drunk to put some life into the closemouthed "fans" sitting in the stands with their hands folded, let's have more drunks!

We are not trying to advocate that every Carolina Gentleman go completely out of his mind on Saturday afternoon. However, we are trying to say that if it takes a little liquid inspiration to make a man with an original "spirit-raiser" thaw those frozen fish, vive la inspiration!

Let's have more ad libs from the stands—and better still, let's get out of this rut of silence, even if we have to make Kenan Stadium one big cocktail party.

Out Of Joint

March Wind

When news came that he had won this year's Nobel Prize for literature Boris Pasternak left his home on the outskirts of Moscow to take a walk in the rain. It was a typical gesture. In the climactic moment of his life he did not feel the need or the desire to consult with a cultural commissar. Rather, he walked alone in the rain with his God.

The presence of this great man within the Soviet Union is living proof of the indestructability of the human spirit. I am reminded of the time, shortly after the 1917 Revolution, when Leon Trotsky addressed a group of Russian Moslems, speaking of their faith in these casual and arrogant terms: "In 25 years you will have forgotten all this nonsense." If the good Doctor Zhivago had been in Trotsky's audience that day he would have nodded his head sadly and wisely, at this further proof of Bolshevik immaturity and spiritual disorder.

It is now more than 25 years since the revolution; to be precise it is 41 years. There are still millions of Moslems, millions of Jews and millions of Russian Orthodox faith within Soviet borders. These millions of Soviet citizens have hung on to their resepctive faiths with a tenacity that must give the Politburo many sleepless nights. These millions have kept their religious beliefs relatively intact in spite of the most vigorous atheist propaganda in all of recorded history.

Perphas a couple of simple anecdotes will serve to illumnine l'affaire Pasternak and the awful dilemna which faces the Communist elite.

In the early 1930's, Andre Malraux, now a prominent DeGaulle supporter but at that time a left-winger, went to Moscow to attend a writer's congress. After listening to interminable lectures on the glory of the Socialist State and the joys experienced by the "New Socialist Man," Malraux got up to ask a very dangerous question. He asked: "What happens in a socialist society when a pretty girl is run over by a streetcar?"

Underlying Malraux's heretical question was a sense of the inevitable tragedy of life, a tragedy which can only be redeemed in eternity.

Pandemonium broke out on the floor of the writers' congress and the commissars on stage hastily adjourned the meeting to go into private conference. At last they reappeared, and pushed old Maxim Gorky into the limelight to give the official answer to Malraux's question. That answer was this: "In a socialist society pretty girls do not get run over by streetcars."

More than 20 years later, when a certain relaxation swept through the Soviet Union and the satellites after the death of Stalin, Malraux's question was repeated, this time by a Polish poet in the form of a statement. In his "Poem for Adults." Adam Wazik wrote: "They ran to us shouting:/Under socialism a cut finger does not hurt. /They cut their finger/They felt pain/They lost their faith."

Certainly, it is possible for a socialist society to eliminate many of the inequities of modern life. But a socialist society cannot eliminate tragedy, cannot change either the nature of man or man's destiny. Under socialism, pretty girls will from time to time be run over by streetcars while other members of the citizenry will cut their fingers and feel pain. These are the eternal verities and it was with these same eternal verities that Boris Pasternak was and is concerned.

Finally, there are two major lessons for America in l'affaire Pasternak. Lesson number one is that this is no occasion for American smugness towards "godless Russian materialism." Pasternak is an archetypal son of Mother Russia, not the coca-colonized U.S.A. All of our intellectuals put together don't have the raw spiritual power of this one tough Russian. And the fact that Pasternak is now reviled in his own land is of no consequence. He is more Russian than his persecutors.

Lesson number two is concerned with the myth of the monolithic totalitarian state. Upon close inspection these states are always seen to be considerably less than monolithic. Right now, while you read these words, the great and powerful leaders of Soviet Communism are afraid of Old Man Pasternak walking in the rain.

On Officers

Frank Elkins

This summer I had the good fortune to attend the National Student Congress. For one month, I talked to student leaders from all parts of the United States. There, in Ohio, was a forum where students met to discuss the vast problems facing students of the United States: desegregation, the problem of acquiring new teachers, the problem of bettering the college curriculum, the problem of bettering counseling systems, honor systems, insuring academic freedom, etc. I was inspired to find so many student leaders interested in these problems.

So now, back at UNC, I find student leaders in the midst of endless chatter and quarrels about who will hold CLASS OFFICES at UNC this year — meaningless, functionless, pointless offices, whose only function will be to fill 250 dollars worth of paper in the Yackety-Yack — this $250 being supplied by the student body out of their student fees.

I see no function for class officers at UNC. I see, however, a vast need for capable students in jobs already created. If you think your man is such a deserving and capable person, why don't you direct him to the office of Mr. Don Furtado, Student Body President, who without a doubt can give him a wide choice of areas in which he can be an effective, honest, channelled contributor to the cause of good student government.

If, however, you insist on having class officers; then since their only function will be that of posing for a picture, then lets hold a series of "beauty" contests and get people who are really cut out for this type job.

I urge all conscientious students who agree with me that only those officers designed to meet a definite need on campus deserve a vote — I urge you to join me in giving a write-in vote to Good Ole Charlie Brown!!

Suspension Plan Rejected

LONDON—(AP)—The Soviet Union Thursday night rejected American-British proposals for a one-year suspension of nuclear weapon tests as absolutely unacceptable.

A statement broadcast by Moscow Radio said Russia "demands the immediate and universal cessation for all time of nuclear weapon tests."

The statement was issued immediately after the Soviet government sent notes to the United States and Britain concerning the three-power talks on nuclear test suspension due to start in Geneva today.

The Russians accused the American and British of suggesting the one-year test suspension to the effect after they had pushed through a test firing program.

The statement repeated a Soviet warning earlier this week, reserving the right to continue testing Russian weapons on a bomb-for-bomb basis with the West.

The Moscow statement said that if America and Britain agree to a permanent ban on tests the U.S.S.R. will cease its own testing "irrespective even of the fact that the Soviet Union has carried out fewer experimental tests."

The Soviets described as "absurd" allegations that the U.S.S.R. is lagging behind the West in nuclear techniques and therefore has lost interest in halting tests. A Tass News Agency summary of the Soviet statement said:

"The Soviet government demands the immediate and universal cessation for all time of nuclear weapon tests and states that any further delay in the solution of this problem creates more and more additional difficulties for an agreement on this point among the powers.

UNACCEPTABLE

"The Soviet government regards the proposal by U.S. and British governments for a one-year suspension of tests as absolutely unacceptable and rejects it categorically.

"By making such a proposal after hurriedly carrying out the most extensive series of tests so far, the U.S.A. and Britain obviously aim at obtaining a one-sided military advantage over the Soviet Union.

"The actions of the western powers give the Soviet Union the complete right to continue making experimental explosions at the rate of one to one in relation to the combined number of explosions being carried out in the U.S.A. and Great Britain until the number of explosions carried out by the Soviet Union after the resumption of its tests equals the number of nuclear explosions carried out by these powers since March, 1958."

U.S. Intends To Go Ahead With Own Ban

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The United States intends to go ahead with a one-year ban on nuclear weapons tests beginning today — unless Russia carries out another nuclear test, the State Department said Thursday.

The Department made clear the government's position in commenting on Russia's rejection of the one-year suspension proposed by the United States and Britain.

At the same time, the State Department charged the Soviet government with "inconsistencies" in rejecting the proposed one-year ban.

Jaywalking was costly in the U.S. last year—2,600 were killed.

Smoking Not Permitted At Dance Here Today

Smoking, drinking and other misconduct will not be permitted at the fall Germans concert and dance today.

According to Charles Coley, chairman of the Dance Committee, "Doormen will not let anyone who is intoxicated enter either the dance or the concert. And there will be no smoking in either the concert or the dance."

He also said that anyone giving false identification when confronted by dance committeemen or doormen, or bringing intoxicating beverages on the dance floor or into the concert auditorium will be suspended indefinitely from attending all dances.

Drinking or other misconduct shall be dealt with at the discretion of the University Dance Committee.

The purpose of having the Dance Committee and the rules is to insure the proper atmosphere for all to enjoy the concert and dances, Coley said.

"Both the Germans Club and the Dance Committee will appreciate your co-operation to make this Germans weekend a good one," he said.

Sound And Fury Scripts Needed; Contest Is On

A campuswide contest for Sound and Fury scripts was decided upon by the Graham Memorial Board of Directors at their meeting yesterday in the Grail Room.

The scripts are to be submitted to a committee for judging. If a suitable one is found, a prize of $50 will be awarded the author.

Other business included a letter from the Chairman of the Board of Higher Education saying that they would consider a request to include the Student Union in the bond issue.

Keller To Give Canticle Talks

Dr. John Esten Keller, professor in the UNC Dept. of Romance Languages, will deliver lectures next week at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and at the Whithall Pavillion of the Library of Congress.

On Tuesday he will give a second talk on the Canticles at the Whithall Pavilion of the Library of Congress under the sponsorship of the Hispanic Foundation and the Spanish Embassy.

COLOR SLIDES

Dr. Keller will use a set of color slides, the only ones of their kind in existence, to illustrate his lectures. The slides were made for the University by special permission of the Spanish government and the ecclesiastical authorities of the Escorial Monastery outside Madrid where the original manuscript is kept.

To illustrate the actual music of the Canticles, Dr. Keller will play phonographic recordings of some of the songs sung in the original Portuguese by Dr. U. T. Holmes Jr. of the University's Dept. of Romance Languages.

THE DRESS PARADE

In all my years of observing coed fashions—and I have been arrested many times—I have never seen such verve, such dash, such Je ne sais quoi as can be found in this year's styles!

I am particularly enchanted by the new "baby waist" dresses which so many of you girls are favoring this season. How demure you all look in your "baby waists"! How sweet! How innocent! How colorful when your housemother lifts you up and purge you after dinner!

Another trend that leaves me limp with rapture is the oversized handbag. Goodbye to dinky little purses that hold nothing at all! Hurrah for today's sensibly sized bag with plenty of room for your makeup, your pens and pencils, your shelter half, your Slinky toy, your MG, and your Marlboros.

Did I say Marlboros? Certainly I said Marlboros. What girl can consider herself in the van, in the swim, and in the know, if she doesn't smoke Marlboros? What man, for that matter. Do you want a filter that is truly new, genuinely advanced, but at the same time, does not rob you of the full flavor of first-rate tobacco? Then get Marlboro. Also get matches because the pleasure you derive from a Marlboro is necessarily limited if unlit.

To return to coed fashions, let us now discuss footwear. The popular flat shoe was introduced several years ago when it became obvious that girls were growing taller than boys. For a while the flat shoes kept the sexes in a state of uneasy balance, but today they will no longer serve. Now, even in flats, girls are towering over their dates, for the feminine growth rate has continued to rise with disturbing speed. In fact, it is now thought possible that we will see fifteen-foot girls in our lifetime.

But science is working on the problem, and I feel sure American know-how will find an answer. Meanwhile, a temporary measure is available—the reverse wedgie.

The reverse wedgie is simply a wedgie turned around. This tilts a girl backward at a 45 degree angle and cuts as much as three feet off her height. It is, of course, impossible to walk in this position unless you have support, so your date will have to keep his arm around your waist at all times. This will tire him out in fairly short order; therefore you must constantly give him encouragement. Keep looking up at him and batting your lashes and repeating in awed tones, "How strong you are, Shorty!"

Next we turn to hair styling. The hair-do this year is definitely the cloche-coif. One sees very few crew cuts or Irene Castle bobs, and the new Mohican cut seems not to have caught on at all. In fact, I saw only one girl with a Mohican—Rhodelle H. Sigafoos, a sophomore of Bennington. Her classmates laughed and laughed at her, but it was Rhodelle who had the last laugh, for one night a dark, handsome stranger leaped from behind a birch and linked his arm in Rhodelle's and said, "I am Uncas, the last of the Mohicans—but I need not be the last, dear lady, if you will but be my wife." Today they are happily married and run a candied-apple stand near Macon, Ga., and have three little Mohicans named Patti, Maxine, and Laverne.

Tar Babies Meet Undefeated Maryland At Kenan Stadium

Terps Seek Revenge For Last Year's Loss

Carolina's freshman football team makes its first, last, and only home appearance of the season this afternoon when it takes on an undefeated Maryland frosh at 2 o'clock in Kenan Stadium.

The Tar Babies will go into the game as definite underdogs, virtually like David against Goliath. The Carolina frosh have little certainty that the result will be as favorable for them as it was for David in the Bible.

Bud Carson's Tar Babies are currently sporting a 1-1 season record having beaten Virginia 29-7 before losing to Wake Forest 20-12. The Terp frosh, on the other hand, have scored a total of 89 points in their two contests to date. In their first game the Marylanders beat West Virginia 41-12; after this the Terps hung one on George Washington JV to the tune of 49-6.

"Just Plain Powerful"

"They are powerful, just plain powerful," is the way Carson sums up his opponents. The Carolina coach also said that Jim Carrington, freshman coach at Navy, had told him that the Terp frosh was the best first-year team he had ever seen.

Terrapin coach Gene Alderton has been quoted in the Daily Diamondback, Maryland's campus newspaper, as saying, "this is the finest group of freshman football players I've seen since I've been here."

Based on their first two performances all the praise about the Terps is not idle chatter. In scrimmages against the Maryland varsity the freshman have been able to hold their own, and in some cases look even better than the Saturday regulars.

Alderton Starts Heavy Team

In an effort to avenge the 14-7 loss which the Tar Babies pinned on the Terps in College Park last year, Alderton will start a team which averages better than 200 pounds per man. Although Alderton's first-string backfield is light, his line is exceptionally heavy for freshmen.

Guiding the Terrapin offense will be Dick Novak, a 5-10, 165 pounder from Uniontown, Pa. Novak is an excellent passer and has already thrown six touchdown passes. Halfbacks Jim Davidson and Dennis O'Neil both weigh in at 180 while fullback Pat Drass is ten pounds heavier.

Two of the great strengths of the Maryland team are their ends Gary Collins and Henry Poniatowski. Collins, at 6-4, does all the kicking for the team in addition to catching passes. Poniatowski, a veteran from Syracuse is a product of service football and knows his way around the game.

McMillan Moved To Right End

Carson will use practically the same lineup against Maryland that he has used in the past two games with one major exception. In today's contest Benton McMillan will start at left end instead of right guard.

Carolina Booters Face Emory University Here Today

By JIM PURKS

Carolina's varsity soccer team will go after its fourth victory of the season today when it faces a team from Emory University here at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

For the Tar Heels, Emory represents a new foe as soccer was only adopted recently there as a school sport.

Thompson At Center Forward

Going for the Tar Heels on offense will be center forward Mike Thompson, who has scored eight of the team's twelve goals so far this season, flanked by Joe Perkins at left forward and John Ghanim at right forward.

Both Perkins and Ghanim broke into the scoring ranks in Tuesday's contest with Pfeiffer College, booting in one goal apiece.

At right wing will be Coleman Barks, who has been a key playmaker, setting up Thompson for several goals. Rick Grausman, who also scored his first goal of the season in the Pfeiffer game, will hold down the left wing position.

Rattay Or Blount In The Goal

On defense, Coach Allen will have his three iron men at the fullback positions, with Tom Evans at right fullback, Hugh Goodman in the center, and Dave Corkey at left fullback. Jim Rattay or Marvin Blount will start at the goalie position.

At the two halfback positions, Bob Borden and Tate Robertson will alternate with Tom White and Bill Stem.

Also trophies will be awarded to the winners of each event, and here also will be a team trophy for the team scoring the most points.

All students except those on the R.O.T.C. rifle teams are eligible to participate. Those wishing to enter may do so on a individual or four-man team basis. Any students may form a team. They do not have to represent a fraternity or a dorm. However, they must enter all four events to constitute a team.

All events will begin at 2:00 p.m. and the instructors and equipment will be at the area at 1:00 p.m. Contestants may practice until the events begin.

All safety precautions will be exercised during the events, especially in those that firearms are used. The Intramural Department and Durham Wildlife Club are not responsible for any accidents.

Over 16 Million Dollars Asked By Board For Capital Improvements At Chapel Hill

FROM ASSOCIATED PRESS WIRE REPORTS

RALEIGH—More than 16 million dollars was recommended yesterday for construction and improvement at the University at Chapel Hill.

A total of $16,847,399 was asked for use on the following projects.

For 1959-61 — Reconstructions, renovations and minor additions, $1,262,000 (Includes work on physics building, chemistry labs in Venable Hall, Saunders Hall. Caldwell Hall, Murphy Hall, Phillips Hall. Major Additions, $500,000 to Swain Hall; $433,836 to Hill Hall. New Construction. $1,063,000 Geology and Geography Building; $1,470,000 Botany; $876,000 Foreign Language Building; $2,033,000 student centers; $2,100,000 dorms for 700 students. (Grand total for 1959-61 is $9,749,836.)

For 1961 69 — Reconstructions, renovations and minor additions, $1,436,563 (Includes work on Playmakers Theatre, Bynum Hall. New East, front section of Davis Hall, L. R. Wilson Library, Alumni Hall). New construction, $1,000,000 undergraduate library building; $3,900,000 dorm for 1,300 new students; $481,000 cafeteria; $290,000 maintenance shop and storeroom. (Grand total for 1961-69 is $7,107,563.)

The board also recommended the pro-rating of dormitories at the rate of $3,000. Previous spending for housing at Carolina has been rated at $2,500 per occupant.

Total Capital Improvements Add Up To $90 Million

RALEIGH (AP)—Capital improvements totaling nearly 90 million dollars were recommended yesterday by the State Board of Higher Education to meet the minimum needs of sate-supported colleges during the 1959-69 decade.

The Board has recommended that the improvements be financed by a bond issue to be voted on by the people. This would have to be approved by the Advisory Budget Commission and the 1959 Legislature.

In discussing the recommendations, Dr. J. Harris Purks, Director of Higher Education, said the board was not suggesting the amount of the proposed bond issue but that it was acting on the assumption tha a bond issue for the capital improvements program at the education institutions is ineviable.

72,000 Enrollment Expected

Projected figures show that a minimum enrollment of 72.000 is expected in public and private colleges in the state in 1961-70, the board said in its recommendations to the budget commission. This compares with an enrollment of 56,000 last school year.

The board recommended capital improvements totaling $89,819,369. Of this, $36,626,306 is requeqsted for the next biennium, 1959-61. The remaining $53,293,063 would be spread over the remaining eight years.

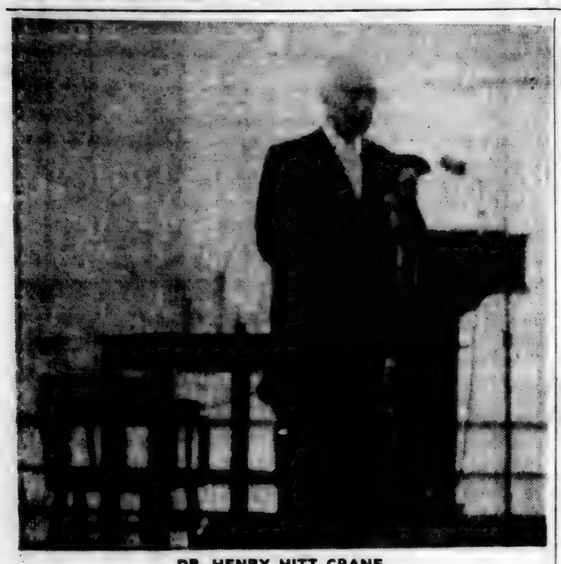
The overall expenditures could be cut by $11,625,000, the board said, "if dormitories are one-half self-liquidated."

New construction during the 10-year period would amount to $56,149,500. Broken down, it includes: $23,850,000 for dormitories, $22,383,500 for teaching and educational facilities, $4,651,500 for student centers, and $5,264,500 for other new construction.

State Gets Biggest Chunk

A total of $47,443,399 would go to the Consolidated University of North Carolina, with the biggest chunk, $18,164,600, to North Carolina State College. A total of $16,847,399 would go to the University at Chapel Hill, $6,106,000 to the Division of Health Affairs, $4,451,000 to Woman's College, and $1,874,300 to the Agricultural Experiment Station.

The board recommended that improvements at community colleges during the decade: Asheville-Biltmore College, $1,125,000; Charlotte Community College System, $3,325,0000 Wilmington College, $1,050,000 and 3½ million for new community colleges and agricultural technical institutes.



DR. HENRY HITT CRANE
. . . Carolina Forum feature

'Deadly Delusions Damn Us' — Crane

By CHUCK FLINNER

"We are victimized by delusions," said Henry Hitt Crane last night in the first Carolina Forum presentation.

"We believe that physical power is indispensible while it actually threatens us," he said in his talk on "The Fate We Face."

The Methodist minister, one of the organizers of the Sane Nuclear Policy Committee, offered three alternatives. The first one embodied the possibility of reverting to a subhuman situation that could be brought about by a nuclear war. In such a condition, he said, men would not prove who was right or wrong, but who was left. World War III, if nuclear weapons would be used, would revert man to a savage state.

Man's basic concept in religion holds to the belief that at least there would always be a remnant left to rebuild. Those left would be of three types; the moral heros, willing to die but not destory, the moral degenerates, those who would exploit the situation for self-seeking, and the majority who would away with the crowd.

Dr. Crane's second alternative was one of 'progress." At this point Crane attacked the American "policy of militarism." He pointed out that the President had said that we must devote our efforts to being a moral force. "No one pays any attention to this—not even the President," Crane said.

Using power to out scare the others is insanity. "Is anything worse than universal suicide?" At our period of peak power, Crane claimed, we lost many of our foreign friends. He declared that the militarism which we strove to fight in two World Wars has become the very philosophy by which we operate.

The third alternative offered by Crane was one of spiritual "egress." The way to peace he said was through faith, love, good will and friendship. Building for wars does not make peace.

"The power we posses is utterly irreralent to the power we profess." If goals cannot be achieved by the power we posses then the power is worthless.

Dr. Crane also revealed advertise ment to be published today in Russia, the United Kingdom and the United States.

East African Administrator Visits Campus

The registrar of an East African college is visiting Carolina as a part of a tour of the United States and Canada.

Paul Vowles, registrar of Makerere College, the University College of East Africa, Kampala, Uganda, is making the tour to learn the general picture of the different kinds of university governments and organization, student residential life and systems of runnings halls of residence.

Vowles is also aequainting himself with centers of African studies and persons engaged in research on African problems.

He is making the three-month tour under a grant from the Carnegie Foundation of New York. After attending the Congress of the Association of Universities of the British Commonwealth in Montreal, he will study higher education and university administration.

Vowles was born in England and attended the Open Classical Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He has an M.A. degree from Oxford.

In his position as registrar he is responsible for academic administration and formulation of development policy for the University college.

Beauty Editors' Problem: Selecting Queen & Court

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Yack beauty editors, Don Millen and Hariette Dwelle, are lacking this . . . a beauty queen and her court. To solve this problem the Yack is holding its annual contest to determine who will be the Yack Queen and the members of the court.

The winner will be crowned by Diana Johnson, last year's queen, Tuesday, Nov. 11 at 7 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Each organization on campus is allowed to enter six contestents. There is an entry fee of $5 and the entries must be turned in to the beauty editors by Nov. 4.

Judges for the contest will be Jerry Ball, judge of the Miss North Carolina and Miss South Carolina contests; Kimp Stagg, former Miss South Carolina; Dr. James King of the UNC History Department and Mrs. William B. Aycock. The master of ceremonies will be Ty Boyd.

Entries that have already been turned in are: For Pi Kappa Alpha, Sue Wood, Clair Hanner, Dickie Robinson, Sally Wade nad Linda Watkins; for Phi Delta Theta, Kathy Fulenwide, Kathy Davis, Nancy Atkinson, Frances Wyatt and Mary Margaret Durham;

For Alpha Gamma Delta, Sandy Dickerson, Frances Morrow and Jo Hardin; for Kappa Delta, Barbara Meitzler, Barbara Peitsch, Addy Wright, Milissa Osborne, Louise Crumbley and Doddie Waldman.

Grant Of Gigantic Brain Is Officially Announced

By CHUCK FLINNER

The grant of a Univac 1105 Data Automation System to the University of North Carolina was formally announced yesterday at a luncheon in the Morehead Planearium.

Governor Luther H. Hodges and William C. Friday, president of the Consolidated University, hosted officials from the U. S. Bureau of Census, the National Science Foundation and Remington-Rand in the announcement luncheon.

Some of the uses and possibilities ofthe computer system which is of the largest and most versatile design were explained.

After the invocation by Robert B. House, chancellor emeritus of UNC and greetings given by Gov. Hodges, Robert B. Brode, associate director of the National Science Foundation, Robert W. Burgess, director of the Bureau of Census and Howard T. Egnstrom, vice president of Remington Rand, remarked on their positions in regard to the new computer system.

The National Science Foundation granted a half-million dollars to UNC for the purchase of the Univac 1105. This grant was the first in a series panned by the foundation to assist in the establishment of computer centers in distributed regional areas throughout the nation. The foundation grant is designed to permit the use of the computer center in fields of basic research.

The Sperry Rand Corporation will contribute half of the cost of the machine and the Census Bureau has contracted for computer time for the purpose of computing the 1960 census and other evaluations in peak census periods. The state of North Carolina will support and maintain the operation.

The Bureau of Census will utilize the computing systems of The Univac 1105's of UNC and the Illinois Institute of Technology along with the systems already in use by the Census Bureau. Two-thirds of the productive time will be made available to the bureau during the period of peak work load.

In addition to the proposed uses ofthe computer system the Office of Civil and Defence Mobilization "is glad to see UNC become equipped to assist" in the event of a national emergency. Burke Horton of the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization pointed uot that the computer and its staff may "help to save our civilization," in the event of a nuclear attack.

Computers as the 1105 can be utilized to pinpoint precise locations of factories, rail yards, bridges, population and air fields, he said. Following an attack the computer could assist in planning survival and controlling resources.

The UNC system will serve chiefly for general researcr. The computer laboratory at Chapel Hill will service the needs of the North Carolina research center which includes Wake Forest College, North Carolina State College and Duke University, as well as UNC.

The applications of the Univac 1105 in the field of business include: sales analysis, production control, labor distribution, cost control, payrolls, budgets, billing, purchasing, banking operations, inventory control and others.

The scientific applications include: pilot plant operations, processes such as blending liquids, designs for components and complete machines and utilizing equations in engineering and research.

Other uses range from predicting weather to translating languages. The binary system utilized by the 1105 involves the use of only two numbers, one and zero. In he case of a language a word is given a number or a series of numbers and is stored in the memory. The Univac "vocabulary" is approximately 41,000 words. Similar systems have been used in predicting the outcome of elections long before the results are tabulated.

Members of the faculty of UNC who have already had training at computer centers are Prof. Daniel O. Price, director of the Institute for Research in Social Science, and Prof. Rasha Fein of the School of Business Administration. Price studied programming and other operations at M. I. T. and Fein worked with computer experts at the University of Pennsylvania and the Bureau of Census.

Yack Policy And Jury System Bills Spur Long Debate In Legislature

By STAN FISHER

Bills proposing a definite policy in publishing the Yackety Yack and a revision in the present system of selecting Honor Council jurors met strong opposition in Student Legislature Thursday night.

The bill to establish a definite policy in student government publication of the Yackety Yack (John Brooks, SP) came before the body with revised articles, but was sent back into committee pending more complete investigation of its financial implications.

A bill proposing changes in the present system of selecting jurors for the Honor Council (Gary Greer, SP) met stiff debate as it came before the legislators after a two-week stay in the Ways and Means Committee. Debate was continued on this bill uniti next week.

John Brooks in his address to the group in behalf of his bill concerning the Yackety Yack pointed out that some organizations did not get into the Yack under the present arrangement. Brooks noted that the main importance of the Yack was to record student activities since the university maintained no other record of a student's outside activities.

Under Brooks' bill changes for the yearbook would be:

(1) Student government would pay for the entire cost of publication minus the book's regular income and costs incurred by organizations indirectly connected with student government;

(2) Student government would appropriate $3,700 from the general surplus for refunds to those organizations already having space in the 1958-59 Yack;

(3) Any sum of this amount not so used will go back to the general surplus, and

(4) The policy stated in the first article of the bill would become effective for the 1959-60 Yack, with the submission of the Publication Board's report to the Budget Committee.

Charlie Gray (UP), student body treasurer, objected to the bill on the grounds that the present financial status of the general surplus in the budget was not such that allotment of the proposed sums would be a good idea.

Erwin Fuller (SP), directed questions to Gray on why such an appropriation would not be wise with $50,000 available on demand in the Student Activities fund.

Gray replied that he was not prepared to discuss the balance in the Student Activities fund, but would be glad to investigate further and make a more complete report later.

The bill was sent back to committee after discussion centering around the investment funds in the Student Activities fund.

Before the assembly moved into debate on Greer's proposed changes in methods of selecting Honor Council jurors, Dave Biren (UP) moved that speakers on the bill be limited to five minutes speaking time. The motion passed.

Greer in speaking for his bill pointed out that his proposal would eliminate permanent jurors on the council and would draw upon the entire student body for jury duty.

In answering questions directed to him by various members of the body Greer said that he thought student interest and participation would be increased by enactment of his proposal. In Greer's opinion student interest can not be measured by signing up for an interview and having a name on a list for honor Council jury service.

A motion by Rudy Edwards (SP) to consider the proposal article by article was approved.

Article I of the proposal abolishing permanent jurors on the Honor Council was approved by the Legislature.

Dave Biren (UP) assumed tre rostrum and spoke against Article II of the proposal, which would abolish the present interview of jurors and put selection on a random selection system much like that used in civil courts.

Biren said Article II was set up fine but now has no function. Biren

Exaggeration is fine in its place, but sometimes exaggeration can be carried too far, and it is probable that this writer carried an exaggeration too far when an editorial on an editorial by the Charlotte Observer was written this week.

The Observer editorial brought out the fact that Hyman Rickover, who just received a promotion, deserved the promotion, although he would not be any man's description of a nice guy, and that he was both an egghead and Jewish. This writer reacted to the editorial in terms of what might be "anti-semitism" in the editorial, or at least what could create the appearance of anti-semitism" to the reader.

While a certain amount of guilt the Observer does possess, it is not to the extent that someone should be fired or that an apology should be given. What was necessary was a clarification, for the wording could be subjected to a variety of interpretation, one of which was taken too strongly here.

The primary problem is one of words. Words are loaded things. They create reactions, and many times the reaction that words give are not the reaction intended by the writer, hence this places a grave responsibility on the writer to be selective.

The editorial in this paper was guilty of using the words too strongly—such as "run his character into the ground," "should be fired," and Apology..

The Observer's fallacy was more subtle. The use of words such as "Jewish," "Egghead," and something amounting to uncooperative, will bring a negative reaction by people to the person in question; and even if the Observer did ultimately praise Rickover's achievement, one cannot erase the negative effects of the wording.

To the many, the mere mention of the word "Jewish," "Communist," "Intellectual," and many others will draw negative reaction.

The point to be gotten across is that what men should be looking for is that day when people are judged not by their religion, race, or personality characteristics, but by what they think and do, and to bring these factors into the editorial, the Observer did a certain amount of disservice to this goal—almost as much disservice as the editorial in The Daily Tar Heel did to making the point clear.

Words must be used with care. They can be dynamite.

Standards

The Standards Committee suggested by Nancy Adams can be a good thing or it can be something truly detrimental.

If it is constituted as a discussion group in which students are encouraged to participate and think of moral values, it can be a wonderful thing.

If it is an Emily Post etiquette group, it will be detrimental.

If it sets up standards for a lady, it can not only be detrimental, but would undermine the entire atmosphere for individual freedom which pervades on this campus.

If it would point out to the Honor Council people who exhibit what the Committee considers unladylike conduct, then it would again be a harmful instrument, especially if placed in the hands of those who think in terms of bermuda shorts and smoking on Franklin Street.

The purpose had better be outlined clearly, limitations had better be set, and individual members scrutinized for their diversity of views rather than their similarity, before the campus can accept it.

It can be beneficial, but one can only wait to see whether the idea has merit at all.

Legislature Meet

The action of the Student Legislature is commendable, when it eliminated permanent jurors in the Greer bill on jury revision.

Honor Council Chairman Hugh Patterson is to be commended for his assistance in eliminating the permanent jurors. It can only be hoped that he does not use this as a bargaining point against the principle reflected in the rest of the bill.

Another thing to be commended in the meeting Thursday was Erwin Fuller's speech dispelling certain misconceptions in the minds of some people who ought to know better regarding the general surplus.

The action of the legislature in returning the bill to committee was another incidence of party line voting in which the courage to act was not present.

In the expected climax to one of the most stirring literary furors of recent times, Russian author Boris Pasternak turned down the $41,420 Nobel Literature Prize. A distinguished poet and translator, Pasternak has been verbally crucified by the Russian press since his selection for the award was announced Saturday.

Although the book was first published in 1956 by an Italian printer, it escaped recognition by Communist critics until this week. Then, a blast from Literary Gazette, the publication of the Soviet Union of Writers, began the ignominous trend.

The prize presentation was decried as "an act against the Soviet nation," and aimed against the Soviet government and the ideas of "all the Soviet people." Internally, the work was rejected as "traistically squalid, malicious, and replete with the hatred of Socialism."

Under such pressurized attacks and threats of more serious ones, Pasternak was forced to reconsider his humble acceptance of the famed honor. "Because of the meaning attributed to this award in the society I live in, I ought to say no thanks to the unique prize awarded me," he said. "Do not take my voluntary refusal with any ill will." Voluntary, yet.

Despite the fact the Mr. Pasternak was under severe Socialistic restrictions, his novel dealt with a man whose ideas were refined only his own mind and spirit—an individualist. Russian rejection of this remarkable saga indicates once again that country's denial of man's right to live and to work according to his particular tastes and inclinations.

Even more unfortunate is the fact that the great masses of American people are blindly progressing to such a fate. The man in the grey flannel suit, like millions of other men in similar attire, resides in his little suburban semi-duplex, identical to millions of other floor plans, does his shopping on weekends at the supermarket, buys a new car he can't afford, is in debt up to his neck from time-payment plans—and millions of others gaily emulate him. His children join gangs and cliques, whose rules are more stringent than those of their elders, and whose tolerance of outsiders is nil.

The individual is thwarted by the all-powerful Group. This omnipotent monster governs all actions, thoughts, ideas. Anything contrary to his dictates is met by scorn, spite, and aversion. "What will the others think?" reads the all-inclusive code of morality and manners. Personality and development must meet strict prescribed standards. Diversion is an act of courage.

At this point, it would be easy to denounce the "common" man and leave him to his fate. Perhaps, however, he may heed the memorable example of Pasternak, notwithstanding a token or feat, in considering how the vitality of the human spirit is being obliterated by standardization in human disposition.

Speaking of his novel Doctor Zhivago, Boris Pasternak told a visitor to his Russian home: "I said to myself, you must stand up straight before your own name."

An ideal remark, Mr. Pasternak. Let us hope the pen is mightier than the Group.

United States Propaganda Found Lacking

Chuck Flinner

The United States Information Service has unquestionably done a good job in the field of propaganda. However, the criterion of the good job has been an American standard. Herein lies in the fallacy of the efforts of the agency.

The criterion of propaganda effectiveness should come from those people for which it is designed. American Democracy is far from the democracy of the ancient Greeks who originated it. By the same token American Democracy is far different from the concepts of democracy held by the people of other nations. This is not to say the U. S. is wrong, or that the other nations are wrong, but merely to point out that here are variations. These differences in concepts must be acknowledged and each nation toward which American propaganda is aimed should receive an approach fitting to that nation's views.

We can not sell a Moslem on the values of democracy by telling him that democracy must be good because it embodies Christian principles.

The Russian equivalent of Madison Avenue ad men on the international level is outselling our own experts. The thing they are using to whip us is knowledge. They practically give it away. One of the biggest complaints directed against the U. S. is the lack of scientific and other types of publications at a reasonable price. Publications provide a harbor for the searching minds of our European and Eastern neighbors.

Russia has leaped on this apparently insignificant fact. They are publishing and selling books which hack away the friends of America. American books are available, but they are costly. Even few Americans can afford the English versions of some of the scientific publications. But Americans can depend on libraries. The foreigner seldom has a library as complete as the American libraries are.

Russia produces books cheaply. They use a poor paper and poor type. The bindings will not hold up. But the words are no less valuable.

As an example, Russia made available at the recent World's Fair a large variety of material printed in various languages. The material covered fields from the children's books to the light fiction about life on collective farms, and from the Stalin correspondence of the Second World War to the Pavlov experiments. The correspondence between Stalin and Churchill, Roosevelt, and Truman was printed in Moscow in 1957 in English. The two volumes are a fraction of the cost of a novel printed in the U. S. The correspondence has yet to be printed in either Britain of the U. S. in its entirity. Another book available was an economic geography of the Soviet Union. The printing quality of these books is terrible, maps and engravings would be laughed out of the cheapest pulp magazine in the U. S., but the material it contains has no less a value as a wedge into the minds of their readers.

We are as proud of our progress in the field of printing as we are proud of our progress in the design of automobiles. However, few people outside of America can afford our quality.

The USIS might do better to distribute poorer products of the American manufacturer. At least an attempt should be made to get our side of the story across to the world as successfully as the USSR does.

On A Blazer Sale

Sidney Dakar

Several days ago there appeared in the DTH a classic example of one of the most popular types of advertisement in the U. S. There can be no doubt that this type of advertisement is highly successful. I am refering to the large front page photo of a "hero" wearing one of the latest "blazers."

In case this photo has already sunk into your subconscious mind and is doing its work, let me describe it. There hero was standing there with his chest out and had his cold, steel blue eyes turned out toward some distant horizon, which he will no doubt, conquer and add to his already impresive list of trophies. Clinging to his shoulder was a sweet little thing who seemed so humble before the hero. She had the look of an innocent little puppy who had been unjustly punished by her master and was now looking for the slightest sign of forgiveness. She only wanted a smile or even a benevolent glance from him. Such would send thrills of rapture down her delicate spine to her very marrow.

This same technique is used to sell cigarettes, suits, cars, shaving lotion or just about anything a man might use. What does the advertiser think goes on in the mind of his prospective customer? It probably goes something like this. Most normal men want to be a success with women. When the timid college man sees this hero standing there in his blazer and the woman clinging desperately to his shoulder begging for attention, he will put two and two together. Why of course, reasons Joe College, if only I had one of those blazers then I too could get this attention. Poor Dad is asked to add an extra $30 to the next allowance check.

Honestly, if I wanted one of those blazers, which are only an advanced version of the Mickey Mouse suits and 4-H jackets, I would be embrassed to wear one after seeing such an advertisement. But, the advertiser doesn't care about people like me; he is after the masses. But, you say that intelligent Carolina students are not taken in by such appeals to their vanity. Well, it will be interesting to make a few observations after that one-day blazer sale.

On Views In Two States

Russell Eisenman

As a native of the state of Georgia I've been trying to notice the difference, if any, in the attitudes of people from my home state, and those from North Carolina. My conclusions are rather surprising.

Segregation and integration is an interesting topic to use in comparing states. The average Georgia's attitude is typical of the deep South. Ask someone from the Peach State how he feels about integration, and if his answer reflects the feeling of most Georgians he'll probably say something like, "No Negroes are going to go to white schools."

In the Tar Heel State you find a different sentiment. People are not so definite about their feelings on the race issue. From my observations I would say that the opinion of the average student in the Tar Heel State is "I don't want to go to school with the Negroes, but if it comes to that I won't bother them if they don't bother me."

My observations of North Carolinians have been confined to college students; therefore, the comparisons are not exactly similar. However, the results are very significant. At first glance it would appear that the average North Carolina student was much more liberal than the average Georgian on the race issue. A deeper look makes this observation more questionable.

When students published in THE RED AND BLACK, the University of Georgia school newspaper, an article advocating the admission of a Negro to the Georgia law school, the Board of Regents cut off the funds for the newspaper because they disagreed with the article. Here at UNC there is no great fear that some administrative group will censor our school paper. Yet, some students have advocated removal of various staff members because their articles are not popular.

My conclusion, at this stage of the game, is that the average resident of the Tar Heel State, like the average Georgian, reflects the attitude of his state. If people in North Carolina are more liberal, it is only because they have been brought up in a more liberal state. The fact that we can give the attitude of a typical Georgian, or typical North Carolinian shows that these people are not thinking for themselves.

A Letter

Editor:

Your article today on education no doubt voices the opinion of many students all over the nation. I am a graduate student who returned to school this fall with the hope of receiving much intellectual stimulation and growth, and have been met with sad disillusionment. My graduate courses are even less stimulating and less thought provoking than many of my undergraduate ones were. If all I had wanted were some second-hand facts and a string of bibliographies I could have consulted my local library with almost as much satisfaction. I find that my teaching experience last year was much more condusive to the development and expresssion of thought than my stay on the other side of the desk has proved to be here thus far. I also have found in teaching that nine-tenths of a teacher's job is in inspiring interest and thought about the subject taught. Without his inspiration the student's class time is of little value.

ENGLISH GRADUATE STUDENT

Sidelight

Ed Rowland

Well, well, now that the Tar Heels are rolling all over all comers on the football field some sportswriters and editors are predicting a bowl trip for them in January. The only stipulation seems to be that all or perhaps all but one of the remaining games has to be won.

And the way the schedule looks to most observers, this record is well within reach. Certainly an 8-2 record in this season of upsets, especially with the eight wins coming in a row, will look inviting to a selections committee from a bowl.

The point I'm trying to make is that if Carolina does play in the Sugar Bowl, for instance, about 75% of the student body will journey to New Orleans for the game. They will spend anywhere from $25 to $250, and for what?

It's certainly fine to support the school in athletics and have a good time in the process, and it requires no great mental strain to yell and scream at a ball game.

These same students almost never stir themselves from an easy chair or a bed for anything worthwhile on this campus. This week Joseph Rauh spoke in Manning Hall as one of the year's Heck Lecturer. Mr. Rauh is President of the Americans for Democratic Action, one of the controversial liberal organizations on the national political scene. In his lecture he denounced massive resistance adopted by some southern states.

There were about 250 persons present, most of whom were townspeople and law students.

Paul Tillich drew a little better response when he spoke here a month ago, but for the nature of his talk Hill Hall should have been packed to the rafters.

This weekend the Germans concert will have a full house; fraternity men and their dates will relax as the music, which will be good, rolls and swells around them and destroys all feeling and care. Later, of course, it will be party time all around the campus—east of Columbia Street.

This notion of intellectual apathy has been voiced before on the campus, and it will be voiced again. I just wanted to get in my licks while it is quiet.

Now is the time for all good men to exercise their minds. . . .

Harper's Bizarre

Just off Franklin Street (and indeed, somewhat under it) and down a flight of stairs, then a turn to the right—watch your step, you're not there yet—and down perhaps three more steps (three or four, we forget), then you're there, is a pub, beer parlor, whatever you like, known locally as "You Know Where," for if you see someone on his way downtown and ask him where he is going, and he answers, "You know where," you know.

There one can see the latest in Ivy League raincoats down the stair, peer, then enter. One can conjecture co-educational conversation progressing in the corner, or hear dialogues:

"Do you believe there's a God?"

"Why . . .yes."

"But is there a God?"

"There has to be."

"You can't prove there is or there isn't."

"Oh, yes you can,"

but before the revelation takes place, in comes a favorite, the grad student who has somehow become a contemporary legend; or perhaps the student called the "General"—his full title is "General College" ("He's been here so long he has a Staff Parking Permit."); and the existence of God remains unproved.

Or one can "dig the sounds," "listen to the music," or do whatever one's vocabulary calls for in solitude or in foot-patting, knee-thumping, "shoo-baba-bey" company to Brubeck (if you're a TIME reader), Hampton (if your parents were jumping with Goodman once), or whoever is the "cool" or "hot" or "swinging" favorite of the moment.

But perhaps one would rather sit at the bar (which might be sticky, but one doesn't notice it after awhile) and drink and down pretzels, ignoring back slappings and stool bumpings, and soon one will look into the mirror and, being unable to make out eyes in the facial reflection, will think, "My god, I've passed out," and go to the rest room to confirm the openess of the eyes.

Then there is always the alternative of joining in a conversation in hopes of pinpointing God:

"How can you prove the existence of God?"

"Where else did everything come from?

"OK."

"Another pitcher?"

"OK."

And one knows that there certainly must be a God, somewhere.

There one can talk reasonably with a Duke man; see a friend walking about carrying a beer can and a bar stool; occasionally see a couple holding hands, or join in the applause when a glass breaks.

Or one can always watch the damn fool with a pencil and notebook who swears that he is working on a term paper.

Student Monarchy

Frank Elkins

At a coffee break in Lenoir last week, the discussion centered around student government. One of my eccentric fellows produced some particularly revolutionary ideas which, although I might not fully endorse, I think might be of interest to the student body.

Student government, with all its complexity, demands entirely too much time and energy on the part of the students. There should be a student revolution overthrowing the present government and setting up in its place, an efficient, well-thought-out constitutional monarchy!

At the head of the government should be a king, responsible only to God and Chancellor Aycock, and should be known as the Great Lord Protector of the Faith and High Imperial Potentate and Almighty Wheel-Hoss. He should be chosen during the revolutionary period by the revolutionary group and afterwards by the House of Lords according to the following essential attributes of a powerful student ruler: physical beauty, fertility, bridge-playing, skill, ability to hold his alcohol, and profoundness of knowledge of the dance. Among other things, the king should exercise control over all organizations on campus and should have within his power the right to outlaw any that he deems "subversive."

To assist the king in executive and administrative matters, there should be a cabinet—a sort of "Ciria Regis"—the members of which, supposedly coming from the king's household, would advise the king. This executive body, in the spring, would have the responsibility of screening candidates for the throne in order to present right and proper candidates to the House of Lords for the final choosing.

In addition to the king and his cabinet, there should be two congressional houses: a House of Lords and a House of Commons. The House of Lords should be exclusive to fraternity men. They should be seated only one for each fraternity. Seats must be elected—none can be sold regardless of the wealth of an individual. This House of Lords should, in addition to other powers, be the supreme judicial body, trying cases involving the honor code and selling indulgenses.

The House of Commons should be the legislative branch concerning itself with such matters as welfare legislation, and should come from dormitory representation at the rate of one for each 150 students.

There should be a brief, comprehensive constitution covering the whole field of government and making provisions for the exercises of all political power. Such questions as the limits off ice-holder's powers, and what right the people may legally claim against the actions of the executive, the legislatures, and the court should be clearly set forth in terms as definite as possible.

Would I lead the revolution?—Naw, but it's fun to talk about it!

Police Charge UNC Professor With Peeping

A UNC professor was charged Thursday with "peeping secretly," according to Chapel Hill police.

Police said Peter H. Nash, 37 year old associate professor in the Department of City and Regional Planning, was charged with two counts of peeping secretly. A warrent was sworn on the basis of information and belief.

Other complaints against Nash had been reported previously according to the police department.

The first of the counts alledgedly acurred Sept. 19 and the second complaint was reported Oct. 30. Both instances reportedly occurred on Hillsboro St. The complaints were filed by Fred L. Hooper and Eric Elliot and their wives.

Nash is scheduled to appear in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court, Tuesday before Judge W. S. Stewart.

CAMPUS FASHION NOTES

Sweater Girls At Carolina Are Sporting Autumn Colors

By JOAN BROCK

The brilliant hues of the changing autumn leaves now dominating the campus are no less striking than the colorful, elongated, "shift" sweaters being worn by Carolina coeds.

Emphasizing "the school and college look," most of this season's favorites reveal a light-hearted air with just the right touch of sophistication perfected for campus and classrooms, sports wear, leisure wear and the dress-up hour.

As skirts grow shorter, sweaters are bound to become longer, and the transition is being accompanied by an illusion of heaviness in both knit and texture. Displaying youthful lines and authentic lengths, the new creations find expression in immortal Shetland, aristocratic mohair-and-wool, and the cashmere-soft blend of wool and nylon.

Defying all laws of sensory perception, some of these bulky affairs weigh ounces instead of pounds. This is due to the blending of new fabrics, such as fur or mohair with wool. Also accounting for the heavy look and light weight are the large stitches which are so big you can almost see through them.

Another feature of the new creations is their intricate trimmings and original designs. Some shifts are carefully bowed at the neck and waist, while others are neatly ribbed and just as neatly buttoned down the front and across the bottom.

Another favorite is the low-slung shift with a belt and a subtle grain of stitching from the shoulder to the waist. For simplicity, a buttoned-down-the-back sweater framed in ribbing around the hips and the wrists with that "fitted just enough" look is sure to win approval.

The more decorative creations are accented by a combination of ribbing and cables, delicate fringe, cowl collars, or bateau necklines. Many of the season's sweaters are successfully coordinated with pleated and blanket plaid skirts.

Vivid shades of red, orange, and gold are predominant and varying hues of blue and green are being featured in multi-colored creations.

Thus, the highlight of the sweater parade this fall is the dizzying clashes of color on brand new textures and their mingling with kaleidoscope suddenness to throw last year's notions of mixing and matching right out the window!

LEGISLATURE

Meet Well Attended

stated the basic qualification for jury duty as interest.

Norman Smith (Ind.) spoke in favor of the bill, pointing out that under random selection jurors would be selected from the body politic and that the defendant might turn down any juror found objectionable by him.

Discussion continued for some time with the main objection seeming to center around the proposed random selection of jurors. Most of this opposition seemed to stem from the University Party, with the Student Party appearing solidly in favor of passing the bill. Debate on this measure will continue at next week's meeting.

Legislature Speaker Ralph Cummings reminded the group several times during the course of the meeting that the body was close to a quorum and that any member might call for a roll call vote at any time in the course of voting.

The meeting was well attended at its beginning, but dwindled as members slipped away after consideration of several bills.

Bills passed by the Student Legislature in Thursday night's meeting were:

(1) A bill to establish a committee to study the fraternity parking problem with possible construction of a parking lot at the site of the old Chapel Hill high school gymnasium;

(2) An enactment establishing a committee to investigate study area problems on campus;

(3) A bill approving the purchase of a TV set for Whitehead dormitory; and

(4) Passage of a bill to appropriate $140 for the inclusion of the Ram and Ewe and the Carolina Handbook in the Yackety Yack.

More buxom blondes with shipwrecked sailors insist on Camels than any other cigarette today. It stands to reason: the best tobacco makes the best smoke. The Camel blend of costly tobaccos has never been equalled for rich flavor and easygoing mildness. No wonder Camel is the No. 1 cigarette of all!

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C.

A group of young men representing the University of North Carolina did willfully and with malice aforethought invade this city of Knoxville on Oct. 31, 1958, with full intent of crushing the morale of a similar group representing the University of Tennessee.

The Tar Heels touched-down at Knoxville Airport yesterday at about 3 o'clock. From there busses carried them into the city to the Hotel Farragut, where the team promptly took a short nap.

At 4:30 a squad meeting was held where the strategy to be used against the Volunteers was explained in detail by Coach Jim Tatum and cohorts. After supper, the Tar Heels attended a flick enmasse, returned to the hotel, and turned in for a good night's rest.

KICKOFF SET FOR 2 O'CLOCK

Today at 12:00 the Tar Heels will leave for Shields-Watkins Field, and at 2:00 the Blue and White takes the field against the Vols of Tennessee.

Today the Tar Heels will be trying to do two things a Carolina team has failed to come up with since the golden era of Choo-Choo Justice: 1—riding high on a 4-game winning streak, the Heels attempt to make it 5 in a row. 2—Carolina will be attempting to beat the Volunteers for the first time in nine years.

Carolina fans from all over remember the way the Vols spoiled Carolina's Homecoming but good last year. Bobby Gorden and Co. completely routed the hapless Tar Heels to the tune of 35-0. It was a day on which Carolina could do nothing right, and Tennessee could do no wrong.

TAR HEELS SEEK REVENGE

Smarting from this humiliation, the Heels would like nothing better than to shove that disgrace down the Vols' throats here today. Most folks feel they have the horses to do it.

Desire and morale are highest ever in the Carolina camp, but not to the point of overconfidence. The players, coaches, and everyone else associated with the team realize that Tennessee is not a team to be taken lightly. The Volunteers' paltry 2-3 record makes them more dangerous than if they were undefeated. The experts say their offense is ready to break loose on any given Saturday, and today could be it.

BOWDEN WYATT TO SHIFT LINEUP

Tennessee coach Bowden Wyatt has said he plans to shift his squad around plenty for this contest, using sophs at many new positions. One soph he may not be able to shift anywhere is the team's signal caller, tailback Bill Majors. Majors, at the time of this writing, was still a question mark, and a very big one.

The Tar Heels, with the exception of Ed Lipski who now seems fully recovered from a minor practice injury, are in top shape personnel-wise.

The Vol defense could break loose today, but they have it to do. The fact that Carolina has allowed only 13 points in its last 4 games (a national top-spot) coupled with an item that the Vols have scored only 34 points all year would seem to make this highly doubtful.

CAROLINA'S OFFENSE HAS GAINED MOMENTUM

After a slow start, Carolina's offense has gained momentum considerably. While the defense paved the way for 1-touchdown wins over Southern Cal and South Carolina, the offense has exploded for 53 points in the last two games.

Today's big war which pits the traditional single wing of Bowden Wyatt against Jim Tatum's almost pro-type split T, shapes up as an interesting game. The Tar Heels will be out to make it extremely interesting for their followers.

Cross-Country Team Faces South Carolina

By BING SOMERS

The UNC cross-country team, still minus Wayne Bishop and lugging an almost unbelievable 1-3 record along, invades the border state below today for a dual meet with South Carolina.

This is the initial away meet for the Tar Heels who are hoping for a change of luck. Picked as conference favorites along with Duke and Maryland, Carolina has been rudely manhandled by opponents in 3 of four meets. Only Virginia seems to have read the pre-season script falling by 20-41.

Despite the fact, however, that Clemson, Maryland, and even State have upended the Tar Heels, Carolina must still be slightly favored in this meet. Teamwise, the Gamecocks shouldn't present too much of a problem, but their number one man can cause plenty of worry.

Latham Top Runner

That would be Billy Latham who last year finished first in the ACC meet at Wake Forest. With Bishop out indefinitely, he must now be regarded as the number one runner in the conference. Still, it takes more than one man to win a meet and South Carolina's depth is questionable.

Most of the UNC praises of late are being heaped upon big Dave Scurlock, who won in the loss to State. The All-American half-miler from Greensboro could give Latham a race if the course suits him. Cowles Llipfert and Sonny Sweet, who cut a whopping 1:24 off of his best previous time against State, should also be right up there.

Howard Kahn, Alex Coffin, and Bing Somers might as well draw straws for their places. With one exception, each has beaten the other twice in 4 meets. Rounding out the squad will be Doug Henderson who returns after a month layoff due to a pulled leg muscle.

Frosh Upset Terps, 20-0

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's freshman football team gave highly favored Maryland a Halloween surprise party in Kenan Stadium yesterday by defeating the unbeaten Terps 20-0.

The Tar Babies combined a solid offense with an equally potent defense to shutout the Terrapins who had scored a total of 89 points in their two previous games. The Carolina frosh scored in every period except the last to rack up their second win of the season against one loss.

Terps Lose Ball

For Gene Alderton's Terps the loss could be summed up in four words, fumbles and intercepted passes. The visitors lost the ball three times on pass interceptions and twice on fumbles.

Maryland moved the ball well on occasions, but when they got inside the Carolina 20 the going got considerably tougher. Late in the first half the Terps had the ball on the Tar Heel 7 but could not get more than three yards in four plays.

The Terrapins won the toss and elected to receive to start the game. After moving the ball for one first down to the Carolina 48, Maryland quarterback Dick Novak had his first pass of the contest intercepted by Gil Carson.

Carson Scores On 26 Yard Run

From their own 41 the Tar Babies launched a scoring drive that ended with Carson going 26 yards around left end for the first touchdown of the game. Gene Shuford ran for the extra points, and after 9:09 of the first quarter the Tar Babies held an 8-0 lead which they never relinquished.

Maryland took the kickoff and marched down the field to the Carolina 19 behind the passing and running of Lonnie Barnhart. Here, however, the Tar Babies got tough and made the Terps give up the ball on downs.

Farris Makes Second Touchdown

Once again the Carolina frosh started a drive which gave them another score. Behind the passing of Ray Farris the Tar Babies moved for five first downs before the Carolina quarterback scored the second touchdown on a sneak. Gene Shuford's attempt to run for the extra point failed, but the frosh held a 14-0 lead.

Roland Mase took Bill Lopp's kickoff and returned it to the Maryland 38. The Tar Babies held the Terps at this point and forced them to punt. After making two first downs the Carolina team almost scored again on a 42 yard pass from Ward Marslender to John Runco but Runso could not hang onto the ball in the end zone.

Maryland then marched from their own 20, where they took a Carolina punt, all the way to the Tar Heel 4. With fourth and four Dick Novak ran the ball but was tackled by Farris and Gary Truver on the 3 to preserve the shutout.

McMillan Caps Drive

Neither team could add to its scoring in the remaining minutes of first half, so the Tar Babies took a 14-0 lead into the dressing room. After stopping a Maryland drive on their 15 in the opening moments of the third quarter, the Tar Babies started to drive for their final touchdown.

Mixing up his plays perfectly Farris moved the Tar Babies deep into Maryland territory. Benton McMillan capped the drive by hauling in a 7 yard Farris aerial for the third score of the game. Breck Regan's kick for the extra point was blocked and the score remained 20-0.

The final quarter was a defensive battle with neither team being able to keep a sustained drive going. Tar Baby coach Bud Carson emptied his bench in the final minutes to allow everyone to have a chance to play.

Booters Top Emory, 15-1

By JIM PURKS

Carolina's varsity soccer team soundly defeated an inexperienced Emory University soccer team here yesterday, 15-1.

The Tar Heels romped for six goals in the first half and nine in the second to win easily, with the second string playing most of the game.

Only a goal on a direct kick early in the first quarter by Emory's Wayne Hampton saved the Emory team from being whitewasred.

Most of the players on the Emory team have had very little soccer experience, with most of their experience coming from soccer competition in Emory's intramural program.

Carolina jumped to an early lead when Mike Thompson scored after Emory's goalie bobbled the ball in front of the nets after stopping a shot by Rick Grausman. A few minutes later, Joe Perkins scored his second goal of the season for the Tar Heels when he took a setup pass from right wing Coleman Barks and booted the ball in.

After Hampton scored for Emory to make the score 2-1, Coleman Barks retailiated for Carolina. Mike Thompson hit paydirt for the Tar Heels again, followed by a goal by Rick Grausman, giving the team a 5-1 lead.

Coach Marvin Allen put his second string in toward the end of the quarter. Joost Polak, playing Thompson's position, then scored his first goal of the season and gave the Tar Heels a five-game lead.

Varsity Takes On Tennessee Today

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special to The Daily Tar Heel

KNOXVILLEE, TENN. — Today Jim Tatum's red-hot Carolina Tar Heels try to make it 5 in a row as they tangle with the always tough Tennessee Vols here at 2 o'clock.

Tennessee brings a deceptive 2-3 record in to today's contest. Scouting reports have shown they are much stronger, and the Tar Heel coaching staff has tried to alert their players to this fact.

Carolina enters the fray with exclusive rights as the hottest team in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Tatum's Tar Heels have bowled over 4 straight opponents after dropping their first two games.

Carolina's tough defense will have its job cut out for it today when they face a single wing team for the first time this season. The Heels currently lead the ACC in both passing defense and total defense, but the Vols may not be impressed with such credentials.

Tennessee is the same old team, so to speak, as they have comparatively small but extremely fast players at every position. The Vols run entirely from the single wing, and their offense is expected to break loose at any time. They have been held to only 34 points in 5 games so far.

Although the Tar Heels should be in top shape to a man for the big game, such is not the case with the Volunteers. The key man injured is signal-calling tailback Billy Majors, brother of the famous John, who was injured in the Florida State game. Majors' status is still unknown, and whether he will play today or not is still in doubt.

Goff To See Action Today

Daley Goff dons the blue and white for the first time this season after being layed off the first 5 games with an injured ankle. Goff, last season's leading ground-gainer, is expected to boost the Tar Heel offense to its full potential. Today, however, he will probably play only on defense.

Scouting reports show that Tennessee likes to stick to its fine running game whenever possible. The Tar Heels would like to force the Vols into the air, and with the tough blue line putting the pressure on, they might very well do it.

Carolina, on the basis of its recent spurt, will be slightly favored in today's battle, but the oddsmakers are sweating because a highly interestig game is expected, one that could go either way.

Duke Meets Ga. Tech

DURHAM — (AP) — Duke and Georgia Tech, two perennial football powers that are having their bumps this season, meet here Saturday in a renewal of one of the South's most colorful rivalries.

The game is rated a toss-up. A crowd of 35,000 is expected for the kickoff at 2 p.m.

Duke, with a 3-3 season record, is expected to rely principally on the running of halfbacks Wray Carlton and George Dutrow, two seniors who have been rugged on off tackle plays and end runs.

The problem was not that Marty had fallen in love with a shirt. After all, he was a Philosophy major.

The trouble was . . . Marty was in love with two shirts.

With Shirt No. 1, the Van Heusen Century, the serious Marty spent hours in heavenly bliss. He worshipped the revolutionary soft collar that won't wrinkle ever. It was Century's one-piece construction that drove him wild. (Other collars never did anything for our boy Marty, except wrinkle madly. You see, other collars are three pieces, fused or sewn together.)

With Shirt No. 2, the amazing Van Heusen "Vantage," the gay, frivolous Marty lived the life of carefree abandon. He could wear it and wear it—wash it—drip-dry it, or have it tumble-dried automatically—and wear it again in a matter of hours. It was the most money-saving love he ever had.

But when Marty was with one shirt, he missed the other. It was terrible. Like so many others with the same problem, Marty wrote to us. And so it came to pass that the Van Heusen "Century-Vantage" was born. This shirt combined the advantages of each into one great shirt—a wash and wear, no-iron, all cotton broadcloth shirt with the soft collar that won't wrinkle ever! And just $5! Have you a problem? Standards Committee Talks Held By Two Coed Dorms

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

The first of a series of discussions about the proposed Women's Social Standards Committee were held in two women's dorms Thursday night.

The discussions were a result of the meeting of the dorm presidents with Nancy Adams, originator of the plan, Monday.

Nurses and McIver Dorms discussed the committee in regular dorm meetings.

The nurses devoted the entire hour meeting to the discussion. Dewey Dance, president, said, "The general feeling seemed to be that if it were worked out and thought about and well planned, the girls were in favor of backing it."

FOUR COUNSELORS

Jackie Kelly, another resident of the dormitory, said that most of the girls seemed to be for it and no one spoke against it. She also reported that it was suggested that there should be a counselor from each class—freshman, sophomore, junior and senior—who would sit on the campus wide committee.

Although the discussion in McIver didn't last an hour, there were opinions expressed both pro and con.

Some of the arguments for it were that it would help to prevent some girls from appearing before honor Council by giving the girl advice about her conduct before she committed an Honor Council offence; that it would help to define the Campus Code; that it would give the girls someone to whom they could talk concerning their own conduct; and that the responsibility for speaking to a girl about her conduct would be given to members of the committee instead of simply allowing a "pass the buck" method to exist.

Arguments against the Standards Committee included: that it would cause the students to lose their right to define a lady; that, since many girls have attended schools which stress ladylike behavior, most realize what a lady is; that, although the committee is not to be a judicial body, it could easily become one simply by laying down certain rules, the violation of which the Honor Council might accept as being a violation of the Campus Code; and that it is an insult to the girls who feel that they are mature enough to behave in the proper way without being told.

OPINION DIFFICULT

The general opinion seemed to be that since the functions of the committee are still rather vapue, it is difficult to form an opinion about the committee.

The women's dorm presidents will meet with Miss Adams again tomorrow. There probably will be more dormitory discussions in the near future.

Results Of Election To Be Posted In GM

Here's something special for dyed-in-the wool Republicans and Democrats and anyone else interested in politics:

Reports on the election returns Tuesday night will be posted on a bulletin board in Graham Memorial.

Howard Henry, director of Graham Memorial, said yesterday that G M would remain open longer than usual for those persons interested in keeping up with election returns.

The returns will be posted on a bulletin board on first floor, Graham Memorial, from information on The Daily Tar Heel's wire machines.

Curtis Gans, editor of The Daily Tar Heel, said yesterday the paper is offering a five-dollar prize for the person who guesses the nearest correct party representation in the gubernatorial, representative and senatorial races. Duplicate prizes will be awarded in case of a tie.

Only one entry will be allowed per person, and this entry must be sent to the newspaper office by Monday night.

Stevenson Claims Ike Doing Nixon's Errands

MINNEAPOLIS — UP — Adlai Stevenson Saturday night contended President Eisenhower is running political errands for Vice President Nixon in the current campaign.

Stevenson, the Democratic Presidential nominee in 1952 and 1956, commented in a speech prepared for a party rally that "you can't tell the new Eisenhower from the old Nixon" and he added:

"It is nice, in a way, to have the old Nixon back—the stateman's toga always did hang a bit loosely from his padded shoulders. And I suspect Mr. Nixon also is not unmindful of Old Guard delegates in the 1960 convention.

"But the tragedy of this campaign is that the President has taken up where the Vice President left off—with the help of a new speech writer.

"For the past six years the President has sent the Vice President to run his political errands and do the dirty work. But this year we have the spectacle of the Vice President's sending the President on errands."

Nixon is widely regarded as the man most likely to win the Republican presidential nomination in 1960. Some commentators, in sizing him up in recent months, have referred to him as the "new Nixon."

Stevenson accused the Administration of a lack of leadership and predicted victory for the Democrats in Tuesday's elections.

He said the United States is losing ground in the field of foreign affairs, and he added:

"The world is more dangerous, not less, than it was six years ago when the Republicans took office. The free world is less united, less confident, less sure of what it is trying to do."

Vice President Of NSA To Talk With Leaders

Fred Werner, student government vice president of the U. S. National Student Assn., will confer with campus leaders here Monday.

EVEN DECIDES MARRIAGES SCIENTIFICALLY

University's Univac 105 Machine Is Proven 'Jack Of All Trades'

By CHUCK FLINNER

Bookies will be able to eliminate "chance" in making odds.

Golfers can figure handicaps easily.

Marriage matches can be derived scientifically.

Univac 1105 does it all. It is doubtful that the bookie orthe golfer or boys and girls seeking matrimony will be able to afford the $2.4 million monster calculator but UNC is scheduled to receive one of the over grown alide rules.

In 1952 an early Univac model predicted the outcome of the presidential election before there were enough returns to hazard a guess by any other known forecasting practice.

In 1954 the Univac forecast a Democratic victory in the House of Representatives. Later in the 1956 presidential election the system forecast the margin of President Eisenhower's reelection.

PREDICTS WEATHER

Elections are not the only predictable events. The Univac helps predict weather. Long range weather forecasting with a Univac is an established fact.

Leaving the prophetic powers of 1105 and returning to the important uses, we find that the Philadelphia Country Club uses the system to figure the golf handicaps for more than 400 members. It requires only ten minutes of Univac time.

Univac has also proved its worth in the lost and found department. For some time the eighth moon of Jupiter was lost. Data was fed to the computer and after 14 years of wandering around Jupiter the moon was found again. In the event one loses his head Univac has proven useful in finding it. Skull measurements have been identified by Univac within seconds.

Job hunting, too, has been tackled by Univac. In Chicago applicants were interviewed to determine job aptitude. The data was processed and Univac printed the code numbers of the company names, addresses and personnel managers which were interested in the applicant's particular skill.

LARGE VOCABULARY

Another use of the 1105 is in languages. The computer has a vocabulary of 41,000 words. The average intelligent adult has a vocabulary of 20,000 to 30,000 words. Words are given coded numbers which are fed to the Univac. The words in English can be fed to the system and translated into numbers, then retranslated into another language.

The Univac used at M. I. T. is used for translating Russian. The device can print, through the use of a printer attachment, 600 lines per minute. It transfers information at the rate of 2,130 words per second.

Feel inferior? Don't. It still took man to design it and it takes man to operate it. Man will probably be useful for a few more years.

GM Water Off Until Monday

The wtaer will be turned off in Graham Memorial at least half a day Monday, according to Howard Henry, GM director.

The barber shop will be closed all day as a result, Henry said.

The reason for this brief inconvenience is because of repairs that must be made to a water pipe under the darkroom in the basement of Graham Memorial. The pipe burst late Tuesday.

news in brief

Pasternak Free

MOSCOW — UP — Boris Pasternak was told Saturday he is free to collect his $41,420 Nobel Literature prize in the capitalist world—and to stay there if he wants to.

This was the sharp Kremlin reaction after a personal appeal by Pasternak to Premier Nikita Khrushchev to be allowed to stay in Russia. Pasternak told Khrushchev he may have made mistakes in writing the novel "Doctor Zhivago" and added:

"To go beyond the frontier of my motherland is to me equal to death . . . ."

Pasternak, whose book criticizes the Russian Communist revolution, already has turned down the Nobel Award and indicated he would not attend the award ceremonies in Stockholm on Dec. 12.

Despite this, criticism of him and his novel has boiled into harsh demands for his expulsion from Russia as a traitor.

Ban Explored

GENEVA — UP — U. S., British and Soviet delegation leaders explored in a private meeting Saturday the chances of reaching agreement on the policing of a nuclear test ban.

They appeared neither optimistic nor pessimistic. During their 45-minute discussion they carefully avoided forcing each other into taking up rigid positions, informants said.

The three powers formally opened their conference in Geneva's Palais Des Nations yesterday. Over the next few days or weeks they must determine whether some avenue exists for reconciling their conflicting views on ending atomic and hydrogen bomb explosions.

Thanksgiving Set

WASHINGTON — UP — President Eisenhower Saturday set aside Thursday, Nov. 27, as Thanksgiving Day. He urged all citizens to give thanks for the blessings which have signalized our lot as a nation."

The President's annual proclamation also called on the people to ask for guidance in striving for a better world for all men.

UP Nominates Monday Night

The University Party will select candidates for the dormitory Legislature seats and for junior class offices at a meeting tomorrow night in Gerrard Hall at 7:15.

They will convene again on Tuesday night at the same time and place to nominate candidates for the town legislature seats and sophomore class offices.

The executive committee plans to have a platform ready to present Tuesday night, according to Jack Lawing, party chairman.

New Student Directories To Go On Sale Tuesday

Student-Faculty directories will go on sale Tuesday for 50 cents per copy at the Information Desk in Graham Memorial, the reception desk in the Nurses' Dorm and the lobby of the YMCA building.

Also available on Tuesday will be free supplements containing all changes of addresses received from the Office of Central Records by Oct. 28.

A special dormitory sale will be conducted by the directory staff tomorrow night between 7 and 10 p.m.

According to Don Herring, business manager, this is the largest student-faculty directory in the history of UNC.

Copies purchased by the University for its offices may be picked up at the YMCA office only.

Council Candidates

Members of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board will conduct interviews with potential candidates for Student Council and the Men's Honor Council Monday and Tuesday.

The interviews, which began Friday, will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. in the Men's Council Room.

Carolina Whips Tennessee 21-7 For First Win Over Volunteers In Nine Years

Tar Heels Take Fifth Straight Before 25,000

Klochak Gets 8 Points; Smith Tallies Last TD

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special To The Daily Tar Heel

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. Nov. 1 — Carolina's torrid Tar Heels moved another step closer to a possible bowl bid here today, as they rolled over a tough Tennessee team 21-7 in very convincing style.

The Tar Heels were obviously superior throughout the contest, and were hampered only once by the Volunteer single-wing.

The win marked Carolina's 5th straight this season, against 2 losses. It was the first time Carolina had beaten Tennessee in 9 long years.

Game Different From Last Year's

This game was an entirely different story from last year's rout at the hands of the Volunteers, as the Heels struck hard and fast for two touchdowns in the opening quarter then hung on tenaciously against repeated Vol attempts. Both teams countered once in the second half, but Carolina just had too much for the hapless Vols.

The first time the Tar Heels got their hands on the football, they marched 74 yards in 10 plays for a touchdown. Wade Smith and Don Klochak alternated with big gains until Carolina got a first down at the enemy 18. Then Klochak took a handoff, rammed off right tackle, ran right over three Vol defenders, and galloped 18 yards for the score. Phil Blazer converted to give the Heels a 7-0 lead with only 5:52 gone in the game.

DeCantis Scores

Tennessee was unable to move after the kick, and was forced to punt. Carolina then went 60 yards in 8 plays for another score. The big play of the series was a 35 yard aerial from Cummings to Al Goldstein. Klochak moved the ball 10 yards to the Tennessee 3 then Moe DeCantis carried the mail into the end zone. The kick failed, but the Tar Heels led 13-0 with 5:40 still left in the first quarter.

Tennessee got a break in the closing minutes of the third quarter which resulted in its only score of the afternoon. The Vols jumped

Recommendations

The Board of Higher Education recommended several things to the Advisory Budget Commission Friday, but three things bear special mention.

The first is the commitment of the Board to a Student Union for Chapel Hill and other institutions. This is a significant step in the recognition of the idea that there is more to the educational process than facilities for academic studies.

The second is the proposal for future dormitory construction whose maximum per-student construction rate is $3,000 instead of $2,500. According to a recent study by a committee headed by Norman Smith, even the $3,000 figure is less than the national average, but indeed it is an improvement.

Thirdly, the idea of cutting the self-liquidating program so that only half of the dormitory cost will be self-liquidated is a step in the right direction. With the cost of education increasing steadily, it is about time that someone thought of bringing a halt to the financial burden on the student.

It is probable that the capital improvements may have to be financed through a bond issue, but it can only be hoped that the bond issue be recommended.

The first is passed, the second and most important, the advisory budget commission, is to come. It is hoped that they view education as important, as the Board does.

Apathy

Another illustration of that disease that pervades the campus called apathy was never more manifest than last night, when approximately 50 people showed up for the speech of Henry Hitt Crane.

Moreover, the Germans dance was a flop, closing early with less than twenty couples around at midnight.

Perhaps the era of dances is over, but the era of ideas does not end. Something must be done to awaken those to thought and action, so that what is left of an intellectual climate on the campus does not disappear altogether.

Wake Forest

The editor of the Wake Forest student newspaper deserves commendation. To deverse a tradition of advocacy of segregation by the school, and its students takes a great deal of courage. This kind of courage should be rewarded.

The editorial shows that there is a great deal of enlightened student leadership in the South. It is hoped that when mature they will supply the state and nation a chance to make progress on the major issues of the time.

Integration may not go more peacefully because of the Wake Forest editorial, but it's good to know more than few rational people do exist on the issue in the student ranks.

SSL

It seems that Governor Hodges' pronouncement on the State Student Legislature is having the desired effect.

Over at Duke, administration officials are placing all proposals that Duke students might present under scrutiny, and this is no doubt true of other institutions.

Luckily this is not the case here, but the SSL will cease to have any meaning as the student voice in the state, if censorship by administrative officials is pursued.

A proper alternative to this is either to have the meeting in another place or to not have the meeting at all.

It is hoped that if there is a meeting that all administrative restraint will be lifted. A true voice of student leadership is what is needed, and it may be distasteful.

If this cannot be accomplished, then the meeting has no purpose.

Election

In order to stimulate some interest in the election, The Daily Tar Heel will sponsor a contest for all students. A five dollar prize will be awarded to the person who guesses the correct party representation in the House of Representatives, Senate, and Governorships after this election.

Each person is limited to one entry and these must be delivered to The Daily Tar Heel by midnight Monday.

The newspaper will post an hour by hour tally of election returns in the state and nation in Graham Memorial for all those who are interested.

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

From the election of a new Pope to the upcoming election of U. S. Senators and Representatives goes the news this week, and it is quieter than usual.

The Reds are now shelling Quemoy only on every other day and there is no other gunfire anywhere in the world, except for Cuba, but Fidel Castro is causing as much trouble as before. John Foster Dulles has not flown to Havana yet to check up.

Angelo Giuseppe Cardinal Roncalli was elected Pope Tuesday, and he immediately chose the name John XXXIII. His election came after five days of deadlocked balloting between 51 Cardinals locked in the Vatican's Sistine Chapel.

Eleven ballots were taken before Cardinal Roncalli was picked.

Pope John is an Italian skilled in Vatican diplomacy. Although his policies may prove to be conservative, he is expected to follow the general direction laid down by his predecessor, Pope Pius XII. Tuesday has been designated as the day of John's coronation.

In his first message to the world he called on the world's leaders to channel man's genius into paths of peace. He said that the people of the world do not ask for "those monstrous means of war discovered in our time, which can cause fraternal massacre and universal slaughter. The people ask instead, he said, "peace in virtue in which the human family can live freely, flourish and prosper . . . . tranquility and concord from which alone can rise a true prosperity."

Amid preparations for the coronation lively speculation centered about the Pope. The Vatican's newspaper even asked that the world's press be cautious about handling reports of the Pontiff's intentions. Heads of state around the world offered congratulations and best wishes to the Pope.

"Is There A Peace-In-The-Family Prize?"

Behind the Iron Curtain Polish Catholics were jubilant. Their Cardinal Wyszynski was the only one for a Communist country to participate in the sacred College voting.

NOBEL PRIZES

Four Russians won Nobel Prizes this week, one in literature and three in physics, and the Kremlin decided to let the physicists accept theirs and the accompaning prize money but refused to let Boris Paternak accept his for the novel, Doctor Zhivage.

Pasternak's novel was printed in the western world after the Russians refused to release it. It has been the center of much controversy since. It is critical of Communism and the Soviet revolution. The Soviet press called Pasternak a tool of those who would fan the cold war.

On the other hand, the physicists are among the scientific elite in Russia. Their research into high speed, subatomic particles resulted in a new cosmic ray counter now circling the earth in Sputnik III.

The prize is chemistry went to Dr. Frederick Sanger, an Englishman, for his work on the structure of insulin.

Three Americans won the prize in medicine for doing research in genetics and the fundamentals of heredity. They are Doctors Edward L. Tatum, George W. Beadle and Joshua Lederburg.

Sharp criticism of the Soviet Union's action in forcing Pasternak to refuse his prize echoed around the world. The Nobel committee making the award said Pasternak will be listed as the 1958 winner.

NUCLEAR TESTING

In Geneva the joint U. S.-Britain-Russia talks on banning nuclear testing opened with the Russians refusing to accept a ban for one year. The United States countered by saying unless the Russians fire a bomb in a test, its own ban will stay in effect for a year.

The U. S. has just finished a series of nuclear tests in Yucca Flat, Nevada.

Russia offered its own version of a ban—one that would involve immediate and permanent bans on testing. Her representative said only then would she join into any agreement. The U. S. representative answered in saying, "The three nations had come together to achieve a safequarded agreement to refrain from nuclear weapons tests."

Russia meanwhile reiterated its demand that Communist China have a voice in deciding the international problems of atomic energy. The Reds accused the U. S. against an unwise policy of discrimination against Red China.

Democrats Predicted To Win

Ed Rowland

Tuesday will be the day political-wise this year—the day that will see voters across the nation go to the polls to elect 436 members of the House of Representatives, 34 senators, assorted governors and local officials.

As far as national politics are concerned, the Democrats seem to be "in" even more strongly under a Republican administration than ever before. Not even determined attacks on the Democratic Party by President Eisenhower, Vice-president Nixon, and congressmen have swayed many voters this year.

The Democratic conservatives are accused of running the party because they have the seniority and the party chairman has declared they will accept the civil rights plank or get out; the liberals have been called socialists and dominated by labor interests.

This is to no avail.

Such issues as right-to-work laws have made the recession, not too long ago a hot item, pale into insignificance. One of the main personalities in the campaigning has been Nixon, who has almost single-handedly goaded his party into action, but not without some pointed criticism from top Republicans.

The big races this year are in California and New York. The others will contribute their bit to the whole picture, but the battles between Averill Harriman and Nelson Rockefeller, and Knight and Knowland vs. Engle and Brown are the big ones.

The Harriman-Rockefeller race pits two old established names in moneyed circles against one another. Rockefeller is a political novice, but he has capitivated public attention so that he is rated even with his opponent, an old hand in politics.

Out in California Sen. Knowland is running for governor against Democrat Pat Brown, and Brown has the edge. Knowland is advocating the union shop in a state where the Republicans are outnumbered nearly 2-1, and the labor movement is throwing its strong influence on Brown's side.

Engle, on the other hand, is campaigning successfully for the Senate against ex-Governor Goodwin Knight and he is expected to win handily. The Democrats are not favored as heavily in this one, but they do have the edge.

The polls show anywhere from 248 to 299 Democrats in the House as compared to the 235 they now have, and corresponding decreases for the Republicans: now 200, maximum strength 187, minimum 136.

The Senate now has 49 Democrats and 47 Republicans, and after the election should have anywhere between 57 and 64 Democrats.

The Gallup Poll shows 58 per cent of the voters favor the Democrats while 42 go GOP. The Roper Poll shows 47 per cent for the Democrats, 31 for the Republican sand 14 per cent undecided.

The issues in this 1958 campaign are similar to ones voiced many times before.

Basically, they seem to be like this:

UNEMPLOYMENT. It still exists, and many voters tend to blame the Republicans for it because they were in power during the recession. In heavily industrialized areas the Democrats stand to gain many votes which have gone to the GOP before.

FARM POLICY. Benson's stands have swayed voters in farm states to the Democratic side, although farm prices are up and crops are good, insuring higher incomes than usual.

THE ADMINISTRATION. Eisenhower is accused of being a "do-nothing" chief executive, and voters may want a return to the days when a strong man like FDR was in office.

LABOR. This is one the Republicans have on their side. Revelations by the McMlellan Committee have demonstrated that a Democratic win may give national labor leaders like Walter Reuther more power and influence than they deserve. Of course business is fighting against labor, and consequently, for the Republican.

On the campaign trail all the big guns have rolled out. The GOP has had Eisenhower, Nixon, Meade Alcorn, and powerful congressional leaders making whistle-stop speeches telling the voters they never had it so good.

The Democrats ave countered with Stevenson, Truman, Sen. John Kennedy and others telling the voters they will have it better if they elect Democrats.

INDIANA; A Republican appeal for right-to-work laws does not seem to be affecting an economic downturn and voters may send one to three more Democrats to the House and one to a GOP-held Senate seat.

WEST VIRGINIA: Basically a Democratic state, this year two Republican Senators are underdogs as the Democrats are united. A sweep is forecast.

ARIZONA: A GOP conservative, Barry Goldwater, is fighting for his life against a Democratic moderate and the race is very close.

PENNSYLVANIA: A traditionally Republican stronghold, the Keystone State may sweep into firm control of the Democrats. They will pick up a second Senate seat, hold the governorship, and take 2 to 5 more House seats.

MICHIGAN: Unemployment will send this into the Democratic fold.

Issues like Civil rights do not seem to have dislodged voters either way this year. Southerners are sticking with the party of their ancestors, and Northerners, especially Negroes, are banking on the influence of liberal Democrats to help them. The Republicans are not making many gains.

Union money seems to be offsetting the heavy contributions for business for the Republicans. And business has less pull than unions. The Democrats are better organized and in a better frame of mind than the Republicans.

So on Tuesday, November 4, there does not seem to be any need to stay up all night to find out who will win—2-1 it's the Democrats across the nation.

History On A Desk Top

Stan Fisher

Few books read more interestingly than the wealth of literature on desktops in the classrooms of Carolina. The messages engraved upon these academic essentials give wonderful insight on many topics and rouse conjecture as to the nature of past students of the university.

On a desk in Woollen gym is statement describing the internal contents of Carolina's head football coach in four letter anglo-saxon words. It is entirely possible, in light of recent happenings, that this was written by some student by the anti-social implications of Mr. Tatum showing up for every Carolina football game cold sober.

A desktop in Murphy hall proclaims "Down with Truth." Considering the general difficulty many students have with the courses taught in Murphy, this was in all probability written by someone with a tremendous temptation to violate the Honor Code, the Campus Code, the Morse Code and any other code that happened to be nearby.

The names of the girls dated, the fraternities joined, and characters assasinated by the past students of the university all are on the tops of Carolina desks. Sometimes there are written in two lines, but most often they are simple, easily read one line thought groups. (Experts on the characteristics of desk engravers say that it was early discovered by desk engravers that one line was apt to be noticed and understood more easily by the average college student than longer epic poetry.)

Always — in demonstration of the sheep-like tendencies of today's college students — the lines will be carved deep into the wood by those who have idly retraced the work of the first great desk carvers.

Ocassionally a desk will be found with a perfect top: no carvings, pencil marks, holes — nothing — just perfectly smooth. Such desks as these are usually found to have inferiority complexes. They possess nothing in the way of personality: their seats are hard, the back rest is too straight, and always there is that blank top staring at you monotonously. Such desks as these confound the experts. However, they do advance the following possible explanations:

(1) The person, or persons, who occupied this desk was a prude. (Some persons because of proud family lineage consider it beneath their dignity to destroy mere state property. Such students should probably be sent to Duke.)

(2) This desk was at the front of the room where no one dared whip out the newly sharpened penknife, or other sharp instrument.

(3) Intellectuals who attempted to pay attention sat in the desk during its term in Carolina.

(4) Everyone who ever sat in the desk went to sleep, therefore never had the opportunity, to add his bit to posterity's scrapbook.

Even our higly esteemed experts differ among themselves as to which of these is most feasible, but most of them accept the last named as the most probable — after investigation into the habits of UNC students.

By way of an interesting digression, this investigation by our often quoted team of experts (who SHALL remain Nameless) turned up the fact that desktops and the crossword puzzle in The Daily Tar Heel, are in a dead heat for students' attention during those first waking minutes after entering class.

But to get back to the matter at hand, why don't you, reader, (assuming someone stops to read this) decide right now to contribute your favorite syniciam, fraternity, girl friend's name, or even what you had for breakfast, to the coming generations of Carolina students? Take out your mechanical pencil, penknife, or switchblade and start scratching or cutting on the nearest wooden article. One word of caution: please do not begin in earnest on desktops until you have acquired some degree of proficiency in expressing yourself in concise, one line language. Why put down some inferior carving beside some of the best desk engravers in Carolina history?

A Letter

October 31, 1958

Editor:

. . . This week-end is the Germans week-end. Every bar in every house is open, 24-hours a day. The week-end started on Thursday. At this moment it is at its height. Concert this p.m. by Charlie Barnett. Partied last night. Party tonight. Party tomorrow night. Sleep Monday. Arrive in class, in a dazed condition, on Tuesday.

And these are the leaders. These are the people we are worrying about saving, along with ourselves. These are the ones who are expected to beat the Russians to the Moon. I despair that such people will be worth saving. I despair that they will defeat ANYONE, much less the Russians. You can't even convince these people that a problem exists. They KNOW, with the blind faith of an ignorant zealot, that everything will come out all right. That America will triumph. That they can continue their play, because far out on the periphery of Empire their Emperor, Marcus Aurelius, keeps watch.

Substitute "Eisenhower." Substitute "know-how." Substitute "science." The "American way." "God." . . . God!

I have never felt so completely ambivalent in all my life. On the one hand there is the greatest vision of the future of mankind yet to be kindled. Since the dawn of History, no vista, not even the other-world City of God of Augustine, can match, in beauty, grandeur, knowledge and power — nay, even Majesty — the vision which now lies before us. We have only to reach out, out, just a little farther, encircle it—gently,—clench the hand, ever so slowly and carefully lest you break the flower, and the vision is ours. THE UNIVERSE AND ALL OF TIME! GOD, WHAT ELSE COULD WE ASK IF WE LIVED TO BE TEN QUARDILLION?

On the other hand, the situation is fraught, pregnant, viscid and stenched with the extreme probability of apocalyptic, obliterative disaster.

Such is our portion. To be poised on the fulcrum of a cosmic see-saw whose ends extend to the edges of the Universe. In one direction a future whose ends extend to the edges of the Universe. In one direction a future whose glories it will require a billion years to count. In the other, one grand instant of annihilation. Under such a colossal weight, only a mighty fulcrum can stand. only the toughest bough remain unbroken.

Never have the choices been so extreme. Never has the future been so great — or so small. Never has the individual — properly placed — meant so much — and others so little.

The Heavens, contrary to song, have stopped telling the glory of God. They stand breathless, waiting upon the outcome of Earth's Moment of Triumph or End.

The presiding question, for the immediate time, for the short-range, physical survival of the Race will we be able to break away fro Earth, to put some eggs in another basket, in time?

They didn't hear the question.

Fidel Castro and his group of "freedom-loving" bums have been roaming the hillsides of Cuba for several years now. At different times during his oft-puzzling revolution, the Robin Hood activities of the Rebel leader have inspired admiration and interest on the part of many persons in the United States.

In view of the fact that our American heritage had its conception in a similar struggle, Castro could easily have appealed to the patriotic emotions of this country for aid. He could have also generated a great deal of sympathy on the basis of a native aversion on the part of the American people to the strong-armed dictator type personified in General Batista.

Enigmatically, however, Castro has literally bitten off his hand to spite his face. In fact, he has seemed intent on defying this country with a hatred equal to or even surpassing that steeped in his violent struggle against the General-President. The United States has long-since acquiesced to his demands in ceasing arms shipments to Batista. Yet, in a fiery radio broadcast last Sunday, Castro accused the U. S. ambassador of plotting with Batista to provoke direct U. S. intervention in the revolt. He angrily warned this country to "stay out."

Last summer, his guerillas seized forty-seven Americans and three Canadians, gradually releasing them over a three-week period. Recently, Castro forces abducted two American and seven Cuban employees of a U. S. oil refinery in eastern Cuba, and took over a U. S. nickel processing plant on the island's southern coast.

In regards to these acts, Castro remarked, "It is for the Cuban people and the world — not the U. S. State Department — to judge rebel acts. I beg your pardon, Senor Castro. When rebel acts involve the personages of Unied States citizens and the property of that country, it is specifically the business of the U. S. State Department to judge these acts — even if said department has been disgustingly lax in this regard on the Eurasian continent.

Despite the outrageous crimes of the Cuban president, it is difficult to sympathize with his antagonist if he maintains such a childish attitude.

It would behoove the Rebel leader to consider the knowledge of some of the ancient proverbs which he must have come across in his reputedly prodigious philosophic readings: "You can catch more flies with a thimbleful of honey than with a jarful of vinegar" (with apologies to Confucious).

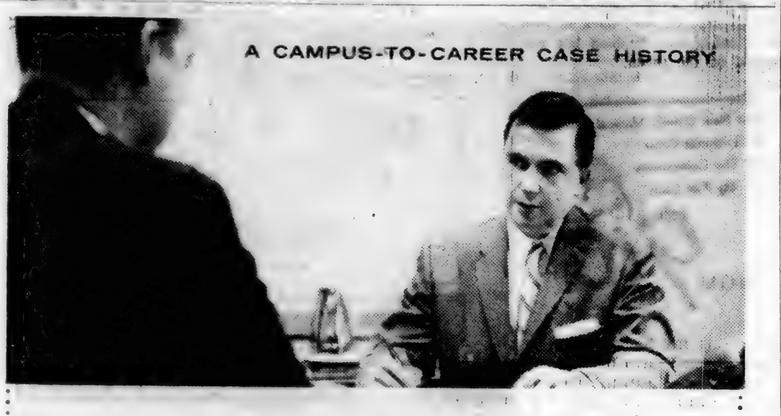
A CAMPUS-TO-CAREER CASE HISTORY



"I have 43,000 reasons why I'm sold on my job"

Emil R. San Soucie got his A.B. degree from Harvard in 1954. He joined the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania in early 1955. Today, three short years later, he's in charge of 35 employees in a West Philadelphia business office serving 43,000 customers.

"It's an interesting job," says Emil. "I guess that's because people are interesting. Every day, I talk with customers—and no two are alike. They all have different problems and service needs. That makes every working day different and stimulating for me.

"There's also a great sales opportunity. Homes and businesses need the convenience and efficiency that up-to-date telephone facilities offer. It's a strong story, and we tell it often and enthusiastically.

"Outside the office, I'm active in local civic affairs. And I'm always a bit awed—and pleased—by the respect people show for the telephone company and for a young fellow in my position.

"I don't know where a man like me with management ambitions has a better opportunity."

. . . .

Many young men are finding interesting and rewarding careers in the Bell Telephone Companies. There are opportunities for you, too. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he comes to your campus. Read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

Emil San Soucie sits in on a telephone sales contact by one of his Service Representatives to help her improve her sales technique.

Emil stimulates team competition in his office to increase interest in sales. Here he discusses quotas with his unit supervisors.

Civil Defense Emphasized By State Director

North Carolina's Civil Defense Director Friday said:

1. America's offensive capabilities are far ahead of her defense system.

2. Russia's capability of atomic attack on the U. S. increases with the passage of time.

UP TO INDIVIDUALS

Gen. Edward F. Griffin of Raleigh, director of the N. C. Council of Civil Defense, warned that each individual citizen must concern himself with civil defense problems if we are to survive as a nation in the event of a nuclear attack.

His speech was before the North Carolina chapter of the International Assn. of Personnel in Employment Security, who have been holding a two-day meeting at the Institute of Government.

Gen. Griffin traced recent measures taken by the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization to increase our chanees of survival and to lessen the impact on our industrial resources.

Gen. Griffin, noting that the Federal Government faces a difficult task in keeping the concept of civil defense alive in the public mind, pointed out several "principal reasons why Civil Defense preparations are not progressing as well as they should."

1. Procrastination.
2. Hope that another world war will not occur, to the extent that it has become a fact in the minds of some people.
3. "Unrealistic and defeatist thinking" that an atomic war would be so devastating and horrible that nothing could be done about it anyway.
4. Belief that the military could stop all enemy bombers from flying over the U. S.—a feeling held by some 75 per cent of Americans, according to one poll.
5. Ignorance of Americans about modern warfare.

on a Carolina fumble at the Tar Heel 33 and marched for the touchdown with Carl Smith diving over from the 1. Sam Berklow split the uprights to push the count to 13-7 and pull the Vols within 6.

Cummings To Smith

But Carolina regained the fire it had had in the first half, and took the kickoff back 78 yards in 15 plays for the final counter of the game. Jack Cummings threw three passes in a row on third down situations, all of them complete. Goldstein, John Schroedor, and finally to Wade Smith for the touchdown from 4 yards out, were the receivers.

The game see-sawed back and forth for the rest of the time, though neither team amassed a threat. Tennessee's desperation passing attack couldn't click in the closing minutes, and the Tar Heels left. Shields-Watkins field with their 5th straight, much to the delight of some 1,000 Carolina fans who crossed the mountains for the spectacle.

Fighting In Final Minutes

Fighting marred the final minutes of play but cooler heads prevailed and a riot was prevented.

Don Klochak played his finest game of the season so far, gaining a total of 92 yards rushing. Cummings was deadly with his passing all afternoon. The line, from end to end, was the key to the victory as the Heels just weren't to be denied today.

All interested students and faculty members have been invited to attend the meeting tomorrow night.

Drunkenness, Speeding, Lead Report

Almost 23,000 North Carolina drivers have had their operators' permits revoked or suspended through the month of September.

The monthly report of the North Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles has revealed that most of the revocations and suspensions are a result of driving drunk. Over 700 drivers lost their licenses in September on that charge. Convictions result in a suspension or revocation of the license.

To date this year over 8,000 drivers have been convicted for drunk driving according to the report.

Speeding convictions during the month totalled 137. Nearly 3,000 have lost their licenses for this offense through September.

North Carolina, however, for the third consecutive year has won the national award for the best licensing division in the country.

Clemson Wins 14-12

CLEMSON, S. C., Nov. 1 —(AP)— Clemson remained on the crest of the Atlantic Coast Conference with a 4-1 record here today by downign a hustling Wake Forest football team 14-12.

A crowd of 26,000, gathered under threatening skies, saw Clemson stop an opening Wake Forest threat, then stay in command the rest of the game.

White Scores First

Quarterback Harvey White assured Clemson its fifth victory in six starts by plunging from the one for a second quarter touchdown, then converting with a two-point pass to end Wyatt Cox. This first play of the second period capped an 80-yard drive.

Wake Forest halfback Bob Robinson drove over from the two for a score in the second period but a pass try for a two-point conversion was incomplete.

A short Wake Forest punt in the fourth period the Clemson 28 sent the Tigers on their way for the clincher. Third string quarterback Johnny Goff scored with a one-yard plunge. A place try for the extra point was blocked.

Snead Makes Final TD

Wake Forest went 88 yards after the kickoff for its second touchdown. Quarterback Norman Snead scored on a five-yard run when he was unable to find a pass receiver.

Snead was shaken up on the play and quarterback Charlie Carpenter came in to try for the tying two points on a pass. But he couldn't find a receiver and his wild throw was incomplete.

The Carolina thinclads went into yesterday's meet without the services of All-American Wayne Bishop who is currently sidelined for an indefinite length of time.

Ga. Tech Beats Duke, 10-8

DURHAM, N. C. — NOV. 1 —(AP)— Georgia Tech turned a first period break into a touchdown and sophomore halfback Tommy Wells booted a 14-yard last quarter field goal to give the Yellow Jackets a 10-8 victory over Duke today.

Wells' field goal came after he had missed on similar attempts from the Duke 14, 33, 34 and 9.

A crowd of 30,000 saw Tech go ahead in the closing seconds of the first period when soph Marvin Tibbetts plunged over from the one on fourth down. The touchdown was set up on the seven when Duke halfback George Dutrow, back to punt on fourth down, fumbled but recovered on the seven.

Campaigns Close; Balloting Begins

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The angry words of a bitter campaign faded last night and it was left up to the voters. will they gratify the sky high hopes of the Democrats, or surprise the experts with a Republican triumph?

More than 76 million men and women are eligible to vote today and about 48 million are expected to.

Their votes will decide which party will control Congress for the next two years — and by how much—and they'll choose the men who'll govern 32 states.

Their votes may indicate, too, how blow the winds for the 1960 Presidential campaign.

A 48-million voter turnout would be a record for a non-presidential election year. Good weather was forecast for most areas, but a surprise snowstorm hit western New England and upstate New York yesterday.

The best available composite opinion of political writers and analysis and newspapermen who have been watching politics for many years gave the following anticipated result, in a Asociated Press survey:

Democrats are favored to take 8 to 12 Republican seats in the Senate, they are expected to increase their House total by 17 to 40 or more, and could pick up 2 or so additional governorships.

The present House division, including vacancies, is 235 Democrats to 20 Rebplicans.

Of the 32 governships at stake today, 18 are in Democratic hands now, 13 in Republican. Over the country, including states whose governors are not up for election, the division is 29 Democrats and 19 Republicans.

Of the 32 governships at stake today, 18 are in Democratic hands now, 13 in Republican. Over the country, including states whose governors are not up for election, the division is 29 Demoorats and 19 Republicans.

Another phase of today balloting will present voters with the need for deciding on scores of referendum proposals. Most significant of these are the right-to-work propositions in six states.

These six states are California—where Knowland threw his massive backing to the right-to-work proposal—Ohio. Kansas, Colorado, Idaho and Washington.

Organized labor has been furiously battling Knowland and other backers of right-to-work, which they call right-to-wreck. Eighteen states now have right-to-work laws, which forbid the requirement of union membership as a condition of getting or holding a job.

Blumenfeld commented that city planning is somewhat easier in Russia because all undeveloped land is owned by the government and economic trends are supposedly determined in advance by the five-year plans.

Wilson spoke on the theory and practice of regional planning. He received his training in city planning here.

Daily Tar Heel To Post Results Of Day's Voting

The Daily Tar Heel will post up-to-the minute election returns from the Associated press tonight in the Rendezvous of Graham Memorial.

GM director Howard Henery has announced that the student union will be open until 1 a.m. for the late results.

Gary Greer, president of tht Dialectic Senate, has said the Di will provide refreshments while the returns come in.

A television set will be in the Rendezvous Room.

The Daily Tar Heel will post results by the hour on the following races: gubernatorial, Senate and House. In addition, reports will be given on major races in the state, including the expanded powers of the justice-of-the-peace amendment, right to work referendums in six states and the 18-year-old vote referendum in South Dakota.

The Daily Tar Heel office will be closed tonight to all people who are not members of the paper's staff, Editor Curtis Gans said yesterday.

Gov't Offices Open To All, Says Furtado

Student Body President Don Furtado said yesterday he will interview students for vacancies on seven student government committees. A total of 24 vacancies are to be filled.

The committees include the following: Traffic Council (one vacancy), Election Board (four vacancies), Attorney General,s staff (six vacancies), Traffic Advisory Commission (one vacancy), Budget Committee (eight vacancies), Traffic Advisory Commission (one vacancy), Budget Committee (eight vacancies), Traffic Council Investigating Board (three vacancies), and the Grahm Memorial Board of Directors (one vacancy).

Interviews with students will be held Friday from 2 to 5 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 11, from 3 to 5:30 p.m.

Furtado especially urged freshman men and junior women to apply for the committees. He said no experience was necessary for membership.

Appointments for intervews may be made by calling the student government office or stopping by the office.

The Traffic Council is a judical body to which some cases of violators of campus parking and automobile rules.

The Elections Board is concerned with: conducting polls supervising and counting ballots, insuring compliance with all provisions of the General Elections Laws, publicizing campus elections, reapportioning and deciding the number and length of terms of legislators to be elected.

Three men and three women will be named to the Attorney

U.S. Culture Flexible, Says Ceylonese Editor

By GAIL GODWIN

A pert newspaper editor from Colombo, Ceylon stated that he would return home soon to tell his readers about a flexible and fluid American culture, ever receptive to new ideas.

The journalist, Perampolam Chettiar Subrahmanyan - "Chett" for short-visited three days in Chapel Hill as part of his three month study tour of the United States as a guest of the United States government.

He attended journalism classes at Carolina, toured the campus, and met with visiting North Carolina newspapermen. In the past two months, "Chett" has visited Washington, D. C. New Jersey, New York, Illinois, Minnesota and Georgia.

One of nine members in a special study group, Chett was the member who chose the South for his main interest.

He said the southern climate made him feel at home.

Editor Subrahmanyan's paper, the weekly "American News," is sponsored by the USIA. It is a four page tabloid in the English language whose purpose it is to create good will between Ceylon and the United States.

The paper is distributed free to the people of Ceylon every Thursday morning. Twenty-five per cent of the people in Ceylon speak English, thus making the area the one of highest literacy rate in Southeast Asia.

Subramanyan also writes for the four daily English papers in Ceylon and for the two papers in his own language-Tamil. He says he is better at satire when he uses his mother tongue. "It is my belief that humor is a powerful weapon in the newspaper world," he added.

As editor of the "American News," he and his staff put out feature news and truth propangan-da stories, and any other items which will help cement United States - Ceylon relations.

One of the many barbed expressions he uses against the U.S.S.R. is. "When it rains in Moscow, Communists in Ceylon hold up their umbrellas."

One of his main problems, says Chett is to illustrate to the Ceylonese the difference between American capitalism and colonial exploitation. The two are often being confused, he pointed out. In writing about the United States, he plans to use a positive approach, telling of United States family life, informality, and "Open Book Policy," as he calls ti.

What is the Open Book Policy? Chett says it is the above board attitude of most Americans. "They are not so entent on hiding the bad and showing only the good to foreigners," he remarked. "For instance, there was the case of the Chicago professor who took me sight-seeing. They have shown you the best,' he told me, 'So now let me show you the slums.' "

He feels that publications that tend to overemphasize American luxuries do more harm than good in struggling countries.

From Chapel Hill, Subrahmanyan went to Washington and from there to San Francisco where he will embark for Japan. He expects to be home with his wife and four children by the last week of November. After his complete circle around the world he will go back to work as a literary ambassador for U. S.-Ceylon good will.

Novice Debate Team Ties Wake-Forest

The UNC novice debate team tied for third place in the Wake Forest Debate tournament last weekend in Winston-Salem.

The UNC team had an overall record of nine wins and three losses. The affirmative team, composed of Carroll and Eisenman, won five and lost one. The negative team, composed of Jeffery Lawrence and Joe Roberts, won four and lost two.

City Planners From Canada Visit Carolina

Two leading Canadian city planners addressed students and faculty of the Department of City and Regional Planning last weekend.

They were Hans Blumenfeld, chief planner of the Metropolitan Toronto Planning Board, and James Wilson, executive director of the Lower Mainland Regional Planning Board, which plans for the region including Vancouver, B.C.

Blumenfeld described the program of his agency, which is unique in the extent of its legal powers and geographical scope. Toronto has the only truly metropolitan government in North America, Blumenfeld pointed out. The metropolitan government has broad jurisdiction over a dozen separate municipalities, each of which retains some degree of local government.

Blumenfeld has long been a prominent figure and noted author in city planning. He previously was a planner in Germany and Russia, and for the City of Philadelphia.

UNC Trustees Study Group Hears State College Grads Ask Better Representation

Annoyed Alums Ask Equality with Carolina

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State College alumni leaders, complaining of "hurt feelings," called Monday for a legislative study commission to seek legislation which would give State College and North Carolina the same number of alumni on the Consolidated University of North Carolina Board of Trustees.

Directors of the North Carolina State College Alumni Assn. also called for a change in the present law which makes the governor exoffice chairman of the UNC trustees.

The chairman, they said, should be elected by the Board of Trustees beginning in 1961.

State Alumni President Mose Kiser of Greensboro served as spokesman for disgruntled old grads of his school as the commission studying the manner of selecting UNC trustees met in the Senate Chamber at the Capitol.

"We feel bad . . . our feelings have been hurt," Kiser said.

By his count, the University at Chapel Hill now has 62 alumni on the UNC Board of Trustees. State College has nine and the Woman's College in Greensboro eight.

Others on the 100-member UNC board have no affiliation with either branch of the consolidated University.

Kiser also presented to the study commission five suggestions, prepared by State College Alumni Assn.'s Board of Directors concerningthe organization of the board of Trustees.

ELECTION DAY IN NORTH CAROLINA

Over 800,000 Tar Heels Expected At Polls Today

By The Asociated Press

Candidates and their suporters got in their final blasts at the opposition Monday as a general election campaign featured by a hot race for Congress in North Carolina's 10th District came to an end.

Republican Rep. Charles R. Jonas, seeking a fourth term as the 10th District Representative in Congres, and his young Democratic challenger, David Clark, got in their final campaign arguments when they appeared in a joint television debate in Charlotte.

Clark, who has waged an energetic campaign as the Democrats made their most determined bid to recapture the Tenth since Jonas was first elected in 1952, had spent the day in a final handshaking tour that took him into all six counties in the 10th District. Jonas, who has also campaigned energeticaly spent most of the day in his office at Lincolnton.

With the campaigning over, upwards of 800,000 Tar Heels are expected to turn out today to cast their ballots, to settle eight contests for Congresional seats — including the Jonas-Clark battle, one U. S. Senate seat, and many local contests including a host of contests for seats in the State Legislature. Polls open at 6:30 a.m. and close at 6:30 p.m. in the state's 2,083 precincts.

The voters will also decide for or against an amendment to the state constitution which would enlarge the jurisdiction of Justice of the Peace courts. The amendment would give Jaypees jurisdiction in claim and delivery actions involving up to $200. The present maximum amount that Jaypees can handle is $50.

The only statewide race is between Democratic Sen. B. Everett Jordan and Republican Richard G. Clarke Jr. of Hendersonville. The contest is for the two years remaining of the Senate term to which the late Sen. W. Kerr Scott was elected.

Of the seven other contests for seats in Congress, the one that has attracted most attention is the 12h District race between Democrat David M. Hall of Sylva and Republican W. Harold Sams of Asheville. They are seeking the place in Congress being vacated by Rep. George Shuford who is stepping down because of his health.

The other six U. S. House of Representatives races match these Democratic incumbents and Republican opponents: Rep. Graham A. Barden and Joe A. Dunn, third District: Rep. Harold D. Cooley and L. T. Dark. Fourth: Rep Ralph J. Scott and William E. Morrow. Fifth; Alton A. Lennon and C. Dana Malpass, Seventh; Rep. A. Paul Kitchin and F. D. B. Harding, Eighth; and Rep. Hugh Q. Alexander and William White, Ninth.

Fourt Democratic congressmen, who had no Republican opponents in the election, were: Rep. Herbert C. Bonner, First District; Rep. L. H. Fountain, Second; Rep. Carl T. Durham, Sixth; and Rep. Basil Whitener, 11th.

PLANNING STARTS TOMORROW

Y's 1959 European Tour To Include Russia

By MARY BAHNSEN

In June 1958, 30, Carolina students sailed for Europe as the beginning of a 70-day trip abroad.

In June 1958, other UNC students will embark on a similar experience with an added destination: the Soviet Union.

Wensday afternoon at 4:30 p.m. a meeting will be held in the Library Assembly Room for all interested in such a trip.

Last year's trip included touring and meeting people in France, Switzerland, Italy Germany Holland, England, Belgium, and Austria. The European visit started with a 10-day in private homes in Berlin, where a seminar had peen arranged by a Berlin Quaker center for the Carolina students. They met with students and political, religious leaders of East and West Berlin.

Ann Harvey, UNC senior who participated in the tour, explained that through the experiences in Berlin the Carolina students gained a clearer understanding and insight to the other places they visited.

Claude Shotts, coorinator for last years tour defined these trips"not as tours but educational experiences.

All the plans made for the 1958 trip were made by the students themselves. Last spring they met with several faculty members who were familiar with Europe and places to be visited.

The Carolina tour differed in other ways from average European tour. Besides visiting the main tourist attractions, the UNC students stopped in many places "off the beaten trail." One such town, Blankenburg, a mountain village in Germany, Ann Harvey described as a place where "the people spoke no English and stared at us as if they'd seen few Americans." Here progress was something unheard of, she said. "The cobbled streets, plastered houses, built close together and native dress of black suits and dark ankle-legnth dresses was something many city tours would miss," she commented.

Shotts claimed there are an infinate number of variations that can be arranged for such tours.

James Carse, staff member and explained that next summer's trip coordinator for this year's tour, "will not be a rubberneck tour, but will be made as vital as learning experience as possible. We will be meeting with students along the way besides walking through ruins and visiting museams."

The trip in 1959 possibly will be a three month tour: one month traveling in Europe, the second month traveling in Russia and the last month the students traveling on their own. There are many unrealized touring possibilities in Russia, Carson said, including visiting homes, attending classes in Universities, Touring cities of Leningrad, Kieve, Stalingrad and Moscow and a stemship excursion of the Black Sea.

In preparation for such a tour, weekly seminars will be held next semester where the students will study and discuss the places they have desided to visit.

"If we have a trip again this year," Shotts said, "It is hoped that those taking part will plan the things they will do in Europe, profitting by the experiences of the 30 Carolina students who were there last summer."

State Lottery Is Phi's Topic

By STAN BLACK

The issue of a state lottery in North Carolina for income purposes will be debated by the Philantropic Literary Society tonight at 8 o'clock.

The rising costs of goverment on all levels and the already heavy burden of taxes on the populace have forced goverments to look for revenue in other areas than that of taxes.

One of the more promising of these other ares appears to be the idea of the lottery, which has already been adopted sucessfully by the British government it will be argued tonight that losing money in a gambeling game is a much less painful measure than higher taxes.

Furthermore the idea is popular with voters, who probably feel that it will be someone else loosing money on the lottery. As the people are faced with ever-rising debts on the state and national levels of government, the lottery becomes a more attractive proposition.

The bill of the evening states that "the Phi goes on record as favoring the adoption of a statewide lottery in North Carolina. All interested persons have been invited to attend.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Election

The campaign is over, and the various claims and counter claims have been spoken, the public, those of whom deem their franchise important, will vote, and the result will be known shortly.

Significant change may not be effected by the ballot today, but the possibility is there. Indeed, the only possibility for the people, not the various interest groups, to effect change is to exercise their vote in all forms of national and local politics on every level. The votes that will not be cast today will be important too, for they will reflect that democracy in the United States is not actually the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, but rather government of perhaps of half influenced by the few. It is hoped that all thinking individuals will exercise their franchise wisely, and that campus participation will be at maximum.

After the balloting is over, enjoy watching the results in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial, The Daily Tar Heel, the Dialectic Senate, the Philanthropic Assembly and Graham Memorial are cooperating in bringing the students an up-to-the minute account of the election returns until 1 a.m.

Computer

The University of North Carolina has a new computer, and it is an event to be hailed. The growth of the research triangle is a signal achievement to be hailed, and the significance of the computer being placed at UNC is not to be overlooked, for it places UNC as the leader in pure research in the Research Triangle.

The development of North Carolina is proceeding at a rapid rate, and this new piece of evidence is a sign to pave the way.

Education

There is a lack throughout the United States in a basic commitment to education. In a time when education was never more important, the present emphasis sense in all other fields.

Congress in its first action toward aid to education could do no better than set up loans and provide for scientific education, and the state of North Carolina at the present time carries it primary commitment to road building and industrial expansion.

Throughout the United States education is treated with disrespect, and the tangible manifesations of this are all too obvious. Low teacher's salaries, the increasingly high cost of education, and the lack of legislative programming for this vital area.

Democracy is dependent for its existence on a thinking populace, who by their vote can delineate more important issues. It is a necessity that democracy have for its leadership intelligent people who are able to grasp the problems of the day not only in terms of the day, but in terms of the long range future. It is important that the many realize that the value of democracy lies in the individual contributions that are made in all fields from the artistic to the scientific. It is important that the idea that a real contribuion cannot be made until each indivdual thinks and each indivdual has the tools of thought is given credence.

On the national level, this has not even been started, and on the state level there has ben only slight progress.

North Carolina is growing thanks to the economic leadership of Governor Hodges, but its growth has not been compensated by a concern for education and for the expansion, growth, and qualitative improvement necesary to bring the level of thought up in the state, and to provide for the growing population.

Industry will bring revenue to the state, but where that revenue is applied will be the most important question to be decided. The necessity for making the primary commitment to education rather than road building or any other facet of life is extremely important.

A commitment on the national level to the same effect might bring the United States out of the doldrums which it now inhabits. A combined effort to bring back respect for the intelect, to breed a thinking people, and to make democracy work is necessary.

Education, which has never been made an issue in an election, had better be the main issue before long. If not, it may soon be too late.

How To Cast Your Ballot Today

James Reston

(The following is from Sunday's New York Times)

Voting next Tuesday should really be very simple. All you have to do is analyze the major speeches of both parties and follow their advice.

Both parties are for peace and prosperity, and of course both are "forward-looking," except that the Southern Democrats and Republican conservatives are less forward-looking than the "Northern radicals" and Eisenhower Republicans.

The danger in voting for the Democrats is that "the dominant wing of the party" will lead the country down the road to socialism and meanwhile get into such a fight with the Southern Democrats that it won't be able to lead the country anywhere.

The danger in voting for the Republicans is that they won't spend enough money to defend the country from its Communist enemies and besides have piled up in the last year a $12 billion deficit. This is a policy of "less bang for two bucks" and is enough to bring on a depression that will curl or at least wave your hair.

Next to Khrushchev and his one-drink-to-a-customer policy, the greatest menace to civilization is the selfish, power-hungry defiant labor-union boss like Walter Reutrer, who voted for Stevenson, and Jimmy Hoffa and Dave Beck, who voted for Eisenhower.

The Democrats are indifferent to the corrupt labor union bosses, which is why Senator John McClellan, Republican of Arkansas, and Senator John Kennedy, Republican of Massachusetts, had to summon Hoffa and Beck before the McClellan Committee.

The Republicans, on the other hand, are the friend of the working man and the foe of the labor goons, which is why 77 per cent of them in the House voted against the Kennedy-Ives Bill requiring union leaders to make public union financial reports, insisting on regular union elections by secret ballot, and denying union offices to convicts. Senator Irving M. Ives, Democrat of New York was co-author of the bill.

The Democrats were so angry about this, so eager to reform labor, that they voted against an even tougher anti-racketeering bill, and this, of course, clarified everything.

Both sides are for the laborer's right to work in one form or another. The Democrats are for his right to work in compulsory union shops, and they are also for his right to sell his house and move to some other state if he doesn't like to work in states that rule out compulsory union shops.

Some Republicans in some states, California and Ohio, for example, are for making voluntary unionism compulsory, but of course, some others, like the Republican Governor of California, Goodwin J. Knight, are against it. The administration in Washington, led by President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon, is neutral on right-to-work legislation, and this policy is followed by the Eisenhower cabinet, except, of course, Secretary of Labor James Mitchell, who is against state right-to-work laws. Understand?

On the national economy, the Democrats, who let prices rise 50 per cent under Truman, are furious because prices rose 8 per cent under Eisenhower, and there are only 65,000,000 people working in the country today, compared with 61,000,000 in 1952.

In contrast, the Republicans think "the last six years have been the best six years of our lives" and that "things are good and getting better all the time," except of course, in Michigan, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and the other places where there are 4,000,000 people unemployed.

This tidies up everything except foreign policy, and here the voter must take a stand either for or against Secretary of State Dulles, except that he's not on the ballot, and the Democrats voted to let him do what he liked about Quemoy and Matsu, anyway.

In these circumstances, a few simple tips on voting may be in order:

1. There is some truth in all campaign statements but not much.

2. Experience shows that most politicians are never quite as good or as bad as they sound, and the country's capacity to endure them is pretty stout.

3. Finally, when confronted by a choice between an old numskull and a new numskill running for Congress, always choose the new ones because the old ones have seniority.

THE DHARMA BUMS. By Jack Kerouac. 244 pp. New York: The Viking Press. $3.95

In the English Department of an old New England school there is a great teacher, and among his virtues is his unwillingness to accept from his early-adolescent pupils anything which smacks of sham or pretense.

It is the prectice of this personnage to assign a paper of five hundred or one thousand words each week or two, and should any one of these papers offend his delicate sense of sham, the guilty student is warned with an inconspicuous "e.i." or "c.c." on the top of his paper: "e.i." stands for Ellis Island, the gateway to the U.S. for immigrants to these shores, and as a grade it indicates that the writer is ignorant of the English language; "c.c." is mark of a more serious offense, and its rare appearance indicates that the offending work bodes the complete "collapse of civilization."

Mr. Kerouac merits 'e.i." and "c.c." for "The Dharma Bums."

The "e.i." is applicable because Mr. Kerouac affects a complete innocence of the conventions of English prose, and he does so to no apparent end. It is quite permissible today to stretch the language quite out of form, as in "Finnegan's Wake" or the poetry of E. E. Cummings, just so long as the distortion is in the service of communication. It is not legitimate, however, to be sloppy—to neglect punctuation and sentence structure without purpose; as in the following: ". . . . Japhy and I were kind of outlandish-looking on the campus in our old clothes in fact Japhy was considered an eccentric around the campus . . . ."

Mistakes of this sort are minor, however, in comparison with the other indictments which might legitimately be drawn against Mr. Kerouac. To lump all of these into one charge, thus doing each an injustice but saving space, Mr. Kerouac is unbelievably naive in every way. He is naive about Zen Buddhism (as all but the extraordinary Westerner must be), he is naive about English prose, he is naive about poetry, etc. Should his naivete become general, and everyone act as Mr. Kerouac does, the result would be "c.c."

The immediate problem is that Mr. Kerouac makes himself unavailable to criticism from any angle. If one strips away his artifacts in search of his idea, one must find that he has no idea; and the mere stripping away of the artifacts of his prose, idiocy after idiocy, would result in a criticism both longer than "The Dharma Bums" and superior to it. Inside the cover of the review copy of "The Dharma Bums" are sixty notations of only the most obvious idiocies. A random sampling may suffice in lieu of more formal criticism.

p. 14. "'F— you! sang Cayote, and ran away!' read Japhy to the distinguished audience, making them all howl with joy, it was so pure, f— being a dirty word that comes out clean."

The word "f—" may have meaning and impact, and thus be legitimate in poetry But it will never never never come out clean, thank God. Mr. Kerouac considers this fine poetry. If it is, then even dormitory bull session is a veritable orgy of poetic creation.

p. 32. Speaking of Japhy again, "Besides all the background he has, in Oriental scholarship, Pound, taking pepote and seeing visions . . . . wow, Japhy Ryder is a great new hero of American culture."

Here the "c.c" looms imminent.

p. 34. "Your Buddhism has made you mean Ray and makes you even afraid to take your clothes off for a simple healthy orgy.

p. 46. "'These people must be assholes,' he added in a sudden straight revelation.

This is fundamentalism at its worst.

p. 86. After supposedly running down a high and treacherous mountain: "I just skipped and jumped and danced along and I had really learned that you can't fall off a mountain."

Got that, Mr. Hillary?

p. 100. Mr. Kerouac is invited to recit his latest poem, and it is judged "fine." The poem: "Mother of children, sister, daughter of sick old man, virgin your blouse is torn, hungry and barelegged, I'm hungry too, take these poems."

The difficulties of criticism become more obvious here.

More of Mr. Kerouac's poetry: "Light a fire, fight a liar, what's the difference, in existence?"; also, "A watermelon seed, produces a need, large and juicy, such autocracy"; and, ". . . I want my Dharma Bums to have springtime in their hearts when the blooms are girling and the birds are dropping little fresh turds surprising cats who wanted to eat them a moment ago"; and so on.

Somewhere toward the end of all this, Mr. Kerouac comes to the conclusion that he is a Buddha. Earlier in the book occurs the definition "the Buddha is a dried piece of turd."

Mr. Kerouac is safe in this apparent contradiction for the simple reason that Buddhism is by definition unavailable to the intellect, and so if a man says he is a Buddha, he cannot be proven wrong. Mr. Kerouac's Buddhahood remains extremely doubtful.

Unfortunately, it appears that The Viking Press is guilty of the commercialism which Mr. Kerouac avowedly deplores, but in which he seems quite willingto particapte. The Viking people are accepting manuscripts which were written and generally rejected years ago, taking advantage of the public's interest in and partial sympathy with Kerouac's particular way og being "Beat."

There is hope, however, that no-one else will take Mr. Kerouac as seriously as he seems to take himself. The old Gods may be dead, but we will not choose Buddha in the person of Mr. Kerouac to fill the void.

Letters From Readers On Many Topics

Editor:

Tonight I witnessed one of the finest exhibitions of asininity ever perpetrated on an audience in Chapel Hill. I refer to the Young Democrat Club meeting held in the Law School courtroom. Scheduled to begin at 7:30, the speaker toddled in at 7:45. Then the waiting group was regaled with a show of proper parliamentary procedure while an executive committee of seven was elected and a vice-president was railroaded into office. Finally — thirty-five tedious, boring, ennui-infected minutes late—the orator was allowed to take the rostrum. I'm sure Congressman Durham was a fine man in his day, and he was candid enough to admit that he had prepared nothing to say; however, his rambling concoctino of platitudes, geneology and personal agrandizement had the most ardent Democrat I know (he even likes Harry) weighted down in spirit by the dreariness and listlessness of the address. There was a bright spot when he told of sailing a ship to Atlanta (Georgia?) during the War of 1812. But that is excusable; after all, he's getting old. Suffice it to say, I strongly feel that it is impudently rude, ill-bred, ill-mannered, and ungracious to keep an audience (matterless how small) waiting for over half an hour unnecessarily. It would have been so very easy to hold the business session after the allocution. Admittedly it was a private club meeting, to be conducted as the presiding officer saw fit; nevertheless, if the Young Democrat Club expects to progress at all, it would do well to improve the way meetings are engineered.

In this day of great "ecumenical" activity, I am happy that my own church — the St. Peanuts' Fanaticopalian Church—is careful to distinguish between Charity and compromise of the One True Faith.

We didn't choose to become the repositories of the One True Faith. It just happened that way, although we must confess that it couldn't happen to a nicer cal" activity, I am happp that my fraternity brothers. Anyway, you can easily see that as a consequence we couldn't possibly be caught before God eating with publicans and sinners at the Lord's Table. Therefore we have CLOSED COMMUNION. You know—closed cimmunion, closed minds.

This is not being narrow-minded. It is simply being loyal to our Lord, out of gratitude for the fact that he has confided in us the One Great, August, Real, Infinite and Eternal Truth.

Why be bigoted, Mr. Malone, when with a little effort you too, can become a Fanaticopalion?

On Temple Bombings

Ronnie Shumate

To borrow a phrase from Norman Smith's column in Wednesday's Daily Tar Heel, the "temples" of too many people are being bombed. I do not speak of Webster's definition of the word. Webster defines "temple" as "an edifice dedicated to the worship of a diety."

True the papers have been full of Webster's kind of temple bombings of late. But Mr. Smith is the first to bring to light the bombings of personal temples, meaning the fear, revulsion, and aggression we harbor for those who are "'different.'"

Too many people seem to be almost totally unaware of their feelings toward those who are "different." Mr. Smith's acknowledgement of his fears, etc., show the deep thought he has put into his writings.

But these feelings we harbor in this respect go much, much deeper than most of us realize. Such feelings toward our fellow-man reach into our beliefs.

Our beliefs, whether we speak of moral, spiritual or physical, are not to be sneezed at. We should no turn away from our beliefs just because we fear we will be ridiculed. As Ovid once said, "We are slow to believe what hurts when believed." This, unfortunately, is all too true.

Then there is the question of "What" we believe. How many of us know just what we do believe? Few, I'd say. This problem is prevalent in the minds of all of us, though many of us are not aware of it. And the few of us who are aware of it cannot, or will not, admit it. No one can answer this question of what one believes except the individual himself. But this question will never be answered for many of us simply because we are afraid to answer it.

Thus another question rears its ugly head. Why are we afraid to answer such questions? We are, in part, wary of answering them because we are so set in our ways and thoughts that we refuse to permit anyone or anything to interrupt our lackadaisical lives. We choose a pattern for our lives and adhere so closely to it that we seldom give a thought to any "foreign" incidents which should happen to pass our way.

So, we find ourselves confronted by still another question. This one is almost unanswerable. The question, why do we believe the things we believe, can only in Rare (capital "R") occasions be put in black and white in so many words. In fact, I will readily admit that I do not know exactly why I believe some of the things I believe. This is the one question mentioned thus far in this article for which we cannot be too sharply criticized for leaving unanswered. I don't think we are wrong to doubt Why we believe. The wrong in doubting comes when we merely let our doubts drift along and nothing is done about them.

It is not enough just to believe. We must know, or at least have a reasonable facsimile of, the answers to our questions and doubts .If we merely set our ideals and beliefs on a pedestal before us, and leave them there to decay, we don't really believe. We only think we believe. Most of the things we "believe" we really don't believe at all. We have merely memorized things we have been taught from childhood. We learned, or most of us did, that there is a God; just as we learned that 1 plus 1 equals 2. That seems to be the only basis for our beliefs, which, as I have said before, are in reality, not beliefs at all unless an attempt to answer some of these questions.

If any of us should take it upon himself to answer, or even Attempt to answer, these questions he will certainly gain more than knowledge that can be put down on a sheet of paper somewhere. In the answers to these questions lies the basis for our whole concept of life and living. But, on the other hand, if we continue to let the answers drift along ahead of us, out of our reach, we are bombing our own temples. We complain if someone else bombs our temples, but we don't seem to so much as realize that more damage is done by our own bombs.

Why don't we close our bomb-bay doors? Then we will be able to put an end to the destruction of the temples of others, as well as our own.

Toward More Understanding

Gottfried O. Lang

For instance, in the short period of about twenty-five years an agrarian Moslem population of the Aures Mountains in Algeria has slipped from a standard of living described as "poor" at best to a level of living which can now only be called "pauperism." How did this come about? The provision of some few medical services and the control of certain epidemic-producing diseases like typhus and malaria have brought about a tremendous increase in the population. As the population increased, the production of food had to be increased also, but as more food was grown, the land rapidly became depleted and food production inevitably declined. Now the people live a hand to mouth existence. Survive they will, because modern medicine makes this possible, but survive at what level? Positive health measures, in spite of their immediate good, have brought terrible long-range results. A humanitarian deed has in effect contributed to greater suffering because it was not considered in relation to the total situation.

These examples, which attempt to illustrate some of the difficulties of cross-cultural communication and cross-cultural action, have been chosen from the experience of cultural anthropologists. Their approach to human behavior can, if listened to, help to open up a new appreciation of people and their problems. Even in our own culture we take things for granted and are not aware of their ramifications until they are challenged. And when we go abroad, we have the tendency to view the life-ways of other peoples through our own cultural lenses.

Until we acknowledge that peoples of different cultures are not the same, as the "human nature" over-simplification would have us believe, and that cultures are not static, as the Victorian view of the "benighted heathen" would suggest, we shall meet hostility and suspicion in our dealings with other peoples. Only when we curb our tendency to moralize and learn to inquire into and respect the cultures which are different from our own, can we being really to communicate with our world-neighbors.

All-Carolina Magazine Now In Planning Stage

In the early part of December, SPECTRUM, a new campus magazine will appear, Dennis Parks announced yesterday.

SPECTRUM will be a voice of the campus containing fiction, poetry, art, essay and criticism. Dennis Parks, who is editor-in-chief of the new magazine, stressed the fact that SPECTRUM is going to present work submitted only by those contributors who are in some way connected with the campus and the University.

Work submitted by others will not be accepted for evaluation or publication. It was also stressed that the magazine will be independent and in no way connected with any organization on campus.

SPECTRUM was formulated by a group of students who felt trat there was a need for a vehicle of expression of opinions, ideas and artistic creation originating on campus. They believed that this need is of long standing, and SPECTRUM is designed to be such a vehicle which will serve as a voice of the campus.

Parks has asked that anyone who wishes to submit material to SPECTRUM send it to: SPECTRUM, 208 West Franklin Street, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Script Contest Opened For Sound And Fury

A $50 contest for scripts written for Sound and Fury was announced yesterday.

Bob Carter, chairman of the Graham Memorial Activities Board said that scripts for the Sound and Fury, a musical comedy usually performed in mid-spring, should be turned in at the GMAB office or the information office in GM.

The deadline will be around Thanksgiving and the scripts will be judged between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

The judges will be a five-member committee selected by Carter and the GM Director Howard Henry. The committee reserves the right not to select a script from those submitted, Carter said.

The Graham Memorial Board of Directors approved the proposal for the contest at a meeting last week. The Sound and Fury is a production of the Student Productions Committee of the student union. The committee is headed by Wally Kuralt.

IT GETS THE JOB DONE—This dial-system horn has bellowed out warnings of fire in Chapel Hill now for 30 years. The noise it gives from the top of Town Hall has been described variously as "an injured water buffalo," and the "ooga" on a Model-T Ford. But the fact remains: it gets the job done, alerting firemen to call.

It May Sound Funny To Some, But Fire Horn Does Its Job

By JIM JONES

"My gosh," a newcomer to Chapel Hill was overheard to say recently, "What was that? It sounded like a bull moose roaring down Franklin St."

The newcomer referred to a sound which actually sounds like the "ooga" of an early-model car, without the "a."

It's Chapel Hill's 30-year-old dial-system fire horn and despite its unique sound, it does its job today as efficiently as it did in 1928, when it was installed in the old fire station here.

According to Fire Chief John S. Boone, the horn, recognized by Fire Underwriters, still carries across the lengths of Chapel Hill to alert firemen at home of a call.

However, the horn's role has been modified by electronics. For several years, the fire department has alerted men at night via a radio hookup in their home. The department has nine full-time men, 15 men on call, and six volunteers.

The horn is used now for all daytime calls, but at night only when the alarm is in the city limits. Operated by a dial system, the horn blows a number of blasts that are deciphered by the firemen to tell them where the fire is located. It is operated by compressed air.

"It may sound sort of funny to some people," Chief Boone said, "but it gets the job done."

Piano-Violin Combination Set Tonight

A sonata recital by Giorgio Ciompi, violinist, and Arthur Loesser, pianist, will be the third program on the Tuesday Evening Series today at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Their appearance is being sponsored by the University Music Department. No admission will be charged for the recital which is open to the public.

Ciompi and Loesser will play three sonatas for violin and piano: Beethoven's Sonata in G Major, Op. 30, No. 2; Brahms' Sonata in A Major, Op. 100, and Franck's Sonata in a Major.

Ciompi, a native of Florence, Italy, has lived in the United States since 1947. In New York City he was a member of the NBC Symphony under Toscanin for five years. He was also concert master of the Collegium Musicum and made many tours with the Albeneri Trio.

Ciompi is now head of the violin department of the Cleveland Institute of Music where he is first violinist of the Institute String Quartet.

Loeser, pianist, teacher and writer, also makes his home in Cleveland where he is head of the piano department of the Cleveland Institute of Music.

He has traveled throughout the United States, German, Australia and in the aFr East as a concert pianist. Loesser has given recitals in New York and has been soloist with many orchestras including the New York Philharmonic.

Loesser is editor of Scarlatti Sonatas and Hayden Sonatas published in 1948. His book "Men, Women and Pianos" was published in 1954.

The appearance of Loesser on Tuesday in Chapel Hill marks his second trip here. Several years ago he gave a program consisting of all 48 Preludes and Fugues from Bach's Well-Tempered Clavier."

The tradition of sonata recitals in Hill Hall began with frequent appearances of Dr. William S. Newman and Dr. Edgar Alden, both of the University's Music Department in performances of seldom heard works from the literature for piano and violin.

Five down and three to go. That's the situation facing Carolina's Tar Heels as of this week. Two bowls, Orange and Sugar, already are casting sidelong glances at the Heels. Should they sweep the next three, as they did the last five, a bowl bid would be practically cinched.

The next three, however, are not the easiest teams in the world to beat. There's Virginia, Notre Dame and Duke in that order. Virginia should be easy, but we must not look too far ahead come next Saturday.

In Knoxville — All Carolina

In Knoxville, it was all Carolina. Only once did the tough Tar Heel defense give in even a little bit, and thaton a lucky break. Except for the lone touchdown Tennessee counted on a recovered fumble, the Vols were unable to penetrate beyond the Carolina 45.

The offense, which found itself three weeks ago, didn't get lost Saturday. In the opening moments it looked like a possible rout. Two quick touchdowns and the Heels were never headed.

Cummings Like A Wizard

Don Klochak is Athlete of the Week, and deservingly so. But Jack Cummings was the mastermind behind all the Tar Heel scores, the wizard who knew just what to do when. Cummings immediately sized up the situation the first time Carolina got its hands on the football, and guided the Heels on a 78-yard scoring march. He did exactly the same thing the very next time Carolina got the pigskin.

But when he really looked great was on the final touchdown march, which completely broke the Vols. Cummings threw, and completed, four straight passes on third down, the last going to Wade Smith for a touchdown. He was rushed every time, but performed with the icy calm of an Otto Graham.

Blazer Blasts Holes

In the forward wall, which was simply great from end to end, Captain Phil Blazer led the attack. Blazer cleared out holes big enough to drive a moving van through.

Back to the bowl situation: The opening defeats the Tar Heels suffered can not be erased. Down at Clemson there is a group of young men who also would like to go to a bowl. This same group has beaten Carolina.

Tiger Schedule Tough

The remaining schedule for the Tigers shows Georgia Tech, State, and Boston College in that order, followed by luckless Furman. The Tigers will be lucky indeed if they win three of those games. They almost have to do it to stay in the running.

It is entirely possible that Carolina could lose one more game and go to a bowl, but it's unlikely. Though Virginia is rather out-of-it without the services of hot-shot Reece Whitley, they must not be taken lightly. If Carolina is caught looking ahead to Notre Dame and forgetting the Cavaliers, they may wish they'd never seen Virginia.

Tar Heels Are Hot Team

A point in favor of the Tar Heels being sent to a bowl: they are the hot team, the comers, the hustlers who bounced back after two defeats to compile a good record. Clemson would be the exact reverse of that; that is, the boys who started fast and couldn't keep it up. But all this is mere supposition, for the Tigers could easily win the rest of their games.

The Tar Heels are now "over the hump". The Tennessee win was a big one psychologically. The Team now knows what it can do, but those first two loses should kill any feelings of over-confidence that may be harbored. The remainder of the season will not, however, be a downhill glide but a steep uphill climb. Remember Virginia beat Duke, and Saturday, Notre Dame really creamed Navy.

Klochak Is Athlete Of The Week

Don (The Bull) Klochak, who ran so sensationally against the Tennessee Vols last Saturday, is the Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week.

Klochak, who had played only sporadically before the Volunteer game, went into action the first time Carolina got the ball. The Bull, along with Wade Smith and Moe DeCantis, was instrumental in the sustained touchdown drive which covered 78 yards. Klochak capped the march with an 18-yard power play of left tackle on which he ran right over three Vol defenders and crashed into the end zone for the first Carolina score.

Klochak Sets Up Score

As soon as the Tar Heels got their hands on the ball again, Big Don once again supplied much of the power in another TD drive. It was Klochak who ran ten yards for a first down from a 3rd and 8 situation at the Tennessee 18. Two plays later DeCantis cracked over for the second Tar Heel marker.

Later in the contest, in the second half, Klochak successfully ran the two-point after touchdown try to pull Carolina to a 21-7 lead which they never relinquished.

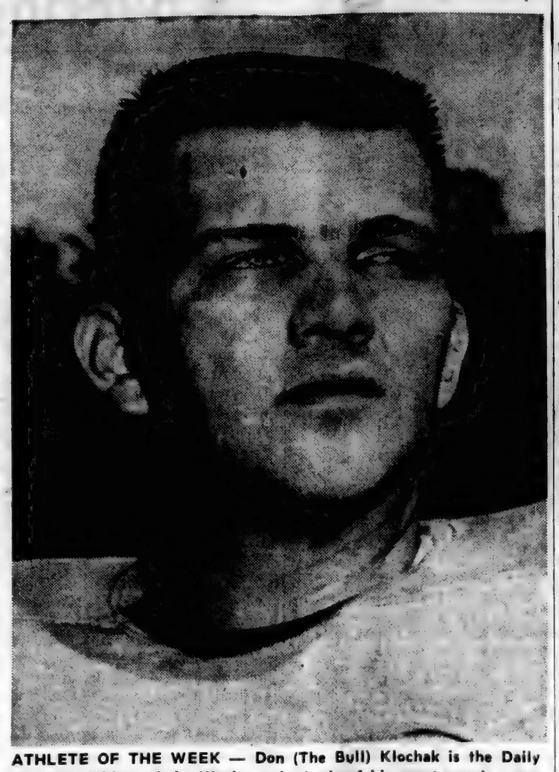
The entire Tennessee aggregation was surprised by Klochak's performance, as their scouting report hardly mentioned him at all. In a great day's work, Don ran the ball 15 times for 92 yards, an average of 6.1 per carry. He also gained twice as much yardage on the ground personally than the whole Tennesse team.

May Start Against Virginia

It now appears certain that the chronic problem at halfback is solved for Carolina. Klochak, said Coach Jim Tatum after the game, will probably start against Virginia if he is ready to go.

Klochak was a star here at Carolina in 1954 as a sophomore before entering the service for three years. The announcement that he would return this year filled many Tar Heel fans with joy, but at the first of the season the long layoff was evident and The Bull just couldn't get his running legs back.

Saturday Klochak came into his own for the first time, and now can truly be rated as one of the finest fullbacks in the conference, if not the nation.



ATHLETE OF THE WEEK — Don (The Bull) Klochak is the Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week on the basis of his great running performance against Tennessee. Big Don gained more than twice as much ground yardage as the whole Tennessee team.

Don Klochak is a 23-year old 6-2, 235 pound junior from Fairhope, Pa. He is also a very fine fullback.

Booters Meet Roanoke Here

The varsity soccer team will return to the tough competitive ranks today when it faces Roanoke College here at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

Roanoke, a small Virginia school which gives scholarships in soccer, represents the Tar Heels toughest competition since the Washington game contest of October 22.

Coach Marvin Allen's squad, in its last two games, has played schools which only recently adopted soccer as a school sport.

Last week the team registered an easy 3-1 victory over Pfeiffer College in Misenheimer, and then rolled to a 15-1 win over Emory University.

Most of Emory's team was made up of players whose only soccer experience had been in tramural contests. Friday's game with the Tar Heels was their first intercollegiate game.

Roanoke will have a revenge minded squad today, anxious to get back at the Tar Heels for last year's 3-0 lost in Chapel Hill.

In last year's game, the season opener for Coach Alen's team, the Tar Heel outhustled the Roanoke team from the beginning and gained a distinct psychological advantage.

Thompson Leads Offense

Fleet-footed Mike Thompson will lead Carolina's offensive unit against Roanoke from his center forward position. At left forward will be Joe Perkins and John Ghanim at right forward, both of whom have been on a scoring spree. Ghanim scored three goals in the third quarter of the Emory game.

At right wing will be tough Coleman Barks, who has set up numerous scoring plays. Rick Grausman, who has scored in the last two games, will be at left wing.

On defense, hustling Bob Quackenbush has apparently nailed down a starting berth at one of the halfback postions. Other players who will alternate at the halfback positions will be Tate Robertson, Bob Borden, Bill Stem and Tom White.

Soaring Club Formed Here

The Tarheel Soaring Club, which was formed Oct. 18 and has 16 members from Chapel Hill, Durham, Greensboro, Charlotte and Advance — including two UNC students — will have a dinner meeting at Paul's Restaurant in Burlington, Saturday at 7 p.m.

The club is open to anyone who is interested in gliders and sailplanes. Members include those who have up to 250 hours of flying time and some who have never seen a glider or sailplane.

Anyone interested in attending the meeting should call Nyal Williams at 7-3842 or write Emerson Ford, club chairman, at 4326 Duke Station, Durham.

Movies on the sport of soaring will be shown at the meeting.

The club is presently in the market for a two place sailplane that can also be used as a training glider.

Zetes Face Va. In Mud Bowl

The Zeta Psi's, champions of last year's intramural tag football event, will play St. Anthony's Hall who are the champions of the University of Virginia.

The game wil take place at the "Mud Bowl" in Charlottesville Va. It will be at 10 o'clock on Saturday November 8.

This is a traditional game that was revived in 1956. The University of Va. won in 1956, and in 1957 the game ended in a draw.

Better Than 50% Play Intramurals At UNC

By JERRY GARRISON

Better than 50% of the men students at Carolina have participated in at least one phase of the intramural program during the past 10 years.

The intramural program is one of the most extensive that there is in the state. There is a wide range of events in which an athletic-minded person may participate.

The goal of the Intramural Department is have the total percentage reach 100. They keep an individual record on each person that participates in an athletic event.

The greatest interest in the program is in the point system activities, in which teams from different organizations compete for a championship trophy. The events in this phase of the program are: tag football, volleyball, wrestling, basketball, handball, table tennis badminton, softball tennis horseshoes, and track.

Among the other all-campus and club actviities are: fall tennis, Rod and Gun Field Meet, faculty volleyball, Co-Rec Carnival, all-campus handball, co-rec volleyball, swimming, co-rec swimming, soccer, Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree, Greek Week Pledge Relays, Big-4 Rod and Gun Field Meet, golf, fencing club, Big-4 Sports Day, and water polo.

With all of the events taking place during the course of a year, there should be an event to interest each and every student on the campus.

The Intramural Department also sponsors the Freshman Field Day which is held during Orientation Week.

In order that even more interest may be created in the athletic program, the Department gives numerous awards in trophies, plaques and sportswear during the year.

Scales Ask Court To Reverse Order

WASHINGTON (AP)—Junius Irving Scales, one-time Carolinas Communist party chief, asked the Supreme Court Monday to reverse his second trial conviction under a subversive activities law.

Scales, University of North Carolina graduate and a native of Greensboro, faces a six-year prison sentence.

The high tribunal reversed Scales' first conviction under the law known as the Smith Act, because the government refused to produce FBI reports from informers.

Scales then was tried again in federal court in North Carolina and his second conviction was upheld on Oct. 6 by the U. S. Circuit Court in Richmond.

The circuit court said the government had to reveal in court only those parts of classified FBI records which were germane to the testimony in a case.

Scales was alleged to have joined the Communist party in January 1,946, knowing it to be a group of persons who advocated violent overthrow of the government.

It was also charged that Scales intended to bring about overthrow of the government by force and violence as circumstances would permit.

The new appeal questions whether the indictment against Scales charged an offense under federal law in view of a section of the 1950 Internal Security Act which says that neither the holding of office nor membership in any Communist organization will constitute a violation of that act or any other criminal statute.

Scales asked whether the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction under the Smith Act in accordance with standards prescribed by the Supreme Court in what is known as the Yates decision. In that decision the court overturned conviction of 14 California Communist leaders and said the Smith Act does not prohibit advocacy and teaching of forcible overthrow of government as an abstract principle.

Scales also questioned whether he had had a fair trial.

Siemer Guilty On Two Counts, Innocent On 1

By CHUCK FLINNER

In an afternoon session of the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Tuesday Judge W. S. Stewart found UNC student Fred Siemer guilty on two counts and innocent on a third count involving a goal post incident after the UNC-Maryland football game.

When the session got underway both the defense and the state agreed to consolidating the three charges. Siemer was charged with malicious damage to public property, assaulting an officer by pushing him over a fence and public drunkeness. Siemer was found guilty on the charge of damage and public drunkenness.

The defense entered a plea of not guilty to the combined charges. The first witness called by the stand was Officer H. A. Gattis of the Chapel Hill Police Dept. Gattis testified that he attempted to stop Semier from taking down the goal post, that Semier shoved him twice and he told Semier to leave.

They headed toward the fence just beyond the end zone and at the fence he lifted Semier over the fence, Gattis said. He smelled what he thought to be alochol and was of the opinion that he was drunk, Gattis testified.

The next witnesses were for the defense. The first of the three, John Harney a first year law student at UNC, testified he noticed the incident when Semier and Gattis were at the fence. He said that the officer placed Semier over the fence. Semier then uprighted himself and ran "like a scared jackrabbit," Harney said.

The second witness for the defense was called to the stand. Richard Jones Jr., also a first year law student who was leaving the game with Harney, testified that the officer appeared to lose his temper and put Semier across the fence. Semier, who had half fallen to the ground, caught the fence, then ran as the officer began to cross.

Richard Moulton, a graduate student in economics, was the third of the defense witnesses. Moulton testified that he was leaving the game with his wife he saw the incident, at the fence. He described Semier as having "a casual manner" while the officer was encouraging him to leave. The officer "pushed, placed, put, or however you want to put it, the defendant across the fence". He added he agreed with the testimony of Harney in that the defendant ran "like a scared jack-rabbit."

A FEW DRINKS

Semier testified he had a part in bringing down the goal post with several others. He said it was not damaged but was grought down easily by lifting it from steel tubes in the ground and laying it down. He admitted that he had had a few drinks but said he did not feel he could be consitered as a public drunk. He said he left the goal post alone when told to stop

Down-To-Wire Battle Fought Here In 10th

A see-saw battle ensued for the one Republican Congressional seat from North Carolina, as Charles Raper Jonas (R) led Dave Clark (D) by 400 votes at press time last night.

The state soundly defeated a proposal to increase the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in North Carolina by a margin of nearly 2-1. Returns from 1142 of 2083 precincts showed the proposal going down to defeat 79,727 - 135,495.

The race in the twelfth district in Western North Carolina which was predicted as a close race turned out to be nothing of the sort. By a 2-1 margin David Hall whipped Harold Sams

At press time the results for this seat formerly held by George Shuford was 36,608 for Hall, 19,749 for Sams with only 65 precints left to be heard from.

Everett Jordan won an easy victory over Richard Clarke, marred only by losing Clarke's home district. Jordan was leading Clarke 282,000 to 98,000 with 75% of the precints in the state reporting.

All other Democratic Congressional candidates had no difficulty in decisively whipping their Republican opponents, and in four districts, first, second, sixth, and eleventh, Congressmen were returned without opposition.

Governor Luther Hodges earlier in the night hailed the Democratic sweep in the nation and in the state as an welcome sign.

Rockefeller Win Easy; Knowland Trails Brown

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Democrats swept toward a big victory early Wednesday in their surge toward stronger command of Congress.

But in an east-west drama, a new Republican star was born in New York while an old one seemed headed for eclipse in California.

Nelson A. Rockefeller, the Republican millionaire who trudged the sidewalk of New York in Quest of votes, decisively ousted Democrat Averell Harriman from the Governor's chair.

This rocketed Rockefeller into presidential speculation for 1960. It seemingly doomed Harriman's chances for the Democratic Nomination, and clouded Vice President Richard M. Nixon's prospects for the GOP presidential prize.

From the west came returns showing William F. Knowland, Republican, trailed Democratic Pat Brown in a crucial contest for governor. Knowland gave up the Senate Republican leadership to make this race, and his prospects for consiteration at the 1960 GOP presidential convention hinged on the outcome.

As for Congress, Democrats quickly clinched control of the Senate. They swept on toward strengthened command of that chamber and also of the House.

They took over Republican Senate seats in Indiana, Connecticut and West Virginia—both GOP incumbents in West Virginia were defeated— and built up leads in at least seven other states.

The Democratic tide ran so strongly that all six Republican House members from Connecticut went down to defeat along with GOP Senator William A. Purtell, who lost his seat to Democrat Thomas J. Dodd.

As of midnight, the Democrats had elected 195 members of the House and the Republicans 42. Fifteen formerly Republican seats had shifted to the Democrats. Rock-ribbed Republican Vermont sent a Democrat to Congress for the first time in 106 years.

Democrats won sure control of the Senate—50 seats is a majority—when West Virginia Sens. Chapman Revercomb and John D. Hobiltzell, Jr., Randolph.

The Democrats lengthened their lead soon after when their Harrison A. Williams, of New Jersey, won a GOP held Senate seat, defeating Rep. Robert W. Kean.

And in usually-Republican Kansas, Democratic Governor George Docking won re-election, the first of his party ever to accomplish that feat.

The spotlight shifted to California once the New York Verdict was in. The first news there was bad for the Republicans—though far too inconclusive to be regarded as a trend.

First precincts reporting showed Sen. Knowland and Gov. Goodwin J. Knight, each campaigning for the other's job, running behind their Democratic opponents.

Tatum Urges Attendance At UNC-Virginia Game

UNC Head Football Coach Jim Tatum through the University Club is encouraging UNC students to attend the football game Saturday in Charlottesville. UNC won at UVA two years ago "because Carolina had a better cheering section at Charlotteaville than Virginia", according to Coach Tatum.

He also reminded UNC students that the University Club has arranged for buses and for coed travel. Tickets to a jazz concert were also available.

According to the University Club and Dick Olive, chairman of the trip arrangements, all tickets to the concert have been sold and bus tickets are going fast.

Woollen Gym still has a few game tickets for sale at $3.50 each.

UP's Appeal To Council Meets Defeat

By DEE DANIELS

The Universiy Party, meeting Monday and Tuesday nights in Gerrard Hall, completed its slate of nominations for the coming campus elections. Charley Gray announced that the UP appeal to Student Council concerning its decision, on the reapportionment of Legislature seats met with defeat.

Last night Tommy Butler was chosen by acclamation to run for the six months Legislature seat from Dorm Men's III.

Bob Turner and Bob Grubb elected were to vie for the two 1-year seats from Town Men's I.

Charley Gray is the candidate for the one year seat from Town Men's II.

Representing Town Men's III for the two 1-year Legislature seats are Ed Ley and Bill Stepp. They were selected by acclamation.

Also decided by acclamation were the four candidates for the 1-year seats from Town Men's IV. These nominated were Joe McKinsey, DeWitt McColter, Dickie Quick and Lou Harven.

A motion entertained by the chair was approved to let the executive committee select the five candidates for the six months seats from this district.

The last of the nominations for Legislature seats was that of Town Women's. Elected by acclamation was Ann Harvey.

Running for UP on the sophomore slate are Charlie Graham, president; Joe Warner, vice-president; Sharon Sullivan, secretary; Bob Gibson, treasurer, and Carol Tieslau, social chairman.

Friday Plugs Community College Role

CHARLOTTE — (AP) — The president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina said Monday night that community colleges offer one of the best means of providing education at a reasonable rate.

William C. Friday also maintained that plans must be made now for the expansion of colleges and universities if education is to be available for the leadership the state's new industrialized economy will demand.

In an address to the Charlotte Central Lions Club, Friday endorsed recent recommendations of the State Board of Higher Education for a 90 million dollar bond issue for North Carolina colleges.

Part of the money would go for community colleges.

IFC Elects Three Court Members; Several Fraternities Lose Trophies

The IFC elected Garret Folger, Joe Alexander and Marshall Harper members of the IFC Court Monday night.

Several fraternities lost a number of trophies during the Germans weekend. The trophies were taken by students at Georgia Tech. They are to be returned to IFC Presdent Tucker Yates.

Over the weekend one fraternity lost two hi-fi sets, a sofa and a wall clock. Another lost a loudspeaker.

The IFC is trying to find office space, Yates announced. Negotiations have not yet been concluded.

In light of the fact that many fraternities help families through the Empty Stocking Fund the council decided not to take a family.

The possibility of the pledges taking quizzes on the organization of the IFC and the student government was referred to a committee. The recommendation received favorable comment from the executive council of the IFC.

The suggestion was in a letter from Student Body President Don Furtado to Yates.

It was revealed that the only time a Greek Week dance could be held was either the third weekend in February or the second or third weekends in March.

On the other weekends basketball games are being played. Due to a possible conflict with Winter Germans it may prove necessary to call off the dance.

Honor Council

The Women's Honor Council bi-partisan selection board has made its selections, and have left questions. Answers cannot be given unless one wants to resort to McCarthy-like tactics, but the following questions should be raised:

How come out of 45 girls, only 9 were deemed capable?

How come out of the nine, three were from the same sorority?

How come that three out of four applicants of the same sorority were chosen?

How come the same sorority has had many members of the Council before and has had the chairmanship for the past two years?

How come this sorority was represented with three students on the selection board, while every other organization was either not represented or had only one member?

There may be some legitimate answers to these questions, and if so they will be printed. In the meantime, a reminder should be made to those who did not get selection board endorsement, that a petition of twenty-five students submitted to the chairman of the election board will enable them to run, and if they feel that they are qualified, they should. The editor will personally sign a petition for any he deems qualified to run.

University

Yesterday, this column discussed the necessity for commitment to education. Today, it is necessary to point out the problems of growth as it affects the University.

From projected figures, one can see that the University will have a student population of something in the vicinity of 14,000 in 1970.

This type of growth, practically doubling the present enrollment, will radically alter the character of the University. It will necessitate perhaps twice as many faculty members and double the size of the town of Chapel Hill.

Moreover, statewide higher education will be in the same dilemma.

At present, although the University has plans for meeting the future physical needs of the University with regard to facilities, it will not be able to come to grips with the problem of the altering personal nature of the University.

Carolina, as many other schools have done, may very well go down the road to the situation where the student is no longer an entity but rather a number, where the faculty is devoted to research but not to teaching, and where education is a machine made tool.

It can happen very easily unless some planning takes place now. There needs to be planning on the state level to tap off some of the excess studentry into lower colleges, making the University of North Carolina in its three branches the apex of education in the state. This means planning for more colleges and expansion of some of the smaller colleges.

Moreover, the criterion of selectivity has to be more rigidly enforced at the University so that it can truly be the superior school in the state system. Perhaps, this type of limitation of attendance here, coupled with expansion of attendance at schools in other levels and the needed expansion of facilities may more properly insure for a maintenance and raising of standards at the University.

Going back to the need for a commitment to education, a solid faculty, in part, depends on the amount of money available for salaries, and only a wholehearted commitment can provide for the caliber professors necessary to place the University on the top level. To those who pride themselves on the quality of North Carolina education, it must be noted here that the University ranks quite low on the ratings of the American Association of Universities. This deficiency needs to be cleared up, and progress must be made.

On the student level, the character and nature of student government will have to be radically altered in order to meet the demand of a huge student body. Necessary facilities such as a large student union, recreation areas, and improved dormitory structure will be necessary, for the case may well be that the fundamental unit of student government may not be the campus, but the dorm and student center.

Administratively, the problem will be exceedingly complex, unless the administration completely negates any control over student action. The problem of knowing 7,000 is an almost impossible one, but the problem of knowing 14,000 students with a limited staff will be impossible.

If nothing else, this should prove how great the necessity of a commitment to education. If something else, it should ask the question of the value of a University, its purpose, and its role in transition. It should point up the question of whether growth on the scale that the University is growing is desireable, nad whether basic values will not be altered in the process.

It should be a request for some adequate planning before education becomes that corruption called mass education. Planning is necessary nationwide, statewide, and locally. This must be done soon.

An Address

Marion A. Wright

You will recall that Stephen Leacock wrote an essay on Oxford University. He began by saying, in effect, "Ten years ago I spent a day at Oxford. Recently I spent another day there. So the reader will see that what I have to say about Oxford is based upon observation extending over a period of ten years."

Just one year ago I made a talk in Charlotte before this same group. Here I am again tonight. So, anything I may say about Charlotte is based upon observation extending over a period of one year.

I don't know whether Mr. Jones has a genius for getting me here in times of crisis in school affairs or whether crisis has become a normal condition. When I was here a year ago integration was taking its first timorous step in Charlotte schools. Tonight we meet in the wake of the Supreme Court decision in the Little Rock case. Both events may well become historic.

I hope it will not harrow your feelings if we recall the situation which prevailed here a year ago. For a brief and unhappy moment Charlotte was in the world's headlines. With the faculty which the press sometimes exhibits for exploiting the sensational, certain events which occurred here were blazoned abroad. The ugly face of the mob was unmasked for all to see. An erect and poised girl who bore an ordeal with surpassing dignity was on every television screen.

Well, I venture to remind you of those events in order to point a contrast. A week or so ago your schools opened without the slightest echo of last year's turbulence. The city took the event in stride, turning aside with deserved contempt the inflammatory exhortations of John Kasper. (By the way, can you think of a more stupid approach to winning friends and influencing people than to go to Charlotte and attack Billy Graham and Harry Golden?) The apostles of violence were soundly rebuked; Charlotte set an example to the rest of the South. No one, I think, may doubt that the peaceful token compliance with law is but the prelude to later actual and thoroughgoing observance of the court's decrees.

Those of us on the outside merely see results. But surely those results did not automatically occur. In the past year there must have been intelligent planning and dedicated effort of many people, of many minds and hearts, to produce this profound change in community sentiment. One knows, without being told, that the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council on Human Relations has played a significant role. From occasional reading of your newspapers, from watching your TV stations and listening to your radio, it is evident that all have fully discharged their historic and traditional function of furnishing intelligent and responsible community leadership. Religious and other concerned groups have used reason and persuasion.

No one, I am sure, will be disposed to rest on his laurels. There will be no occasion for resting until the last vestige of a segregated school system has disappeared and the national promise of equal opportunity has been fulfilled.

So, the Charlotte school board's decision of a year ago was historic in the life of this city. The Supreme Court's decision of September 12 was historic in the life of the nation. We are still too close to the event and the excitement of the moment is too intense for one to gauge its full effect. But it would seem that even now at least a part of its significance may be appreciated.

1. There is to be no compromise in the national effort to give an equal chance to every American child. The nation is resolved that there shall be no such thing as second-class citizenship, second-class education, or second-class childhood.

In only the narrowest sense did the court declare the law. In the broadest sense it declared the national will and spoke the national conscience. Insofar as the President is the nation's voice, his prompt appeal for faithful observance of the decree also reflects all that is best in American thought. The participation of the Justice Department, while grating upon the tender sensibilities of our politicians, is applauded by the nation as a whole. Remember, it is a Justice Department. What is it to do if it does not seek to secure justice for every American citizen?

The forces, economic, social, moral, spiritual, which have thus far given the movement for equal rights its resistless momentum, will not abate. On the contrary, they gain strength throughout the world. The South has become a small fortress in a state of seige. If the beleaguered garrison fought for an honorable cause, we might applaud it for its heroism. But, when the cause, stripped of its tawdry pretensions, stands revealed as an effort to preserve a caste system within a democracy and to embalm a part of the dead 18th century within the living 20th, those who defend the citadel become not heroes but objects of scorn.

2. The decision further means that there is to be no surrender to mob action. Just as you here in Charlotte turned back the threat of violence with firmness and resolution, so, the nation, speaking through the court, has met that threat on the national scale.

It required granite-like strength of character to meet the Little Rock challenge. How persuasive must have been the argument that, unless you retreat from a high moral position, there will be violence around Central High. This is, of course, judicial blackmail, the effort to control and shape a judicial decision by placing a court in terror.

Everyone, of course, hopes there will be no violence. But consider the alternatives. Endure violence or declare for all Americans —particularly children—that the law is supreme, that human rights are sacred and that surrender to a mob is anarchy.

(To Be Continued)

A Television Program

Nick Bagdasarian

The recent CBS television program, "The Plot To Kill Stalin," has been much in the news lately for two reasons. One of them has been because of its excellent production and the other, the one which has made world-wide headlines, has been its fraudulent attempt to reconstruct history.

In 90 minutes of the most deceptive acting in the annals of the theater, CBS further severed U.S.-Soviet relations by charging that several high Sovett officals assassinated Stalin in his sick bed.

Directly after the show was over, a report emanating from Moscow claimed it was "a filthy slander against the Soviet Union and the Soviet Government." In addition, the CBS correspondent in Moscow as politely "asked to leave the People's Republic.

Indeed, although the idea of communism has never appealed to me, this is one time my hat goes out to them.

By its actions CBS has cast an unerasable black mark on the pages of American history. When the only way we can glorify democracy is to shatter another country's reputation (as dreadful as it may be), then there is something radically wrong with our system of government.

Newspapers, magazines, and most important of all, government officials have so distorted present-day Russia, that one cannot help associating horns and fangs with a certain Mr. Khrushchev.

Granted that the Communists distribute more, much more, propaganda then we do, it is still not in accordance with American tradition for our government to "invent" history to suit itself. And, since CBS has received no offical reprimand from Washington, it can safely be assumed that the nation's leaders fully agreed with the television version.

This "hate the Reds" campaign has now reached its full force in this country. Perhaps it is an admission of our own inadequacy to keep up with the Soviet's growing might. Whatever it is, things couldn't get any worse if we spent a little more time cleaning out our own closets.

However now that television has entered the mud slinging racket, it's been rumored in the streets of Moscow that a popular Red T.V. program is casting actors for its version of "The Scheme To Poison Roosevelt's Chicken Noodle Soup"!

"You Fellows Serious This Time?"

'Do What Mother Says'

Dot Dotson

Liberal traditions and individual freedoms which have been the strength and fame of our University in recent years are in danger. Freedom is already being eaten away and apparently a lot of people aren't going to realize this until the freedom is gone. Perhaps by then they won't even realize what has happened.

At this point it is going to be hard to check this erosion. It will be said that something is a problem—a threat—and leaders will give loud voice, protesting that, "This is the way we want it." "We were elected." "What does this have to do with loss of freedom." "What you propose wil result is chaos."

This I believe: There are people on this campus who are aware of the current problem and they are concerned. There are others who sense that something is wrong, but they don't know what it is. Some have given up hope of improvement.

This summer I participated in discussions of an up-to-date, unified judicial system for this campus to replace our present patchwork of councils and courts. There were outstanding campus citizens interested in this plan because of the need for an effective, efficient, representative judicial system. This was a plan that would be fair-to all—BUT—You can't do things like this. There will always be some hot shot legislators who weren't consulted or didn't get their way and they'll pull every string, play any trick, or say anything to satisfy themselves. There will be a few people who will lose their jobs because the new system will have found a more efficient way to handle their duties. There will be that ever present army of people who "just can't imagine a carriage without a horse pulling it." Perhaps you can think of a few such people. They won't offer anything better, but they will shout down any idea that isn't theirs.

So what happens? Some try to work these things out piece by piece—a bill here, an amendment there—and the patchwork quilt becomes even larger. In fact, by the time a good bill gets through, you often can't even recognize it as the one it started out as. What happens when you suggest a change?

You contact somebody for a comment and what do you get—silence. Sure, they're against it—for their own reasons, apparently. I grant that nobody has to say anything—the people who answer, "5th Amendment' to "What is your name?" don't have to say anything—and I will defend their right—but I will not be satisfied to be ruled by such shut mouths.

I guarantee that there would be a lot of shut mouths if a new system is proposed. For some obscure reason they'll be against it—no matter how good it is.

This message is not addressed to these people. This message is not addressed to these people because nothing short of an act of God is likely to change their attitudes. This message is not addressed to campus "leaders" in general, because they do not have the power necessary to remedy the situation which exists.

If you fall into one of the following categories, you won't do much to remedy the situation either: If you are willing to let your sorority or fraternity direct you and decide for you, you don't have much to offer this University. (If you continue to be a face in the crowd, you won't ever have much to offer.)

If you are willing to allow the existence of a council with the power to dictate to you the clothes you are to wear—at an age when many high school graduates are completely on their own—at an age when you are old enough to vote for the President of the United States—your ideas are miserably behind the times.

If you get a personal satisfaction out of dividing the citizens of this University along class divisions of one year, you should go back to prep school for a few more years.

If you believe that legislation, execution, and justice function along a division by sex, you might find some support in elementary schools.

If you would not be willing to give up your job in favor of a better system, you might just as well admit who you are out for.

These are the kinds of people who are eating away at our liberal traditions and individual freedoms. Right now they are the people who are running the show. Name them over in your mind. Maybe you voted for one of them. Maybe you didn't have much choice. Maybe you didn't know how much difference it made until you found out that last year the Women's Residence Council had pushed through rules discriminating against freshmen—in the wake of overwhelming opposition from the student body—in spite of the traditional "no discrimination by class." Maybe you didn't realize that the people you voted for were people who believe that the dictates of a personal sense of good taste in university students must be supplemented by the dictates of the Dean of Women and women's councils—to even a standards committee.

To what point have we come that we would look to higher authority for such detailed personal directions? Are we to model our University after other schools, or will we be a leader in freedom, independence, and maturity—qualities lacking in many schools in the South.

This is not a finishing school. It never was intended to be a finishing school. Such a purpose is superficial indeed compared to the functions of this University.

Perhaps you didn't realize the implications of your choice for legislator, councilman or representative. You should now. Student government makes this school much of what it is. Those in authority have recognized the fact that university students should learn to take care of themselves. This is a compliment to our liberal and progressive heritage It is a great challenge and a wonderful opportunity —yet we have elected people who have taken our freedoms away and are even threatening to destroy our individuality.

Before you vote for one person, be sure that you are not voting for someone who is seeking to play the role of your mother or father. If you have been voting by party, stop. Vote for people who will be progressive, unselfish, and above all—advocates of individual freedom. If there is no person running who suits you, run yourself.

In the meantime, voice your opinions. Talk about these things with your friends. Find out what your representative is doing (and has done). Big Brother may be watching you. Big Sister already is.

Letters

Monday, Nov. 3, 1958

To the writer of a letter in Sunday's Daily Tar Heel:

On Tuesday night, November 4th, Dr. J. W. Staley, an assistant professor in the Department of Physics, will speak informally to the DKE fraternity concerning current scientific advances in space, the likelihood of reaching the moon in our lifetime, and the relative positions of the Russians and Americans in this regard. Dr. Staley was invited this fall in the unanimous eagerness to continue a program which was begun last winter. This program operates simply and effectively: a faculty member is invited to have dinner, deliver a few introductory remarks on the subject chosen by his hosts, and submit himself to a "question and answer" session which may last twenty minutes or three hours. This is education in the finest sense. The boys present are not in a noisy group in the house bar; they are sitting individually, thinking individually, and, most important, acting individually.

Your letter of October 31st which appeared in the Daily Tar Heel is a source of wonderment and curiousity to me. You lament the lack of concern, the over-abundance of complacency in our University, and especially in the fraternities where the students are too involved in Thursday to Tuesday weekends. I want to make it perfectly clear that I heartily agree with you in your lamentation—on a general scale. Complacency and lack of concern are far too prevalent among the students here; but why single out fraternities about which you plainly know so little?

I know of very few boys who missed classes over the weekend and I know of none who will not arrive in Class until Tuesday. To be sure, there are some who personify all of what you say. There are "gathered clients" in bars who never hear the question. There are some who could not be convinced that a problem exists. There are even some who do not restrain on Wednesdays. But, happily, these comprise the minority. And let's not be unfair to ourselves—this minority does not exist solely at Chapel Hill, but at every college and university in the country.

Surely the importance here is not that we use our editorial page to criticize the minority; rather it is that we take action to save newcomers from joining the minority and to encourage everyone to think and act as an individual, to be concerned about the world in which we live. We believe that we are doing something about this—how about yourself? Incidentally, if you're not busy Tuesday night, you're welcome to join us in our discussion.

On the morning of November ——, 1958, the sun rose over a saddened campus. The dawn had brought with it the promise of a grand day, however; the weather went unseen on the unhappy campus. Classes went on, but they were not accompanied by the cheerful hustle and bustle of other days. Saddened expressions clouded the faces of men and women as they trudged to class. All over the locality hundreds of students choked down their coffee and doughnuts. The food had no taste on this morning, for what student of Carolina could bring himself to enjoy his traditional breakfast, on the day free parking on Chapel Hill's main-drag was to become part of the past.

Yes, become part of the past as have Carolina's fabled formal Germans.

Sooner or later, each person—no matter who they are or how old they are—has a rude awakening. This awakening may occur because of something the person read, because of someone the person met, or simply because his shower water was too cold.

In this moment, life stops as suddenly as a moving picture film stops when the projector breaks. And the last strip of film is smacked indelibly upon the onlooker's mind. He must look at its image because the movie has stopped and it is dark.

In this moment, the spectator is forced to look at his own life as objectively and as coldly as if it was someone elses'. He may not like what he sees.

But what he does about it after this cruel gift of insights comes is what makes up the drama of all mankind.

He can do one of three things: he can close the book, say goodbye to the person, or adjust his shower water to "warm" and resume his unsatisfactory life, forever fighting down the gnawing dissatisfaction which eats chunks out of his heart.

Or he can vacillate from that moment on between decision and indecision. He can do this for the rest of his life.

Or he can make a clean break. The person who does this is as rare as the person who gives up smoking in one day and as rare as a beautiful flower growing out of a barren rock.

Everyone is marked for a release date—the date of the terrible insight. Everyone is the college student who plods through years of classes to discover one day that he is absolutely sure of nothing. Everyone is the man who has been working in an office he hates doing a job he finds boring only to realize that there is still time to get a different job in completely different surroundings. Everyone is the man or woman who has been living with someone he or she cannot live with and one day wakes up and asks: "Is it really necessary that I live with this person another day?"

As previously mentioned, there are three alternatives from which to choose when "the hour of decision" comes.

The everyones who choose to remain vaguely irritated with their lives consist of the bulk of humanity. Their choice has made it possible for the world to continue flowing. All cannot make the break or civilization would most certainly collapse.

The everyones who snap back their necks and stop in their tracks and cut the rope are the ones who make the chapter headings in the history books. They are the ones who start the revolutions—good or bad—and they are the ones who give the rest of us courage to THINK about making the break when our day comes.

God! The water is cold.

Witnesses Describe Siemer Incident After Maryland Game

by a member of the UNC athletic department.

Officer Gattis approched and told him to leave. Semier pointed to his badge and said, "You are from the Chapel Hill Police Department; I'm on your side, We won!" The officer told him to leave and at the fence pushed him over, Semier told the cort.

When the officer started over, Semier rose and saw the officer was angry so he ran. He was later caught by the other two officers just off the field. Captain Coy Durham and Lindy Pendergrass placed him under arrest for public drunkeness. He was handcuffed and taken to tre police department.

Officer Durham testified that he saw the defendent push officer Gatis twice. He was standing about 25 feet from the incident. He added that the department has been ordered not to approch when another officer is involved in an incident unless it gets out of hand.

The defense counsel John A. LeGrand, tried to get a clarification of the order but an objection was raised and sustained by the judge. Durham testified that he arrester Semier when he fell running from Gatis.

The last witness for the state, Lindy Pendergrass, said he saw Semier push the officer down when they were on opposite sides of the fence

Moulton had earlier diagrammed the incident on a blackboard in view of the court. Each of the witnesses described their positions to their view of the incident.

Booters Beat Roanoke 3-1 For Fifth Win Of Year

By JIM PARKS

Playing by far their best game of the season, the Tar Heels came from behind to score three goals in the second half to defeat Roanoke.

Coleman Barks was the scoring ace of the game with two goals. His first, coming in the third quarter, tied the score at 1-1. Then in the fourth quarter, he put the Tar Heels ahead to stay with his second goal.

Carolina outplayed Roanoke the entire game and controlled play almost entirely except for several minutes in the second quarter.

Goalie Staves Off Heels

Putting on uncanny display of passing ability, Carolina pounded away at the Roanoke goal dauntlessly, but were held off again by the Roanoke's amasing acrobatic goalie, Harry Clegg.

The first half of the game was almost entirely a contest between Carolina's smooth passing offensive unit and the Roanoke goalie.

Roanoke only rarely got an offensive threat moving. Their only goal came in the second quarter when a foul was called on a Carolina defenseman within the penalty area and Roanoke's Don Kerr blasted the ball past the goalie Marvin Blount on a penalty kick.

Kerr's goal gave Roanoke a 1-0 lead which the Tar Heels could not overcome despite several near misses before the half ended.

Second Half Different

The second half was a different story, however, as Coach Marvin Allen's squad, displaying excellent teamwork, kept the pressure on Roanoake and were rewarded with Barks' goal. Barks boost, made from about 20 yards out, was made after a fine setup by halfback Hugh Goodman.

Barks' second goal came after a charge led by left wing Rick Grausman, who played his best game of the year for Carolina, put the game on ice for Carolina's third goal, after a pass from Joe Perkins.

The Tar Heels next opponent will be N.C. State College, whom the team will face here Friday afternoon.

Food for thought is the only kind that hasn't been affected by the high cost of living.

Harriers Meet Tough Duke

By BING SOMERS

The Carolina cross country team, fresh from a 20-40 weekend pasting of South Carolina, take on rough, tough, undefeated Duke today at Durham in the final regular season meet of the year.

The Blue Devils, coached by Al Buehler and led by Dave Pitcethly, Jerry Nourse, and Cary Weisinger (4:10 miler), have very possibly the best cross country team that West Durham has ever seen.

Their greatest triumph of a thus far unmarred record took place when they slipped by mighty Maryland at College Park in a dual meet, a feat generally consitered attainable only by the gods. And so far, the Terrapins have been the only team to give Duke even the slightest semblance of a fight.

Leading the Tar Heels, who are finally beginning to come around after suffering from early season doldrums, will be junior Cowles Llipfert, who, along with captain Dave Scurlock, has been taking turns in playing number one man since Wayne Bishop reinjured his knee. Llipfert ran his best race aginst the Gamecocks and finished second.

Following these two will be dogged Howard Kahn, Sonney Sweet, Alex Coffin, and Bring Somers.

The undefeated and unheralded freshman team, led by Rett Everett, Dave Pelez, and Dennis Rash, will meet the Blue Imps immediately following the varsity race at 4:15.

Carson Pleased With Frosh

By ELIOTT COOPER

Tar Baby Coach Bud Carson currently finds himself in a strange but pleasant dilemma. He is celebrating the 20-0 upset victory which his team achieved over Maryland last Friday while trying to keep his players from becoming overconfident about Saturday's game in Raleigh with the NoNrth Carolina State frosh.

"I'm afraid there might be a letdown," Carson said yesterday, so he refrained from heaping praise on his team for its play against the Terrapins for that very reason.

"WORK ON DEFENSE"

The young freshman coach was obviously elated over winning last Friday, however he did take time out to pick holes in certain aspects of his team's performance. He stated that the Tar Babies offense came closer to perfection than the defense. "We're going to have to work on defense this week," he said.

Carson explained that his pleasure over the offensive performance came from the fact that his squad moved the ball so well against a solid defense. Although the Carolina frosh did not score as many points against Maryland as they did against Virginia, they played a better game against a better team.

TAR BABIES NOW 2-1

The win over the Terp frosh gives the Tar Babies a 2-1 record to carry into Saturday afternoon's contest with the Wolflets. The game with the Coach Johnny Clements' State frosh is an annual affair in Riddick Stadium put on by the Shriners.

Carson stated that his team came out of the Maryland contest in good physical shape,, and that although there were a few minor injuries he expected everyone to be ready to go Saturday.

The State freshmen will take a 2-2 season mark into the contest with the Tar Babies. The Wolflets have lost to Clemson (8-6) and Duke (57-14) while beating South Carolina (32-26) and Wake Forest (26-18).

FARRIS VS. GABRIEL

A crowd of some 7,000 is expected to be on hand to witness the battle of the two teams led by the best freshman quarterbacks in the state. Ray Farris, who has scored four touchdowns himself and passed for three more, will direct the Carolina attack.

For State it will be Roman Gabriel at the helm. The 6-2, 210 pounder from Wilmington is an excellent passer and has already thrown eight scoring tosses. Since Roger Whitley has dropped out of school, Gabriel will head up a starting backfield whose heaviest man is twenty pounds lighter than himself.

The Sudan Temple in Raleigh, sponsors of the game, will admit students from Carolina to the stadium free of charge upon presentation of their I.D. cards at the gate. Adult tickets for the game will cost $2.

Co-Rec Volleyball

All men's and women's entries for the Co-Rec Volleyball contest must be in by 5:00 today. These entries should be turned in at the Intramural Office The event will be held on Monday, November 10 at 7:00 p.m. on the main floor of Woollen Gym.

Tag Football Finals

Ruffin posted a 19-6 win over Winston yesterday to move in to the dorm finals today against Joyner, who beat Cobb 17-6.

DKE entered the Fraternity White finals with a 26-7 victory over Sigma Nu. They'll meet SAE who beat Sigma Chi 12-0.

The Grad finals today features Law School 1 vs. Peacocks. SAE whipped the Zetes 18-0 to advance to the semis in the blue division, and Sigma Nu won over KA 13-12.

Rod & Gun Tomorrow

Charlie Harville, announcer and sportscaster for WFMY-TV in Greensboro, will show film of the UNC Rod and Gun Meet. He will present the film on his program, "The Outdoorsman." The program may be viewed on Thursdays from 7 to 7:15 p.m.

This, the fourth annual meeting of the Rod and Gun event, will be held Thursday, Nov. 6, from 2 to p.m. The meet will take at the Durham Wildlife Club Area.

There will also be fishing for bass and brim, and a trophy will be given to the person catching the largest one in each class. Trophies will be given to the individual winners of each event and a plaque will be awarded the winning team.

The meet will be on a co-rec basis. Women may enter either on an individual or a team basis. All students may enter the meet except those in the NROTC rifle team. A team will be composed of four persons. All entries may be picked up at the Intramural Office.

Kelly's famed comic strip appears in 507 newspapers in the United States and abroad. As of Jan. 12, 1958, Pogo books reached a sales of nearly 2.5 million.

Kelly has published a book of 30 original songs and music and a long-playing record of 18 of the songs.

Kelly makes about 50 speeches each year, talking and sketching before college students and faculty groups, hospital patients, professional societies and conventions. The Pogo creator has circled the world twice. His most recent trip around the world was spent addressing cultural groups and gathering material for a new book.

OTHER CAMPAIGNS

Besides the presidential campaign of 1956 other Pogo campaigns include the Department of Labor campaign for manpower, a campaign for the Treasury Department's Savings Bonds drive and a Life magazine attempt to convince the public to use cmomon sense and caution on Asiatic flu.

For the Labor Department campaign (Stay in School and Graduate) Kelly was given a special award for his work. Pogo praised the value of a high school diploma through radio, newspapers, television, posters and stickers and a cartoon which was carried in 600 newspapers.

MORE READERS

During the Savings Bond campaign Pogo reached more readers of trade publications than any other campaign strip.

Statements Due By Tomorrow For Candidates

Friday is an important deadline for all candidates for office in the Nov. 18 elections.

By Friday, all nominees must turn over to their respective party chairmen or the Elections Board (if they're running independent) a statement from their deans saying they're students in good standing.

University Party Chairman Jack Lawing yesterday urged UP candidates to bring their statements to him in the APO room in Graham Memorial between 1 and 5 p.m. today, if possible.

An independent candidate must turn in a similar statement, plus a petition signed by 25 voters and himself, to the student government office by 5 p.m. Friday.

Legislature To Resume Action On Council Jury Selection Bill

SP Platform Postponed; Further Look Wanted

By STAN FISHER

The Student Party Monday night postponed discussion on a possibly highly controversial platform for the fall election after previously voting to discuss the proposed platform immediately.

After platform committee chairman Roger Foushee introduced the platform before the party, Ralph Cummings moved to delay the vote until next week so that party leaders might look it over.

14 POINTS

According to Cummings, neither he nor Student Body President Don Furtado had seen the platform which presented 14 points as the aims of Student Party legislators if elected in the nearing fall election.

After discussion was heard by the members concerning the pros and cons of delaying voting on the proposed platform, Cummings' motion was defeated.

A motion was then made and passed to consider the platform's 14 proposals one by one.

Passed by the SP with little discussion were three of the articles—the first calling for action toward the realization of a new and adequate student union; the second asking for advocation of a higher salary rate for university professors.

On the third article, in which the body pledges itself toward the elimination of discrimination in terms of race, creed, or national origin, Roger Foushee made several statements in answer to questions about the implications toward fraternities and sororities in this measure.

Foushee stated, in answer to

Four Other Measures To Come Up For Action

The Student Legislature tonight will resume action on the controversial proposal by Gary Greer SP suggesting that jury selection for the Honor Council be put on a campus-wide basis.

The governing body will meet at 7:30 in Phi Hall, New East.

FIVE BILLS

Bills coming up for action include:

(1) A bill concerning a change in the selection of jurors—Gary Greer (SP). The first article was passed by Legislature last week. The second, to be discussed tonight, deals with a proposed system of random juror selection from the campus at large.

(2) A bill to establish a definite policy for publishing the Yackety Yack by student government and to appropriate funds necessary for the enactment of this policy—John Brooks (SP).

ACADEMIC FREEDOM

(3) A bill for the restoration of the basic NSA declaration concerning academic freedom — Greer (SP). The Ways and Means Committee has recommended that this not be passed.

(4) A bill placing the Carolina Forum and the State Student Legislature delegation under the Forensic Council—Brooks and Roger Foushee (SP). The bill would place the budgets of the two organizations under the Council's authority. By the first Legislature session in December, the Council would present its revised constitution for ratification.

SINGLE ELECTION

(5) A bill calling for student vote on an amendment to the student constitution providing for a single annual spring campus election—Norman B. Smith (Ind.).

No new bills are expected to be presented tonight.

Traffic Probations

One on-year probation, three one-semester probations and 12 warnings were handed down Tuesday night by the Traffic Council in cases involving violations of student regulations.

Six cases were dismissed.

Carolina-Duke Rivalry Is Continued Pleasantly

By CHARLIE SLOAN

A most pleasant sort of Duke-Carolina rivalry was continued Tuesday night on the Blue Devils' home grounds.

For the 12th time leaders of the student bodies of both universities gathered around a supper table to talk over the annual football contest.

The dinners are held each year, with each school taking turns at trying to serve better meals than the year before. One regular participant described the event as starting off as a hot dog and beans affair, and developing into the filet on toast affair Tuesday.

CORNISH HEN

To the best of anybody's recollection, last year Carolina served the Dookies Cornish Hen.

The value of the event is not entirely gastronomic. During the meal, and in discussion afterwards, students in both schools had a chance to compare notes.

According to Duke Student Body President Bob Torray, the purpose of the meeting is to give leaders in both schools a chance to discuss ways of channeling spectator enthusiasm into lively good sportsmanship.

Dean Robert Cox of Duke explained that in 1945 a money and prestige-expensive wave of vandalism swept both schools.

Both universities seriously ending the football rivalry. Then the pregame dinner meeting was devised, with apparent success.

Cox said that the vandalism which occurs during the heat of Duke-Carolina competition is caused by "a small element of the student body" at both schools.

He called this group "almost incorrigible unless public opinion is strongly aginst it."

Sam Magill, UNC's assistant dean of student affairs, added that excesive emotionalism must also be avoided.

After these introductory comments the discussion was thrown open to the entire group.

Ideas and suggestions were kicked around the linen covered playing field, and representatives from both schools agreed that both schools can win on sportsmanship if the student bodies will take the chore on themselves.

And that's all the group could do, because it was just a croud of students from rival schools getting together for a good meal and to coordinate their efforts in setting an example.

Fitch Predicts Distinct Fall In Divorce Rate

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Dr. Robert E. Fitch, dean of the Pacific School of Religion in Berkeley, Calif., predicted a distinct fall in the United States' divorce rate in the next 10 years during a speech Tuesday night in Carroll Hall.

Dr. Fitch, whose visit to the UNC campus was sponsored by the Wesley Foundation, spoke on the "Decline and Fall of Sex."

He said that immediately after World War I the American people "discovered" sex. They began to treat it as a purely animal appetite, completely separated from love, honor and duty.

"After 40 years," he said, "there are indications that the cycle is coming to an end." He pointed out that young people today are marrying earlier and having more children than their more radical parents. There is less infidelity and divorce. The present generation is becoming more respectable and conservative.

He added that such popular novels as "Marjorie Morningstar" and "By Love Possessed" mark a revolt against the sensationalistic treatment of sex.

However, he was not completely happy with the "sane" younger generation. "If this means a return to a craven passion for security and a loss of a sense of adventure," he said ,"I'd rather return to the era of sensational sex."

He suggested that the "middle of the road"—neither Mickey Spillaneism nor Victorianism—was best. "Perhaps it is time for us to become human beings," he concluded.

Socks To Be Hopping At Nurses Dorm Friday?

Students' socks should be hopping at a sock hop Friday night at 8 p.m.

The admission fee will be 25 cents and one pair of socks (on feet) per person. Refreshments will be served.

All proceeds from the hop will go to the S.N.A.

Reds' Handling Of Pasternak Said Confusing

The Soviet propaganda and censorship organization revealed confusion in handeling the case of arthor Boris Pasternak, a UNC professor declared Tuesday.

Prof. Robert A. Rupen, who recently returned from a tour of Russia and Outer Mongolia, spoke to the University Faculty Club.

Rupen pointed to Russian reaction to the Nobel Prize award to Pasternak for his anti-Communist novel, "Dr. Zhivago." He remarked that abuse of Pasternak and denial of his right to accept the prize was followed by an announcement that Pastrnak was free to go to Sweden to accept the prize, but might not be allowed to return.

The gears didn't mesh fast enough, "said Rupen.

On a rail trip through Siberia, Rupen said that he noticed many young people on their way to assignments of several years in Siberia. "they did not seem downcast, but were entustiac," he reported.

IKE SAYS REAL TROUBLE TO BE SPENDING

Democrats' Gain Biggest Since New Deal

WASHINGTON (AP)—Democrats battered down a final Republican bastion in the west and produced their biggest U.S. Senate gain in history from belated returns straggling in from Tuesday's election.

The 13-seat gain surpassed by one previous Democratic record of 12 set in 1932.

WASHINGTON (AP)—Incomplete tabulations at 4 p.m. (EST) Wednesday, showed more than 42 million votes cast in Tuesday's election.

This figure will be increased considerably with final and complete counts some time next month.

The dwindling trickle of ballots from the hinterlands merely enlarged the dimentions of the most spectacular Democratic political triumph since the New Deal heydays. Late results tightened an already stregthened Democratic control of both Senate and House and tossed more Republican Governors out of office.

And with an assistent they didn't want from Nelson A. Rockefeller in New York, the Democrats brought about a sizeable reshuffling of 1960 political prospects.

President Eisenhower told an election post-mortum news conference he wasn't even thinking about 1960 at this point. But to a question weather he thought the people yesterday "chose left-wing goverment rather than sensible goverment"—terms he used in campaign oratory—the President replied:

"I don't know weather they did this thing deliberately. I know this, that they obviously voted for people that I would class among the spenders, and that is what I say is going to be the real trouble."

The President labeled a trend toward higher spending as a dangerous thing and promised to fight it. But he haid he thought he would get along with the new Congress. In a situation without political precedent, this is the third time he has been confronted with on opposition Congress.

Eisenhower voiced delight at Rockefeller's election but declined to rub the crystal ball for a sighting on Rockefeller's future.

In an election that had many elements of the fantastic, it was Republican Rockefeller who turned in the greatest single victory. In the battle of the bucks, one millionaire aginst another, Rockefeller pushed Democrat Averell Harriman out of the New York Governorship.

At the same time Rockefeller shoved himself in and Harriman out of the 1960 presidential picture and cast a shodow of uncertainty over the ambitions of Vice President Nixon. Until Rockefeller skyrocketed across the political firmament, Nixon apparently was coasting smoothly along toward GOP presidential nomination two years hence.

NO 1960 INTEREST

Rockefeller insisted again that he has no interest in the 1960 GOP presidential nomination.

"It honestly doesn't enter my mind except when you fellows ask me about it," he said. "I have a tremendous job ahead of me . . ."

It was an election in which the Democrats refused to yield a single senate seat while toppling 13 Republicans. The last GOP seat tumbled in the last senate race to be settled, in Wyoming. Sen. Frank A. Barnett, A conservative Republican, was nosed out by Democrat Gale W. McGee, a young history professor.

With the outcome of Governorship races undecided only in Nebraska, Democrats had lost four of their own governors and taken eight places from the Republicans.

Republicans All But Out In State Legislature

RALEIGH (AP)—The surging Democratic tide that carried the party to victory in seven of eight races for Congress in North Carolina and gave Sen B. Everett Jordan an overwhelming victory in Tuesday's general election almost swept the Republican Party out of the state legislature.

A survey Wednesday showed that the Democrats had captured 11 of 16 legislative seats the Republicans held in 1957, and that the 1959 General Assembly will have only four Republicans in the House and one in the Senate.

Secretary of State Thad Eure, who made the legislative survey, commented that "not a living person in North Carolina has seen that few Republicans in the General Assembly."

State Democratic Chairman Woodrow W. Jones, who was jubilant over the Democratic sweep, pointed to party victories in local races in counties which have been Republican strongholds.

He said reports reaching state party headquarters told of "clean sweeps" for the Democrats in local contests in Catawba, Randolph, Caldwell, Alexander, Henderson, Stanly, Yadkin, Burke and Watauga Counties.

He also reported Democratic victories in Clay and Graham Counties. In the Republican bastion of Wilkes, he said, Democrats elected one county commissioner and another was trailing by only 11 votes. He said he had been informed that the Democratic candidate for sheriff in Avery trailed by only six votes.

"The local victories in the mountain counties were far beyond my expectations," Jones added.

Jones, Gov. Hodges and other party leaders were disappointed that the Democratic tide was not strong enough to carry the 10th Congressional District. Complete unofficial returns showed that Republican Rep. Charles R. Jonas defeated his Democratic challenger, David Clark, by a 4,117 margin, racking up 56,465 votes to 52,348 for Clark.

Jones said Clark "ran a good race, and I think he has set up things so we can win the 10th next time."

Legislature

Four significant pieces of legislation come up tonight, and all four should be passed.

The first, the bill dealing with the Yackety-Yack should pass after all the air is cleared about finances.

The second, the Honor Council revision bill, which has been discussed many times earlier should be passed so that all students the may participate in the working of the student judiciary. Those who still believe that interest is a criterion ought to think once more as to what bearing interest has on the judgement of facts.

The third bill is Norman Smith's advocating a referendum on a single election system. This too is a worthy bill, and is something that the student body should have a chance to vote on. From the point of view of making the political parties working organizations, from the point of view of having less mess, fuss, and bother, and from the point of view of getting an experienced legislature, the bill should be passed.

Finally, the Greer bill making the NSA policy declaration clearcut and unequivocal should be passed. The Ways and Means Committee reported this bill unfavorably largely because certain fraternities have discriminatory clauses, and others want to protect their interests.

The interests of the other fraternities are with the passage of the bill in that they are upholding that their way is the best way, and the interests of those members of fraternities who do not believe that discrimination according to race, creed, or national origin should be a factor in selection one's friends despite the fact that their fraternity possesses discriminatory clauses will be benefitted by casting their vote for the measure as a statement of principle.

Everyone would agree that 1) the student legislature cannot eliminate from the campus those organizations possessing discriminatory clauses, and 2) That the best method for elimination of the clauses is by the discretion of the local chapter in appeal to the national organization. This should not stop those people at the University of North Carolina who believe that equality of opportunity is to be desired. It can be hoped that they will stand on this principle, instead of the quite dubious principle of protectiveness.

Democratic Sweep

The Democratic Party has swept into office on a carpet of local issues and national unrest. The sweep is indicative of the general disfavor that the Republican Party has fallen into at this time.

The great Democratic victory presents the Senate with an opportunity to overthrow the filibuster, making for a much more liberal cloture rule. It can provide for the opportunity, if the Democratic tide continues, to make a strong civil rights platform in 1960, encouraging the reactionary Southern politicians to either moderate their views or get out of the party. The opportunity for the Senate to organize itself without James O. Eastland chairman of the judicifary committee, and other impeders of legislation chairmaning other committees may be presented. Moreover, the Democrats have a chance to win on principle rather than losing on compromise with elements of the party which are anathema to their best interests.

The Republican Party is perhaps in worse shape. Vice-president Nixon who has solidly aligned himself with the more conservative elements in the party found that these same elements were all but demolished in the election. Bricker, Malone, Barrett, Jenner's successor, all went down to defeat. Indeed, the only Republican conservative victory was Barry Goldwater in Arizona. In the midst of this liberal Republicans Rockefeller and Scott were victorious placing that wing of the party in prominence and making the probable Republican presidential candidate none other than newcomer Nelson Rockeeffler. LIFE magazine in its endorsement of Nixon's party may be left out on a limb.

Finally, the old saying so goes Maine, so goes the nation held true, and the other statement so goes Maine, so goes Vermont was also verified as the Democrats picked up Vermont's lone house seat. The situation was desperate yesterday for the Republicans.

Candidates

Tomorrow is the last day for filing of petitions for candidacy.

Anyone who thinks he or she is capable of assuming an office should run. Student government participation by most of the student body is desired, and one does not ment or a party endorsement to be qualified. If an independent has something to offer, he need a bi-partisan selection board endorse, can do a great deal for the campus, and this will come out in his campaign.

An Address

Let me digress for a moment to comment upon a statement we frequently hear. That is, that race relations in the South have become worse as a result of the 1954 decision in the segregation cases. The proponents of that view point to clashes which have ensued and say, but for the decisions, this would not have occurred.

For the sake of argument let us concede the facts. What do they imply? They imply that there was latent in some areas of the South racial ill-will amounting to hostility or even hatred. But it was unexpressed; it did not come to boiling point. It had no normal outlet. Hence, it perpetually simmered and smouldered. I am, of course, not an expert in the field, but I have a feeling that any good psychiatrist would tell us that such pent-up hatreds wreak great damage to personality. Relief comes from "getting things off our chests." The last four years have been a period of catharsis, of cleansing and purging ourselves of this foul accumulation of fancied spites and grievances. We may in the future be less neurotic because for once and at long last we have spouted the venom we have harbored.

Whenever we make it possible for every man to air publicly a logical grievance we have contributed to community sanity.

Race relations seem worse because their ugly aspects have been revealed. They were just as ugly when unseen.

3. But there is one point about the court's decision of the 12th and other decisions above all other points which should not be lost on us in North Carolina and in other Southern states. That is, that the court is not deceived by our evasive maneuvers. Since the original decision of 1954 one by one these maneuvers have come before the court. One by one they are struck down. The court has pierced the legal fictions which surround these tactics. It has probed to the heart and core. What it found there were deception and fraud. We cannot win by subterfuge and evasion and might as well face that fact.

There is a moral aspect about such procedures. The legal qualities upon which the South has relied have been shrewdness, cunning, slickness, if you will. Such have been the qualities we have magnified in the public mind and held up as ideals before young lawyers and young politicians. They are no substitutes for brain, intelligence and character. The great lawyer is not slirk; he is pofound.

We may now return to our former conception of what is an honorable course for a state to pursue.

Such is the handwriting upon the wall. Those who cannot read it should go to school — preferably to an integrated school.

So much for the decision and the signs of the times it gives us.

It would be naive to suppose that all of our politicians will correctly read those signs or that they will have the grace to admit their errors and reverse their courses. The task will still be ours—it may be a long one—to get our states to wipe from the statute books the foul blots placed there inrecent years. I speak in general terms of legislation of the "hard core" states and concede gladly that we in North Carolina have less of which ot be ashamed than do our fellow citizens of other states. My point is that all of this abnormal and repressive legislation is a species of tyranny.

The first of these badges is that tyranny establishes or maintains itself by suspension of legal or constitutional guaranties. It does so for the basic reason of self-preservation. It cannot exist where such guaranties are in full vigor. As William Pitt remarked, "Where law ends, tyranny begins." The tyrant or dictator wishes to impose his own will upon mankind but there stands the Law, shining and undissuadable, between him and the citizen. So the Law must first be struck down.

In England, in the period from November 23 to December 29, 1819, parliament passed six measures introduced by the government. They are historically known as "The Six Acts." In five weeks parliament stripped British citizens of their rights to engage in military drills; to bear arms; to be free of searches without warrants; to hold public meetings without approval and to publish criticisms of the government. All of these were traditional and prized rights of Englishmen. This happened in a land where those rights had received their most eloquent expression.

By co-incidence in the same year, 1819, under the leadership of Chancelor Metternich, a confederation of Germanic States adopted what are known as the Carlsbad Decrees. These were aimed at professors and students of colleges and universities. The confederated governments pledged themselves to remove professors who "deviated from their duty" . . . "exceeded the limits of their functions" . . . "abused their influence over youthful minds" . . . "propagated harmful doctrines . . . subversive of existing governmental institutions" . . . and "proved their unfitness for the important office entrusted to them." Secret societies upon campuses where outlawed and certain types of publications forbidden to go to press without governmental approval.

In France in 1793 the National Assembly adopted a decree punishing by death the writers or printers of articles proposing the re-establishment of royalty and, by imprisonment, those who distributed such writings. Thus early was the Revolution's bright vision of liberty marred by events.

Tyranny moved into high gear in Germany in 1933 under Hitler. On Feb. 4 of that year there was isued an emergency decree banning political meetings without prior police permission. If at such meetings government officials were abused, the police were authorized to intervene. Newspapers could be suppressed for similar reason.

On February 28 there was a further decree suspending seven constitutional guaranties, relating to freedom of speech and press; freedom of association and assembly; secrecy of postal, telegraph and telephone service; confiscation of property and search without a warrant.

And on March 23 the Reichstag adopted measures which transferred almost unlimited power to Hitler.

The same story is told in Italy under Mussolini. Labor unions were placed under police surveillance with power of dissolution. Later all associations were required to reveal names of members and officers to the police and to igve any other information required. The result was that all organizations opposed to the regime were throttled. Mussolini was able to announce on Nov. 11, 1926, "All political parties, all anti-Fascist political organizations and others of a suspected character have been dissolved." Opposition to dictatorship had evaporated.

Under Russia's Fundamental Law (corresponding to our Constitution) there are broad guaranties of freedom of speech, press, assembly and holding of demonstrations. But such guaranties are whittled away by later enactments limiting such privileges and membership in the all-powerful Communist Party to "toilers." The party and government have exercised rigid control over non-party members.

There might be infinite multiplication of instances of dictatorships created or maintained by suspension or revocation of rights guaranteed by constiutions. Illustrations leap out from every one of history's more unsavory and grisly chapters. Indeed, the generalization might be ventured that no dictatorship or tyranny is ever created except by first striking down the constitutional safeguards which surround he citizen. For the suppression of individual rights is of the essence of tyranny. It is impossible to imagine tyranny without suppression; conversely, it is impossible to imagine suppression without tyranny.

"That's The Return I've Been Afraid Of"

Quemoy And Matsu

Norman Cousins

The respite didn't last very long. Within a few days after the Middle Eastern crisis subsided the world was confronted again by the thumping reality of two Chinas and one potential world war. When Communist China started shooting to back up her claim to the islands just off her shore, the resultant situation dramatized once again the growing precariousness of life on this planet.

A war over Quemoy and Matsu is not quite the same as a localized war such as took place in Korea. This is no limited military action involving a few gunboats and the Seventh Fleet. This is the main show—a total war involving the three largest nations in the world, all of which have made it clear that they will hold nothing back, neither missiles nor rockets nor nuclear bombs. The initial explosions may take place off the China coast but there may be no way of stopping the atomic furnace once it starts. It feeds itself; there are thousands of hydrogen bomb boosters to keep it going and growing.

There is an instant reply to this line of reasoning. It will be said that the United States must not allow itself to become intimidated or paralyzed in dealing with Communist threats because of the possibility of a nuclear holocaust. It will be said further that world communism will confront us with one military threat after another if we ever succumb to this atomic blackmail.

The trouble with this line of argument is that it assumes two things. First, that the other fellow will back down once we make it clear that we intend to start shooting. Second, that we can still achieve our objective if he doesn't back down but shoots back instead. As for the first assumption, the same this-is-the-time-to-drawing-line and we-can't-afford-to-turn-away arguments may hold with the other fellow. As for the second assumption, the idea that military victory is obtainable in a nuclear shooting war is as outmoded as the medieval fort. War no longer works. In today's world, nations do not wage war; they wage mutual suicide.

This brings us to the main point. If the United States is serious about trying to halt the spread of communism in the world it will develop the kind of policy that is likely to be effective. First, we can give up our sleight-of-hand policy with respect to the United Nations — now-we-use-it, now-we-don't. We can make the United Nations central, not tangential, in our foreign policy. We can recognize that tere is no security for us or anyone outside of a world organization strong enough to deal with basic causes of war and world tension; strong enough to enforce its decisions; strong enough to have a direct connection with peoples rather than governments—a U.N. concerned with the operation of justice rather than the juggling of sovereign wills. And if it is said that communism will oppose the development of the United Nations into such a world organization, then the answer is that we should proceed to make this the central issue. We can also attempt to mobilize the world's peoples behind our advocacy of trose measures that can free men from the fear of universal extermination and release their energies for a saner and better life.

Second, we can tune in on what is happening in the rest of the world, especially as it concerns the determination of the majority of the world's peoples to free themselves from outside rule. In some areas, we take the position that our own political and economic interests are in conflict with the effort of peoples to achieve national liberty. This position is as perilous as it is narrow. It sees no justice except in terms of our own needs. Nothing is more likely to endanger our real security than a policy that separates us from the support and good will of the predominant weight of mankind.

Third, we can inject some sense of utopian adventure into the present human situation. This could be the most exciting and creative period in numan history. Never has there been a more dramatic or fruitful field for the scientific or social intelligence. Our potential conquests are not theoretical; they are within reach. We can probe the virus or soar into outer space. We can harness the sun, make rain, control winds, draw energy from the seas. We can, in short, equip our planet with the means to make life fuller and more meaningful than any generation of men has known before.

Coming back to the present Chinese crisis, nothing we do in behalf of our own security is likely to work unless we are identified with a great idea or a moral cause. The tragic weakness with our policy about the offshore islands is that it is void of moral substance. It is connected with no great principle of justice. It lays no claim on the sympathy or support of other peoples. It doesn't identify the United States with any of the big questions that have such powerful hold on the human conscience. We dare not even take the issue before the United Nations because this would only serve to dramatize our lack of support in the world. It does no credit to the American people for the world to know that we are ready to go before the United Nations only on those issues where we areli kely to win.

A democratic nation faces its greatest danger not when it is up against a frightening concentration of force but when the people of that nation become detached from their government, when they fail to make their will known, when they convince themselves they are helpless to take part in the big decisions that have to be made, when they fail to get the necessary information, when they fail to communicate with one another, when they separate themselves from their ideals. The danger from such a tragic detachment is at least as real today as the billowing smoke over Quemoy. —From the Saturday Review

UNDER A BUSHEL

The United States is a country where imitation is the tribute that the eminent pay to the masses; and they pay it all the time.

The Supreme Court Justice and the barman, the ambassador and the mechanic, the Presidential candidate and Willy Loman, all went to the same kind of schools, grew up in the same social soil—or, if they did not, are at pains to behave as if they did.

President Eisenhower, like Mr. Truman, is apparently not suspected of being a cultivated gentleman with scholarly tastes; but if he were, he would go to all lengths to rebut the suspicion.

A British Prime Minister can avow a liking for Horace, or Jane Austen, or Cezanne without electoral risk; but for an American politician to do so would be like proclaiming a taste for wife-beating. —Charles Curran in Nieman Reports.

The Student Constitution should be changed so that the apportion of legislature seats is based on the number of voting students as well as the number of students.

The number of students could be figured as per cent of the total number of students. The number of those voting—say an average of the past three years—could be worked out as per cent of the total number voting.

These two per cents could be averaged. This figure would be multiplied by 50—the number of the members of the Student Legislature — and rounded off.

This system guarantees that a district will always have some representation while at the same time it provides a useful stimulant to the often apathetic voters.

Let us consider hard facts. In a democratic society there are few people who are motivated by principle alone. If the voters do not have an interest in the election, few will vote.

If the voters later feel that they have some interest then they can exert their influence as long as the system remains democratic.

This brings us to a situation which recently evolved with the new re-apportionment. Town Men's IV will have 10 representatives in the Student Legislature.

There representation is figured on the number of students rather than the number of those voting. Last spring the largest number of students voting (these voted in the editorial race) was approximately 50 in this district.

While the size of this Town Men's IV district has been enlarged to include Victory Village and Glen Lennox (it used to just be Victory Village), it is doubtful that the per cent of voter participation will increase much.

The campus political organizations have had a hard time in trying to find candidates for these seats. There probably will not be 10 candidates from each party if, indeed, there are 10 candidates altogether.

Even when there were only two legislature seats for Victory Village the parties found it hard to keep these seats filled.

It is difficult to think that many married students or graduate students are going to be interested in the legislature.

The consequences of having these 10 legislators from what has been a traditionally uninterested group will be felt by the Student Legislature when a quorum is called for.

Lack of a quorum may hinder the activity of the next legislature. A change must be made by the next campus wide election. The present system is not healthy.

A Letter

Editor:

Recently voiced complaints of parking meters to be erected on certain Chapel Hill streets are without foundation if the complainants would stop looking at the matter from their own viewpoint and view it through the merchants' eyes.

Installation of parking meters will undoubtedly aid downtown merchants, who are, taken as a whole, remarkably courteous and considerate, because installation will expedite traffic flow. You wouldn't like it if a student tied up a parking space in front of your business house all day, would you? Of course not. Neither do the merchants. Merchants contend, and perhaps with justification, that University officials have moved entirely too slowly in providing adequate parking for students. This responsibility is certainly one which rests with the University, not with the town or the Merchants Association.

I am not familiar with the financial needs of the town, but if Chapel Hill is like practically every other North Carolina municipality, it needs additional revenue to provide urban services demanded increasingly by its citizens. It must be remember that the University property, a sizeable chunk of Chapel Hill's physical area, is entirely tax-exempt. Urban services don't grow on a tree; rather, they must be financed by the governmental unit providing them.

University students enjoy some of these services; why shouldn't they help bear their share of the town's financial burden? Chapel Hill has grown by leaps and bounds in the recent past and will continue to grow in the future. Meeting the needs of an expanding municipality requires revenue, and parking meters are a legitimate source of revenue.

The primary responsibility of a town is to provide adequate urban services to its citizens, not as many students think, to preserve the natural beauty of a community.

Appointing a student representative to the Merchants Association is one way to promote amicable relations between town and gown; students looking at concrete situations such as parking meters from two sides is perhaps a better way.

Contest

The Daily Tar Heel has been running a series of contests, one sponsored by the merchants of Chapel Hill on football games, and another on election results.

There were about 300 entries each week on the football contest, and this week there were about 10 entries on the election contest.

This is a sad commentary on the mentality of the campus.

Kappa Kappa Gamma Installation To Start

Carolina's seventh and newest sorority—Kappa Kappa Gamma—will be formarly installed on this campus in ceremonies starting today and continuing through Sunday.

At least eight national officers of the sorority and other Kappa alumnae are expected for the installation. Duke University Kappas will act as the installing chapter.

Kappa Kappa Gamma began colonizing here last February. At that time, 27 coeds became charter pledges of the sorority.

The installation gets underway today with a reception from 4 to 5:30 p.m. in Graham Memorial's main lounge. The reception is being sponsored by the Panhellenic Association for Kappa officers and charter members.

The 18 charter members of the UNC Kappa chapter are: Bryte Abernethy, house manager; Sarah Adams, Fletcher Bryan, Jan Cobbs, president; Carolyn Cohen, Alice Dannebaum, Holly Deifell, pledge trainer;

Judee Doherty, Nancy Evans, Carol Freeman, Joyce Funai, Pat Hamer, corresponding secretary; Edith Hurt, recording secretary; Libby Johnson, Lynn Merchant, Charlotte Pope, membership chairman; Nancy Tunnell and Cam Wittemore.

Boots Koch is treasurer.

Further Look At Platform Wanted By SP

questions from the floor, that there are not any such things as private social groups on campus, but that there are student social groups. Foushee went on to say, however, that "there is no student means that can mandate to fraternities that they drop discriminatory clauses in their national charters."

Foushee agreed with a member who stated that "you can't make them, (drop such clauses) but you can urge them."

The party accepted the "plank" in the platform as it read.

Article IV of the proposed platform calling for action toward the establishment of a single honor council failed to get the group's approval.

AGAINST AIM

Paddy Wall, secretary of the student body, spoke against including such an aim in the platform. Miss Wall said that girls lie about different things than boys, and that there is a double standard on campus, with the girls living by different principles from the boys.

"Put yourself in the place of the person coming before the council. How do you think you would want your trial? Would you want it by people who live under the same standard or by those who live under a different standard?" she stated.

Many of the girls present seemed to agree with Miss Wall.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND
DTH SPORTS EDITOR

"Even without Whitley," said coach Pat Preston at Jim Tatum's press conference, "Virginia will be tough." "They play a wide-open spectacular type of game and they want this one bad—real bad."

Some of the sportswriters around the state may consider the Cavaliers as a pushover, but not so the Carolina team. They well remember last year's 20-13 pasting at the hands of Virginia. A great deal of respect for the potential of the Cavalier team remains with the Tar Heels, even though the boys from Charlottesville have won but one game.

WHITLEY MAY BE READY

A young quarterback named John Dempsey has stepped very well into the hard-to-fill shoes of ace Reece Whitley. Dempsey has better than 60% completions on his passing. But it is still not known whether Whitley will play or not. Tatum says he is counting on Whitley's being ready to go.

Another stand-out Virginia performer is halfback Sonny Randle, who leads the entire nation in pass receptions with 34. Randle is extremely fast and has sticky fingers when it comes to catching passes.

INTERIOR LINE PROBLEM

The interior line seems to be the only real problem for the Cavaliers, but when it runs up against the rugged Tar Heel stone wall it could turn into a very large problem.

Preston, after scouting Virginia for two games, reports that they will throw anywhere from 20-35 passes per game. Carolina currently ranks next to last in pass defense, although that really doesn't tell the story. The Tar Heel opponents have been forced to go to the air because they couldn't run through, around, or over the line. Also Carolina plays to prevent the home run, allowing occasional short passes. Still the Heels will be working hard on pass defense all this week.

STALLINGS OUT FOR VA. GAME

Virginia is not the only team around with injury problems. Carolina's fine second unit tackle Don Stallings is definitely out for the Cavalier game. Captain Phil Blazer has an injured knee, but will probably play. Most of the Tar Heels showed up for practice Monday with a various assortment of cuts and bruises sustained in Knoxville against a tough Tennessee team.

A freak accident prevented starter Ed Lipski from even getting into action in the Tennessee game. Lipski was tossing the ball around before the game started when someone threw it right into his mouth. The ball broke off one tooth completely and another half way so that a raw nerve was exposed every time he opened his mouth. Thus, Lipski just sat that one out.

ONLY 15th

Many Carolina fans, including yours truly, were disappointed to see that the Associated Press Poll only gave the Tar Heels 15th place this week. This after they have won 5 games running to become the hottest team in the country, bar none. But time will tell.

For the benefit of those students who won't be able to make the trip to Charlottesville this Saturday, the game will be televised on regional network.

GREAT SUPPORT FOR TEAM

The Carolina student body is to be highly commended for the wonderful support they have shown the football team this year. Nearly 1,500 students turned out for the Tennessee clash including the band, glee club, other organizations, and just plain Tar Heel boosters.

COACH Jim Tatum has expressed a desire that the students turn out for the Virginia game as they did two years ago when the Carolina cheering section outcheered the Virginia group in their own stadium.

JOHN CRAWFORD AND GAY C[illegible]EN (left to right) are both defending champions in their respective [illegible] events in the Fourth Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet which is to be held today at 2:00 at the Durham Wildlife Club Area. Crawford, from Salisbury, has been victorious for the last two years in the target rifle competition. Cowen, a Kappa Alpha, was last year's winner of the frap shooting.

Rod & Gun Field Meet Set For Today At 2

Although the weather man has forecasted rain for today's annual Rod & Gun Field Meet, a crowd of Carolina students numbering better than 150 is expected to participate. In the event that old Sol is not smiling on Chapel Hill this afternoon and rain threatens to mar the event, it will be postponed until next Tuesday, November 11.

A large sign will be posted in front of Woollen Gym if postponement is necessary, or students may obtain information by calling the Intramurals Office at 9424.

Although men students have turned out in fairly good numbers, the women have been a little lax in entering. As of yet the coeds haven't come through with a single entry, and the event is a coree meet. Any women interested in trying their skill with gun or bow and arrow should be present.

By now all entries should have been turned in to the Intramurals office, but late entries will be accepted today. The Rod & Gun Meet takes place from 2 until 5 o'clock today at the Durham Wildlife Club, and participants can compete at any time during those hours.

Some of the events in the meet are: archery, bait casting, trap shooting and target rifle shooting.

A caravan will form in front of Woollen Gym today between 1:30 and 2 o'clock to furnish rides for all those not having them.

Klochak, Cummings Head ACC

By Ken ALYTA

CHARLOTTE AP—Five new names, headed by Don Klochak, thundering fullback from North Carolina, are on this week's Atlantic Coast Conference regional All American football board backfield honor roll of six players.

Kolochak, who literally trampled Tennessee into submission last week, next Tuesday night to consider the Snead, King Dixon, South Carolina halfback, and a North Carolina State twosome, halfback Ken Trowbridge and fullback Don Hafer.

Held over for a third straight week was North Carolina quarterback Jack Cummings.

Klochak, a 230-pound junior, who returned to school after a three-year layoff due to a service hitch, had been brought along slowly by Coach Jim Tatum. In the Tar Heels' first six games Klochak carried the ball only eight times but gained 50 yards.

Last week, in the 21-7 trouncing of Tennessee that ended a nine-year string of Vol victories, dynamic Don was superb. He blasted out 92 yards in 15 carries, including an 18-yard stampede for the first touchdown. He bowled over would-be tacklers with ferocity that stunned the Tennessee team.

Cummings hit 6 of 11 passes for 80 yards and a touchdown, averaged 50 yards on three punts and directed the Tar Heels masterfully. Four times in their last scoring march of 78 yards aginst Tennessee he completed third down passes.

Booters Prep For ACC Foes

By JIM PURKS

The soccer season conference-wise has just begun for Carolina.

Four more games remain on the varsity soccer team's schedule, and three of them will be with conference foes.

On Friday, the Tar Heels will square off here against N. C. State College, whose team last year hung a humiliating 2-1 defeat on Carolina in Raleigh.

After the State game, the team will have a week to get ready for its last home game, against Davidson on Nov. 14, followed three days later by its clash with Maryland, perennial winner of the Atlantic Coast Conference championship in soccer.

Maryland Unbeaten

Maryland's teams have never been beaten or tied by a conference opponent since the conference was organized years ago.

Duke will be Carolina's last opponent for the season, the game to be played in Durham on Nov. 21. Last year the two teams tied in a thrilling contest on Fetzer Field 3-3.

(Right now they are concentrating on being ready for the State game, which promises to be a tough test for the Tar Heels as the Wolfpack has played well against conference foes this year, losing only to Maryland by a 3-0 score.

Tuesday's showing against Roanoke Colelge in which the Tar Heels won their fifth game of the season by a 3-1 victory indicates that State will have a hard time.

Offense Sharp

The offense, working well with the halfbacks, kept the ball moving against the Roanoke defense constantly.

Mike Thompson, playing further back toward the center line than seen in previous home games, was able to hawk the Roanoke players and steal the ball so he could feed off to his teammates on offense.

Playing with Thompson were John Ghanim, who played his best game for the Tar Heels and scored the third and final goal, and Joe Perkins, who also showed good passing ability, especially in setting up several plays with left wing Rick Grausman.

Parks Scores Two

Coleman Barks, playing at right wing, was the scoring ace of the game as his two goals past the agile Roanoke goalie decided the contest.

A defensive shift by Coach Allen may have been a deciding factor in the Roanoke game, as Coach Allen started hustling Hugh Goodman at right halfback instead of center fullback. Goodman, playing consistently well throughout, was instrumental in setting up Carolina's first score.

Joyner, SAE, Law School Win Championship

Three teams — Joyner Dorm, SAE Fraternity, and Law School—won championships in their divisions yesterday and the right to enter the all-campus championships.

Joyner beat defending campus champion Ruffin in an overtime game by moving the ball further in the extra period. The score had been tied 8-8 at the end of regulation. Both teams scored a safety, and Sam Sutton scored for Ruffin while Bob Sherrill countered for Joyner. Ruffin has protested the game.

Law School whipped the Peacocks 13-6 for the Grad championship; with Al Thomas and Jim McClean scoring for the winners and Bruce Johnson converting. Howard Light scored for the losers.

SAE beat DKE 6-0 in a hard fought defensive battle, with Jim Galloway scoring the only touchdown on a long pass from Comer Hobbs. SAE is now White Division Champs.

In the Blue Division, SAE trounced DKE 33-7 to advance to the finals. They will meet the winner of Beta Sigma Nu for the championship.

In the all-campus finals pairings, Joyner will meet the Law School and SAE will take on the winner in the fraternity blue division.

Harriers Lose To Duke By 18-43

Carolina's hapless cross county team just didn't have the horses to stop Duke's powerful running attack yesterday as the Blue Devils really poured it on the Tar Heels, winning by 18-43.

Duke placed three men across the finish line in a tie for first place. Jim Nourse, Al Pitkethly, and Cary Weisenger were running about twenty seconds ahead of Carolina's Dave Skrlock when tey decided to cross the same wire at the same time. So they put their sholders together and coasted in with a time of 17:32.3.

Without Wayne Bishop, the Tar Heels placed only one man in the top 5. Dave Skrlock finished fourth.

The Summary:

Though Jim Howe of Duke was first, Rett Everette and David Peltz of Carolina finished second and third respectively and the Tar Babies salted away every position from 6th to 11th to guarantee an easy victory.

Student Legislature Approves Discrimination Abolition Bill

Bill Passed To Formulate Yack Policy

The student Legislature last night went on record as favoring the abolition of discriminatory clauses in passing a revised version of a two week old bill introduced by Gary Greer (SP).

The passage of the bill puts the Student Legislature on record as being opposed to discriminatory clauses, while it also advocates that no organization possessing discriminatory clauses on campus be denied recognition.

Another bill by Greer proposing that honor council juniors be selected from the campus at large was tabled again that the body might consider amendments to the bill proposed by Norman Smith (Ind.) and John Brooks (SP).

A bill by John Brooks (SP) asking for a definate policy toward the publishing of the Yackety Yack was passed after the body deleted Articles III and IV. The deleted articles would have had student government make refunds to organizations already included in the Yack that paid above $50 per page. The amendment proposed to Gary Greer's bill revising the system of Honor Council juror selection would strengthen the position of the defendant.

Jurors called under the random selection system who failed to appear would lose their right to vote in student goverment elections and their right to hold student goverment offices, unless they were excused by the attorney general.

Also under the proposed amendments the defendant's council could participate actively in the defendant. Both the defendent and the investigator could question and dismiss any junior whom he found unacceptable.

Jurors could only serve for one session each acedemic year.

The bill on discriminatory clauses as originally proposed by Bary Greer would have elected an amendment to the NSA basic policy declaration stating that "while the student legislature might possibly like to see the abolition of discriminatory clauses, it does not advocate denying recognition to those organizations on campus which have discriminatory clauses in their national charters."

Other action by the legislature included the acceptance of Jim Crownover to the seat of Walter Keck (SP). The seat will expire this fall.

FREE DOWNTOWN PARKING TO END

Meters Go Into Operation Monday

Free parking in most downtown spaces ends Monday morning. Beginning that day, motorists will be paying for the privilege.

Town Manager Thomas Rose announced today that parking meter installation has been completed and that the machines will start operating Monday.

They will operate from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. except on holidays and Sunday.

Three types of meters will be in operation — 12-minute machines, colored bronze; one-hour machines, colored silver; and two-hour machines, colored pale green.

Pennies can be used in each of the machines, and nickels in the one-and two-hour machines.

Violations for overtime parking will bring offenders fines of $1 in Chapel Hill Traffic Court. Additional fines will be assessed against motorists who attempt to add to the time of the meter by putting in money to extend the meter past its prescribed limit.

Chief of Police Bill Blake said today that there will be no "leeway" for offenders early next week when the machines go into operation. Fines will start immediately.

There are 403 meters, both single and dual, in the downtown area.

Dorms To Get Phones; Proper Care Requested

By WES LEFLER

New "hear-here" phones have been ordered to replace old telephones in six men's dorms.

"I imagine they will be here in a month." John S. Bennett, of operations for the University, said yesterday.

The new phones will be installed for a trial period in Battle, Old East, the second and third floors of Mangum, third floor of Old West and third floor Aycock.

During the past few years campus phones have suffered a great deal of damage, especially the cords," Student Body President Don Furtado said yesterday. "We want to stress the care of these new phones."

The amount of care given new phones will determine weather or not all dorms will get them and how soon, Furtado said.

He discussed the trouble with old-type phones without booths as being two fold. Cords are being stretched and broken constantly by students who drop the receivers and leave them swinging while they go to get the person being called. And lack of insulation around the phone makes for a noisy telephone while ringing.

The new "hear-hear" phone booths will offer added privacy with their projecting insulated walls and will save cords, Director of Operations Bennett said. "It's surprising how private they are, " he added. Each new phone has a platform for the receiver and phone book while not in use.

Action was started last week when Furtado wrote a letter to Bennett requesting the new phones.

In a special conference this week a decision to install the phones was reached by the following people who attended: Ruby Edwards, IDC president; Jim Crownover, chairman of the campus stores commission: Ralph Cummings; vice president of the student body; John Brooks, presidential assistant; Sam Magill assistant dean of student affairs, and Bennett.

The cost of each phone will be $125 complete.

Furtado said yesterday, "We hope that the new phones will result in a definate decrease in damage and at the same time will allow students to carry on conversations with a minimum disturbance to those who are on the floor."

The IDC will be responsible for prosecuting all students who damage the new phones, he said.

Drama Group Meets Today To Pick Script

Today at 2 p.m. in Graham Memorial the Drama Committee of GMAB will meet to select a play for the first production. The play is tentatively set for two weeks after Thanksgiving.

Any student may submit a play, poetry, dramatic reading, or student written one-act plays to the committee for consideration at the Friday meeting.

Those interested in any phase of drama, from acting, staging, directing, to any other parts of play production, have been urged to attend the meeting. Student directors will be used for the play.

The GMAB Drama Committee provides both an outlet for all students interested in drama and entertainment for the student body, according to Graham Adams, committee chairman.

The committee will produce as many plays during the year as their budget will allow, he said.

Although the approval of GM's director must be secured for using the physical facilities, plays are produced entirely by students.

The functions of the committee have been outlined as: to select plays, poetry and dramatic readings for production; to select directors, stage managers and other positions concerning production and to assume executive duties during rehearsal and production.

Darwin's Time More Serene Says Dr. Fitch

By MARY ALICE ROWETTE

"Why did Charles Darwin feel so serene about the question of evolution and we are the ones who live in the age of anxiety."

This question was asked Wednesday by Dr. Robert Fitch, dean of the Pacific School of Religion.

Dr. Fitch, giving the second of two lectures sponsored by the Wesley Foundation, answered the question by listing four things Darwin had which, he said, are missing in modern civilization:

1. An absolute belief in the rule of the moral law.
2. The universal sway of the British Empire.
3. An extremely devoted wife who had no interest other than waiting on her husband.
4. An absolute confidence that everything in history and evolution —like the novels that were read— must come to a happy ending.

"Our world is a more troubled one," he said, and is "less sure of its basic convictions than the world in which Darwin lived.

"We are, therefore, bound to be more disturbed by the deeper implications of Darwin's teaching."

Dr. Fitch spoke Tuesday night on "The Decline and Fall of Sex."

Carolina's June Graduates Were Affected By Recession

By PETE IVEY

A report showing how UNC graduates fared in getting jobs during the recent recession shows:

1. A slight dip in numbers of people hired.
2. Lower starting salaries.
3. A tendency to stay in North Carolina at work.
4. An overwhelming number of decisions to come back to school or go into service.

Director of Placement Joe M. Galloway said job getting during 1957-58 was "definately affected by the recession."

Galloway addd: "What had been a senior's market was now an employers' market."

At the same time, Galloway stated that indications are that the recession now is over, and both out-of-state firms in substantially increasing numbers are beginning to send representatives to Chapel Hill to interview graduating seniors.

Although salaries were lower for most graduates this past year, there were exceptions. For instance, business was still looking for men of special talents and training.

Graduates of the Master of Business Administration program reported starting salaries of slightly above the previous year. Starting salaries for MBA graduates were $437 a month, or nine dollars higher than in 1956-1957.

During the year companies seeking employees made fewer visits to the campus, 319 as compared to 358 in 1956-57. The ten percent decrease tells only a part of the story. Some national organizations who had previously hired several hundred were hiring only thirty or forty.

Galloway stressed that his figures do not show all graduates who got jobs, but only those who made their contacts through the Placement Service. Others got jobs on their own.

However, Galloway believes the Placement Bureau's figures are realistic and reveal the general trend of employment for the one-year period from September, 1957 to October, 1958.

Six IDC Court Amendments Approved By Dorm Council

By RON SHUMATE

The IDC Wednesday night approved six amendments to the recently-approved bylaws of the IDC court. An amendment to the "Proposed Dormitory Intramural Managers Program" was also approved.

Voting on proposed additions to the IDC bylaws was postponed until the next meeting.

The new court bylaws were approved last month and provided for individual dormitory courts and a jury trial system. The new system is not yet in effect.

Under the new system, the old IDC court will have jurisdiction over all cases on appeal from the dorm courts and will have original jurisdiction over all cases in which a member of another dorm violated a regulation in a dorm not his own. The court will also try cases involving violations of rules by dorm officers.

The amendments approved Wednesday night included the notifying of defendants, by the court chairman, of the defendants' "right

FACULTY MEMBERS COMMENT

Unlimited Cuts Would Be Nice—But...

The present class cut system drew comment from several Carolina faculty members last week.

Under a rule approved last year, class cuts may vary in number from none to unlimited, depending on each instructor.

'ALWAYS IRRITATED'

"I am always irritated by the idea that cutting rules are something we have to have," Dr. John C. Kunstman, chairman of the Dept. of Germanic Languages, commented.

"Attendance should never be a problem; any rules governing the student to insure his going to class belong in kindergarten," he added.

In the opinion of several professors, the present policy is as near as it can be to having no rules concerning class cuts.

TWO SECTIONS

The legislation now in effect is in two sections.

"Regular class attendance is a student obligation . . . no right or privilege exists which permits a student to be absent . . . ." says the first part .

The second section requires instructors to keep attendance records in all classes.

If a student misses three consecutive class meetings, according to the regulation, or misses more classes than the instructor deems advisable, "the instructor will report the facts to the student's academic dean for appropriate action."

CALLS AT ATTENTION

The "three consecutive class meeting" rule "merely calls to the attention of the administration that the whereabouts of the student should be checked," Faculty Dean James L. Godfrey wrote in a letter to the faculty last February.

In that letter he said reporting the absences "will not lead to any other action by the dean unless the instructor wishes it to do so."

One department chairman, who asked that his identity be withheld cast his doubts on this being the prime reason for reporting the student.

He cited a case where a regular absentee was reported under the regulations and the instructor was told that "the proper authorities" were not concerned with the student's absence 'unless disciplinary action was involved."

NEEDED TREATMENT

On checking into the case the department head discovered that the student was in need of psychiatric treatment which involved withdrawing from the University for a rest.

"This said the department head, "is something the proper authorities were supposed to and should have checked on."

Nearly all freshman-sophomore courses still retain the old "three cuts and no more" rule, although the faculty has officially repealed it.

TWO OUTSPOKEN

Dr. C. Hugh Holman, chairman of the English Dept., said he does not believe "a departmental requirement concerning cuts in freshman-sophomore course in any way conflicts with either the wording of the spirit of present legislation. These requirements are necessary to define limits for both the student and teacher."

Both Dr. Holman and Dr. Kunstman were the most outspoken of the faculty members interviewed against cutting systems.

Dr. Kunstmann said atendance should be up to the individual student.

BETTER ON OWN

The student can be helped by getting out and studying and learning for himself. ". . . if he (the student) has something more useful and productive to do than attend a lecture once in awhile, I see no reason why he shouldn't absent himself."

Dr. Holman said, "If you were to ask me if I like the present system I'd say no. If you then asked me what kind of a system I'd want, I'd say none. And then, if you asked me if I thought it would work at UNC I'd say no."

He said the system of unlimited cuts would not work at UNC but does at other schools (Yale, Harvard and Oberlin for example) because "perhaps they (the other schools) have more responsible student bodies."

Most of the faculty members interviewed said they wished a system of unlimited cuts were possible.

SYSTEM FORCED

They pointed out that attendance requirements at UNC are "parental," but they admitted that such requirements are necessary for "our typical student body."

Conversely, no faculty member reported any problems concerning attendance. They said it is "useless and tiresome to talk about class cuts.

Dr. Holman, who has taught under four different systems of varying amounts of freedom for the students, said his class attendance has never shown any difference.

"We should be concerned with more important things than cuts," he said. "However, an irresponsible student body often forces a faculty to become overly 'parental.' "

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday were:

Elizabeth Ann McRorie, Pogo, Martha Elizabeth Whiteley, Madgi Mohammed Elkammash, Robert Douglas Gillkin, Haywood Vernon Morwood, Robert Edson Briggs, Robert Henry Haskell, Charlie Thomas Whilly, William Waller Ecton, Romo Aristides Cruz, Curtis Bernard Gans, Franklin Pope Inman.

Tar Heel Debating

Are forensics dead on the UNC campus? Intercollegiately speaking the answer is no, although the debate squad is not getting its mail in time to compete in as many meets as it could, due to distributing difficulties.

The problem is the two oldest organizations on campus, The Di and the Phi. Both seem headed over the hill. The Phi, to be sure, is getting many visitors to its meetings, but neither society has enough members.

Moreover, the quality of debate is down abysmally. There are many fine speakers on this campus, and the two societies possess some of them. But even those t hat they do have, are not actually preparing their speeches, so that they seem to be speaking from feeling rather than from knowledge.

These two organizations were once the hub of student government, Even as recently as five years ago, a bill passed by both houses could be expected to pass the student legislature.

The two organizations offered an opportunity for one to get on his own two feet, to learn how to speak, and to keep up with the major issues. For some twenty people that comprise both societies, this is not the case any longer.

The two societies will have difficulty paying for a page in the yearbook, and cannot maintain a healthy financial status for long on the present membership.

The picture looks exceedingly bleak, for the latter day descendants of people like James Knox Polk. The two organizations are worth saving, but it will take the aid of any in the student body who consider these organizations worthwhile.

Will the Di and Phi pass away? The answer is up to you.

Further Election

Two southern elections have a great deal of significance on the segregation picture.

The unseating of Rep. Brooks Hays of Arkansas by Dr. Dale Alford, an ardent segregationist, and the large vote Senator Byrd's female opponent received bears heavy significance on future dealings with the segregation issue.

Clearly Alford's election is a victory for Orval Faubus' massive resistance techniques as opposed to Hays' moderate stands, and conceivably has again harmed the South in bringing integration in a peaceful manner to this area. It is unfortunate that a man of the caliber of Hays must lose an election, but he may have some consolation in the fact that demagogues do not last as long as honest men, and Faubus' star will grow dimmer shortly.

The Virginia contest is a triumph for moderation in a Byrd dominated state. For a woman to get over 100,000 votes against Byrd is something unheard of, and to campaign on only one issue—The Almond-Byrd massive resistance policy towards integration is an achievement that augurs ill for the conservative machine and massive resistance. The heavy vote against Byrd in area where massive resistance tactics are currently being employed is another sign that people are beginning to awaken to the fallacy in southern demagoguery.

Despite Alford's victory, the future looks bright.

Eisenhower

President Eisenhower's statement that the people have chosen to elect a left wing Congress instead of a sensible one is revealing.

The people have finally come around to realize that the left wing is the sensible wing, despite the President's protestations.

The people have voted, quite heavily for an off year election, and quite wisely for any election.

Out Of Joint

March Wind

TUESDAY, 11P.M. — As the Democratic sweep picks up momentum, soon to lash into California with the force of a tidal wave, I find myself remembering another election of ten years ago, the historic upset pulled off by Harry S. Truman.

I was out on the West Coast at that time, and so about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, while California was still voting, I dropped by the local radio station to check the AP teletype on the eastern returns. With a slight chuckle of condescension I noted that Truman's margins in the industrial towns of Connecticut exceeded the FDR vote of 1944. Obviously, this was some sort of a fluke.

A few hours later I was at an election night blast with some prominent California Democrats who were also chuckling at the surprisingly good race that Truman was running back in the heathen East. These California Democrats were very calm about it all. They had long since written Truman off as a hopeless cause; they had campaigned for their state ticket vigorously, while sitting on their backsides with respect to the man from Missouri.

As Truman continued to run well in the East a few of the Californians began to get a little nervous. Jimmy Roosevelt, who had tried to get General Eisenhower (of all people) to run as the Democratic candidate in place of Truman, reassured those Democrats of faint heart who were worrying about the possibility of a Democratic victory. "Relax," said Roosevelt. who had made all his plans on the assumption that Truman would lose. "The rural vote will kill the little guy."

This buoyed the hearts of the unfaithful for all of five minutes until some spoil sport pointed out that it was 1 o'clock in the morning back East, the rural vote had already come in, and my God it was for Truman!

Somebody, I believe it was the wife of politico Richard Richards, produced a box of Truman buttons that had been brought to the party as a joke. The buttons were quickly distributed along with jocular comments like, "We were for him all the time," and everybody settled down to sweat out California. After all, if that Missouri rascal were going to be elected, it would be nice if he did it with an assist from California.

So now it is 1958, and the Democratic Party dominates the national scene, striding coast to coast with giant steps. This great political party, possessing lots of muscle and guts and glamorous young candidates, may well be the last hope for an America which is just now beginning to realize the trouble that lies ahead.

Bouquets for this Democratic victory will, I suppose, be passed out rather promiscuously. Adlai Stevenson will get a goodly number Labor's Committee on Political Education will get a lot of credit. But my bouquet for the 1958 victory goes to the old warhorse who single-handedly pulled off the 1948 victory.

I remember Harry Truman in 1948. He taught many important people many important lessons in that year. He's still teaching, and if we're lucky he'll be around for many years to come. The usual analysis is that 1948 marked the end of the Rooseveltian Democratic Party. I suspect that it was not much the end, but rather the beginning of the new Democratic Party which is our last best hope today.

Moonglow

Joe John

Not too long ago, this column questioned the antiquated mode of justice employed in Alabama's now-celebrated Jimmy Wilson case. Inherent in the discussion of this affair were the fact that Jimmy Wilson was a Negro and that a color problem existed in the deep-South state of Alabama.

It now appears evident that the highly vociferous "liberals" who have indignantly condemned the South for racial disturbances must refrain from hurling stones.

Roscoe Fleming, a liberal columnist for the Denver Post, began a recent article with the following words: "Southern critics are right in one respect, in this civil-rights controversy. We in the North are too smug as to progress we have made."

Mr. Fleming wrote these words after coming upon a five-inch story in the massive recesses of the New York Times. The story was not printed elsewhere. It did not gain the attention of Jimmy Wilson's tragedy, but to Fleming it bore a "chilling resemblance."

Two young Puerto Ricans, recruited to work in fields near Poughkepsie, New York, stopped a man on a street, asking him for a cigarette. When he refused, they roughed him up and took his pack, and nothing else. This is certainly not commendable, but hardly worthy of violent condemnation.

The boys, however, were tried and convicted on three counts: 1) robbery in the first degree; 2) grand larceny; 3) second degree assault. According to Mr. Fleming, "lawyers explained that taking a few cigarettes was grand larceny because the deed took place during commission of another felony, either the assault or the robbery."

Somparing a capitol punishment sentence for stealing $1.85 to the ten year sentence for snitching a few cigarettes, Roscoe Fleming stated:

". . . Just as the death sentence in Alabama for robbery has never been invoked save twice, and both these times against Negroes, if these two young Puerto Ricans had been white Americans, they probably would have gotten off with misdemeanor conviction, and perhaps a month or so in jail."

Yet, the two Puerto Ricans did not inspire the reams of protest which arose in defense of Jimmy Wilson—no petitions from Europe, no dramatic international cablegrams. Nations and their press were silent.

Of course, the degree of punishment was not as severe, but the basic principle involved was the same. Ancient laws in the hands of prejudiced interpreters resulted in a restricted justice because of color—in the South, in Alabama; in the North, in New York.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

The Sonata Recital of violinist Giorgio Ciompi and pianist Arthur Loesser last Tuesday evening can only be described meaningfully as a miracle. In this evening of the most intense artistic experience, one can only be utterly overhelmed by the greatness of art, of music, and ultimately of man. For this was no ordinary concert of ordinary music, but an event of the very highest importance to all of us who were there.

Music may be pleasurable, but this concert went far beyond the satisfaction of pleasure. Music may be exciting, but again this concert was more than excitement. Music may be passionate, still again there was much more than just passion expressed by the two artists. To say what really happened in this concert is the answer to the question What is music? For I know with certainty that this was a concert in which music was presented for what it really is: complete, significant, and of profound beauty.

The program opened with the performance of the A major Sonata of Brahms. This work, representative of the composer's later works, is almost abstract in its romanticism; a curious contradiction of term, yet the romantic spirit seems stretched and diffused, making the music's mellowness a new demension of musical meaning. In that sense, this late work parallels the late music of Beethoven: both composers speak with feeling, but it is feeling of a haunting, abstract and difficult to understand kind. It is not, as has been said falsely by so many, that their music now is "intellectual." Far from it; rather it is a new dimension of feeling in which the directon is not so much toward expression as it is toward a musical understanding of music itelf. In Brahms this knowledge takes on a guise of musical pensiveness, almost perhaps a looking back. For Beeroven it is the use of forms (especially variation and fugue) to examine how much meaning, musical meaning, is within the simplest of themes. Both composers seem more at rest than their thiught tiward the music itself rather than their own identity.

The performance was completely sympathetic to the composer's intent and was deeply impresive. Mr. Ciompi has one of the most beautiful bowing arms I have ever heard, and the result was a range of tone and nuance that, incorporated in the music itself, made it sing with almost inexpressible values. Mr. Loser's playing was also of the highest musicianship; it was senitive, jutified with a remarkably inightful interpretation, and in complete accord with his partner. The ensemble sounded so natural and at ease that it was difficult to realize how much work had gone into it, but its ease could only be a result of a very close cofaboration in the total conception of the music they played.

The Beethoven Sonata in G major, Opus 30, No. 3 was performed next. The Haydn-like lightness beautifully fused with the growing romantic spirit of the young Beethoven was brought out by the artists with almost perfect control. The middle movement shows the beginning of Beethoven's concern with developing means to bring out musically all that the music may hold. The last movement is a small perfection of the balance between delight and thought.

The performance of the Cesar Frank Sonata was, for me, the most profound I have ever heard in my experience. Although I personally consider it the only worthwhile work this composer ever wrote, it remains, nevertheless, a great work of art. The performance was of such intensitp and yet never preformance that the experienceof the music itself became a deepness of soul that can never be explained rationally or accounted for by description. The performance of this sonata went to the very depth of one's being, as all great art does, and presented a wealth of feelings that are beyond words. Again the artists seemed to have such sympathy for the music that as they played, all was tranformed into music and there was finally no thinking of music performance and audience as separate: all were within that which is the very center of all music: beauty.

The miracle of music is the miracle how beauty comes to us, human beings, and is able to transform our very souls. The question What is music? must somehow incorporate the reality of this beauty and make clear how it is possible. Music is never a simple fact, but a mysterious complex that is experienced but never quite undertood. That does not mean that music is purely emotional or beyond our intellectual capacities. No, the real miracle of mucsic is the unity of feeling with thought in the musical experience.

It is, therefore, the fervent hope of this reviewer tha these artists will return to us here at Chapel Hill in the very near future, for their greatness made possible this musical miracle.

Words

Sidney Dakar

Many freshmen and seniors alike never seem to realize the extreme care that should be used when choosing words with which to influence people. Even the most careful writer sometimes inadvertently antagonizes his readers by a poor choice of synonyms. Our language is a living, hence changing, thing. Even the most up-to-date dictionary will not give you the meaning that a word will have for different people.

The connotation of words and the visions they bring to mind are far more important than the objective dictionary definition. There are no real synonyms for most of the emotional words, the words which have the most influence upon us. Consider the word "fearful." The dictionary tells us that the following are synonyms: dreadful, lurid, alarming, formidable, terrible, ghastly, shocking, direful and etc. However, at a glance you will no doubt think of different things and circumstances when seeing each of these synonyms.

To see a classic example of the use of emotional words to tell the truth, yet convey different meanings to the reader, I refer you to a copy of an article which appeared in the Harvard 'Crimson' by M. S. Gwirtzman entitled "What Time Is It? (See our Political Science Dept.) Mr. Gwirtzman goes through the back issues of 'Time" and gets its description of Truman and then later Eisenhower doing the same thing.

Here is a sample. Quote: "Last week . . . the President (Truman) eased his crooniest crony, George E. Allen, into the Board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corp." (Jan. 28, 1946,) But behold: "Last week . . . the President (Eisenhower) chatted with golfing companion George E. Allen, Washington lawyer and friend of presidents." (Dec. 14, 1954.) Unquote. Crony and friend have the same dictionary meaning. This article is a "must read" for all of you who are looking for anti-'Time' ammunition.

Sometimes the connotation of words drastically althers the course of history. Some of you may be familiar with the article by Caughlin called "The Great Mokusatsu Mistake." (Marpers, Mar., 1953) The Japanese were presented with an ultimatum to surrender in WWII prior to the dropping of the atomic bomb. One word of their reply, "mokusatsu," was erroseously translated by the Allies to mean "to ignore" rather than "to withhold comment," the meaning the Japanese had intended to convey. As a consequence, two cities were destroyed, thousands of people were killed, Russia entered the war and a whole series of events in the Far East was precipitated which might have been avoided.

I trust that any of you Russian language students who may be reading this will make a strong resolution to redouble your efforts. You might work for the State Department one day.

Nancy Combes

The other morning at breakfast I took a test. Anything that happens before eight o'clock is bad enough, but after finishing the test the Viceroy people had so kindly placed in the Daily Tar Heel, I was more prepared than ever to jump back into bed, pull the covers over my head . . . . all because I had discovered I didn't have one . . . one of of my own, that is.

First of all, I learned I was not a man who thinks for himself . . . but then I knew that . . . I'm a girl . . . and sometimes I like to think, I'm a woman.

Now take this question: "Do you believe you could fool a lie detector if you put your mind to it?" I must answer no.

By the way, the footnote says you must have six yesses to win your own self-respect? Do you get an island to live on all by yourself with all the filters you can smoke or build log cabins with if you say yes ten times? I overslept my first day on the job and although I did have trouble with my fuel pump or carburetor on the way into town . . . I stammered and blushed and lost my voice trying to tell the story to the boss. It was the truth an it came out like an alibi . . . When I get a phone call from a certain party . . . even with my face not exposed, I can hardly play it cool like all the articles and manuals in the How to Catch Your Man Magazines demand . . . I'm too busy shouting, "Hooray." You called at last!" into the receiver. So you can take those straps off me right now. My heart is pounding at the very idea of your trying to detect my lies.

How about this one? "Do you believe society should adopt new ideas at the expense of old traditions??? Well that old tradition of small taxes seemed to me to be a pretty good one . . . and this new idea of hydrogen bombs is a pretty expensive . . . Marriage for keeps was a better old tradition than legalizing bedhopping and lover swapping . . . cheaper too . . . So I must check the no box and say that many of the society's new ideas are too expensive . . . for my filtered taste.

Number three asks, "Are you completely at ease when people watch you work?" The children . . . I have taught in elementary school can answer that one. They knew when the door opened and the principal sat in the back with his pen scribbling over charts of teacher evaluation that they just better sit straight in their seats, raise their hand, wether they knew the answers or not . . . and they better not make any unnecessary comments such as one unfortunate child made—like . . . "Teacher, how come you're grinning away at us like that?" . . . or that little smarty who pointed out that I had spelled Spelling with one l . . . Oh, no Viceroy people . . . completely in chaos, not at ease for that one.

"Do your emotions ever lead you to do something that seems unreasonable even to yourself?" Let me say that my emotions always strike me as reasonable, but that's another story I could never fit into one of those little boxes.

"Do you plan ahead rather than make snap decisions?" I never dreamed when I awoke this morning I'd be checking no in a little square box on the back of the Daily Tar Heel.

"If your roommate suddenly inherited a million dollars, are you sure your relationship would remain the same?" . . . There's a little picture of this wealthy partner lighting what looks suspiciously like a cigar with a dollar bill or more. If the other one who is standing in the background, looking goggle-eyed on, is supposed to be me . . then how come I haven't got a fire extinguisher in my hand??? Let me state now that for less than one-tenth of my roommate's sudden fortune . . . I would sniff snuff if it was requested.

"Can you honestly say you pay more attention to political issues than to the personalities of the candidates?" In this writer's opinion . . . personalites are the political issues . . . We might have a tennis player instead of a golfer in the White House now . . . if like had rhymed with Stevenson . . . and people didn't listen to advertising and chose the well-known name brands.

Oh, dear Viceroy . . . The one more question at the botton:

"Do you think about the filter cigarette you choose or just smoke any brand? I thought I could triumphantly answer yes to that one.

After enjoying the fun of writing out my replies, I felt I owed it to you, people to run down to the nearest corner store and pick up one . . . I didn't have enough for six packs. I thought about it, I really did. But when I pressed the button in the machine . . . I found I was a failure again. I don't know what to do with the wrong pack of cigarettes that popped out except smoke them.

Can you honesly say you blame me?

Letters

Editor:

The "O.G.H." controversy has roused me to speak out in favor of Mr. Orne's attempts to centralize library facilities on this campus. Anyone doing research, who has found himself fruitlessly seeking books hidden on a departmental library shelf, might begin to wonder whether the books are the personal property of faculty and graduate students. Certainly, research and graduate study are essential elements of university activity, but must the undergraduate pay for it with legwork and wasted hours of searching?

One evening this past summer, I went to the library to do some research for a term paper. I found that every book listed in the catalog which pertained to the subject was in the department library. Upon going there, I found the building locked. Next day, in answer to my inquiry, my teacher said that in the evenings, one used a side door, and knocked loudly for admittance if it was locked. I tried again that evening, only to find that the librarian was not on duty, and the catalog was in such a state that nothing could be located without her. I won't tire you with more details, but suffice it to say that it was a number of days before my visits coincided with one of the two days the librarian was on duty.

It's true that I probably will not need that particular library again (I have certainly lost all inclination to enter it!). However, in the insistence of some faculty and graduate students on maintaining department libraries, which are inconvenient for the undergraduates, there seems to be an implicit attitude towards the undergraduate which might be questionable.

GM Gets More Long-Hair; Popular Records Due Soon

Graham Memorial's record collection is being enlarged.

The records being chosen—after consideration of student requests—for the most part are representative works of chamber, vocal and symphonic music.

"Music of a more popular nature will also be added to the collection in the near future," according to the GM Information Office.

The records chosen by the Graham Memorial Activities Board include Brahm's German Requiem, the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, Mahler's Fifth Symphony, representative Quartets from the pen of Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Franck and Bela Bartok.

Schumann, Schubert, Bach, Stravinsky and Handel are among the other composers represented in the new selections.

In conjunction with the recent additions to the collection, the Music Committee will sponsor weekly record concerts to be held in the Lounge of Graham Memorial. The first concert will be held Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

The works to be included on the concert will be the Kindertotelieder of Gustave Mahler, in a performance by Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, and Brahm's German Requiem, in a performance by Fischer-Dieskau, Elisabeth Grummertets by Bela Bartok. Announcements of the weekly concerts will be made as they are planned. The concerts will also be listed on the Bulletin Board near the GM Information Office.

The second concert will be Wednesday, November 19th, and will feature the last three string quartets by Bela Bartok. Announced and the Berlin Philharmonic, conducted by Rudolph Kempe.

to demand a new trial on the basis of new evidence and to call such trial upon demand if he feels that the defendant's request is valid."

Four additional reasons for appealing cases were also approved. These were: "new evidence;" "insufficient evidence to conviet;" "penalty commensurate with the offense;" and "prejudice of a court member."

Another amendment stated that "if enough members are excused that less than a quorum remains the case shall be referred to the IDC court per se, where it shall be presented by the IDC representative."

Other amendments consisted of changes in wording and phrasing.

The gambling problem was discussed at length by various members. Several revealing facts were brought to light, but nothing was proposed. However, Rudy Edwards, IDC president, said the IDC is "going to crack down" on gambling in dormitories.

A proposed bill to raise the dormitory social fee from $.75 to $1 was discussed. The bill has already been passed by the IDC, but is awaiting approval from South Building.

Edwards emphasized that this increase would not bring about an increase in room rent, and the addition to the dorm social fee would come out of this $100.

HOLMAN ARTICLE

C. Hugh Holman, professor of English and chairman of the UNC Dept. of English has published an article entitled "The Reconcilation of Ishmael: Moby-Dick and the Book of Job" in the Autum 1958 issue of The South Atlantic Quarterly.

In his article, Professor Holman demonstrates "the debt that Melville owed to the Book of Job for the central fact and symbol of his novel, the great white Whale Moby Dick." To do this, Professor Holman shows parallelisms between the thematic organizations of the Book of Job and Moby Dick, thus transcending the mere signalling of Biblical echoes in the American work to make a statement of central importance for an understanding of Melvill's novel.

BOND PUBLISHES

Richmond P. Bond, UNC Kenan Professor of English, has published a note on "Early Lending Libraries" in September, 1958 issue of "Library."

Professor Bond signals the existence of two earlier lending libaries on a commercial basis in London of the first decade of the eighteenth century: Tromas Bickerton's at the "Rose and Crown" and William Pennock's at the "Bible" in Pannier-Alley, Paternoster Row. Evidence for the existance of these libraries was gleaned by Professor Bond from advertisements in the "British Apollo," a semi-weekly journal of the period.

Tomorrow's game with Virginia is shaping up bigger and bigger as the time draws near for the kick-off. The consensus of opinion seems to be that Carolina will win, but will have a rough time. Many have accused them of looking ahead to Notre Dame and Duke while forgetting about the Cavaliers.

Had it not been for last year's shocking reversal at the hands of Virginia, we might go along with this. But we hardly believe the Tar Heels will be overconfident tomorrow. Even though Virginia has won but one game, that was against Duke. They have not played a really bad game yet, and they have shown hustle and spirit commendable to any team.

The Cavaliers gave Clemson a real battle in the season opener before finally bowing by 5 points. Even against mighty Army they played a good first half until the steady stream of fresh reserves finally just wore them down.

Will Reece Whitley play? He hasn't in two weeks, and Virginia has lost. Yet young John Dempsey has taken his place with the poise of an old pro, giving Virginia two good quarterbacks if Whitley returns. Carolina is proceeding on the hypothesis that Whitley will play .

It is certain that Sonny Randle will play, and his name means bad news. Randle is only the top pass catcher in the entire country at this time, and has already broken several University records after only seven games. He is fast and sure, probably one of the best halfbacks in the conference when it comes to hauling in passes.

Add to this growing concern the fact that Virginia wants this one, and wants it bad. Last year they whipped the Tar Heels after a letdown, and this year they hope to catch the Tatummen looking ahead. As Coach Dick Voris said, "It would really be a feather in our cap to beat Carolina."

GOOD REASONS FOR HEELS

Carolina, however, can counter quickly with some very good reasons as to why they should win tomorrow. There is Jack Cummings to put against Whitley or Dempsey, or anyone else for that matter. There is the top defensive team in the league, some of the best halfbacks around, the 6th best kicker in the US in Don Coker, and a Bull by the name of Klochak.

Both teams will probably throw a lot tomorrow. Virginia will probably have to, as their running attack hasn't shown much and the Tar Heel forward wall is rather stingy with yardage. Carolina may stick to the ground more, but Cummings can throw, and will if the situation merits it.

Virginia thus far has the worst defensive team in the conference. Although the Heels haven't actually been setting the world on fire offensively, they have won their last three games handily. The discovery of a steady ground-gaining fullback in Klochak could provide a real asset.

All things considered, it shapes up into an interesting contest and may be somewhat closer than most fans anticipate.

PREDICTIONS

Carolina 27, Virginia 6. Carolina to win on a much superior defense. Even Whitley can't pull this one out, as the Tar Heels win their fifth straight and Virginia loses again.

LSU 21, Duke 0. The number one team in the nation just has too much for the so-so Devils. LSU is eyeing the national championship but all Duke will be eyeing is a quick return to Durham after this one.

TECH OVER CLEMSON

Georgia Tech 13, Clemson 7. This may be just wishful thinking, for another Clemson loss would increase Carolina's bowl chances greatly. Tech, however, does appear to have the superior team who has improved with each game.

South Carolina 34, Furman 0. Need we say more? Furman is definitely outclassed by the likes of Dixon and Hawkins. SC to win, place, and show.

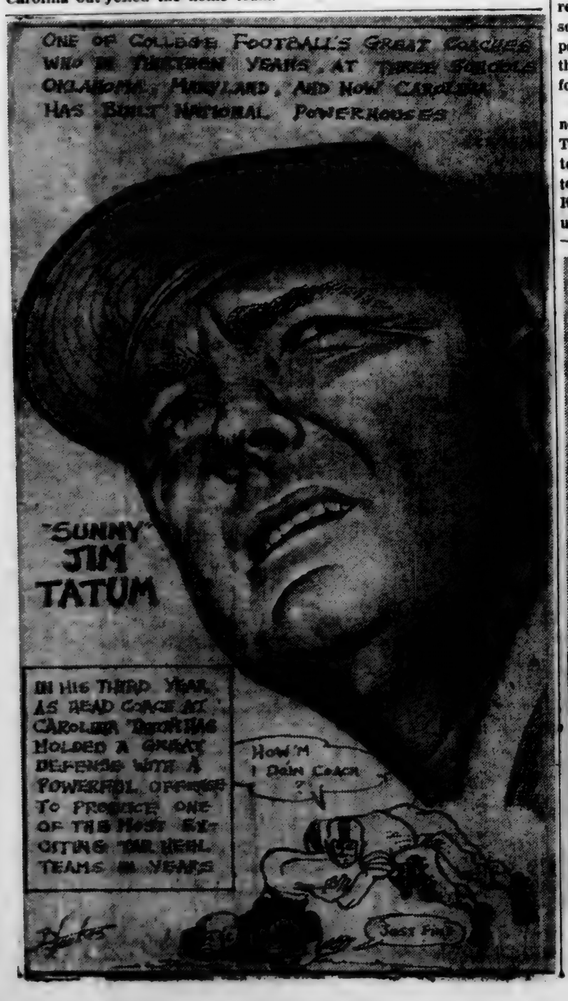
TERPS TO LOSE

Navy 26, Maryland 14. More bad news for Tommy Mont as his Terps catch the potent Middies on the rebound after Notre Dame beat them. Too much for the punchless Terrapins to handle.

State 41, Mississippi Southern 13. State easily in a romp. Why is this team on the schedule?

TAR HEELS HAVE SUPPORT

Carolina should have all the support it needs tomorrow in the way of fans. Many students from the University are making the trip up to Charlottesville. The game is also being telecast on regional TV. Coach Jim Tatum has expressed a desire that the student body turn out as it did the last time the Tar Heels visited Virginia. In that one, Carolina out-yelled the home team.



Booters Seek Sixth Win Against State Here Today

Two traditional soccer rivals, Carolina and N.C. State, will clash here today at 3 p.m. in an important conference contest on Fetzer Field.

With one conference victory over Virginia under their belts, the Tar Heels will be out to revenge last year's 2-1 defeat at the hands of the Wolfpak in Raleigh.

The game will be a tough one, Coach Marvin Allen has predicted. "They've played good soccer this year," Coach Allen said the Wolfpac. "State is a well-balanced team and I think the game will be a good, close contest."

As an example of State's prowess, Coach Allen stated that the Wolfpak squad has beaten Duke by a 2-1 score, and Virginia by 4-3.

In their conference contest with Virginia the Tar Heels edged the Cavaliers by a s 3-2 core in a tight game.

Pleased with the squad's hustle aginst Roanoke, whom the Tar Heels defeated 3-1, Coach Allen said he would go with practically the same starting lineup, including the two shifts he had made.

On defense, Allen said Hugh Goodman, regularly a fullback will again play at right halfback. Goodman, a tireless defenseman, was a big factor in the team finally breaking through in the second half aginst Roanoke.

Taking Goodman's place has been Bob Quakenbusch, only a sophomore, who played a fine game Tuesday from left fullback post. Dave Corkey will play at center fullback, with another sophomore, Tom Evans, playing at right fullback.

NOTRE DAME TRIP

The plane will leave Chapel Hill Saturday morning and arrive at South Bend about 11 o'clock. There are still some seats available and interested persons contact Sherwood Smith at 8-9014 or 9-6444 or John Archer at 9-6298. The group also has tickets to the game available.

Staffer Explains Football To Coeds

By LEFTY ROWLETTE

Sports are to play, watch read about, write about and or to impress your date with your knowlege of. For coeds, the latter is the most important.

The following explanations are ment for those coeds who tired of having the game explained by their very patient escorts and wish to appear well informed at the next ame.

The first thing done in a football game is the tossing of the cois. There is nothing shocking about this and you shouldn't write home that the athletic department is mixed up in a gambling ring. They are simply using this method of deciding who gets to defend which goal and who kicks off. (The kickoff will be explained later.)

The outcome of all this doesn't really make too much difference, so, during these proceedings, it is permissible to wonder how much the girl sitting in front of you paid for that dress.

However, the next item of business deserves your full attention. This is the kicoff. It isn't important to understand it, but it is important to know what to do when it happens. It is absolutely necessary to stand up for it, no matter how much those heels are hurting your feet. When the ball is kicked, you must whistle between your teeth (if you can't do this, just remain silent) and, when the ball hits the ground, you must say, "Boom."

Downs and first downs should also be explained. A down is simply an attempt to move the ball 10 yards through the solid mass of humanity toward the goal. The team with the ball gets four of these tries. If they do it in four tries, they have made a first down and get four more tries (its something like reaching the first plateau—except the coaches get the Cadiliacs.) However, if they don't make it, the other team gets the ball.

Downs and first downs are not to be confused with touchdowns. (As you can see, football is a game of ups and downs—mostly downs.) When a team member crosses the goal with the ball; he has made a touchdown. If he is on the team you are supporting, you must again stand up, scream, yell, stamp and refuse another drink from the character sitting behind you.

After the touchdown, the team who didn't make the touchdown kicks off again and the whole thing repeats itself in more or less the same way. Silly game, isn't it

FIRST IN NATION—Sonny Randle, the University of Virginia's fine halfback, leads the nation in pass receiving with 34. Randle is one of the many problems Carolina will be up against tomorrow.

Fourth Annual Rod & Gun Meet Big Success, Sigma Nu Winner

The 4th Annual Rod and Gun Field Meet, co-sponsored by the Intramural Department and the Outing Club, drew nearly 100 participants yesterday to Durham Wildlife Club for a session of outdoor sports.

Sigma Nu turned out to be the big winner of the day as they racked up 40 team points to walk off with the team trophy; Delta Sigma Pi was second with 28.

John Crawford sucessfully defended his target rifle championship by scoring 170 points. Tom Mehl of Everett and Farrar Parker of SAE were tied for second place with 156 apiece.

In trap shooting it was the same story, as Gray Cowan won the event for the second year in a row. Cowan knocked down 22 of 25. Close on his heels in second place was Bick Nichols of Phi Delt with 21. Bill Haworth emerged victorious from a four-way tie for third place which had to be shot off. He beat out Hains Hill, John Hazard, and Andy Mayfield.

Harry West of Parker came home with the Archery prize with 341 markers. Second was Rust Sharp of St. Anthony with 171, and Jack Burkett was third.

Tommy Wellons of SAE, with a score of 70, grabbed of the bait casting trophy over Richard Rocco and Bruce Arnold.

The team plaque went to the Sigma Nu's for their winning efforts as a team. Individual trophies were awarded to the first place winners in each event.

Charlie Harville of WFMY-TV in Greensboro was present taking movies of the meet which he will show on his program the Outdoorsman on Nov. 27 at 7 o'clock.

Several members of the Durham Wildlife Club were present to conduct the shooting event.

Sergeant Voss of the Naval ROTC conducted the target rifles event, with the participats using ROTC rifles. This was the most popular event, with 24 taking part.

Robert Nelms of Lewis won the Bass Division of Fishing by hauling in two and Jim McMillan caught a Bream to win that section.

Tentative plans are already underway for a Big 4 Rod and Gun Field Meet sometime next spring.

Heavy-Stepping Heels At UVa.'s Door Today

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special To The Daily Tar Heel

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA. — Carolina's red-hot Tar Heels this afternoon take on the host Virginia Cavaliers here at 2 o'clock in an important Atlantic Coast Conference headliner.

The Tar Heels enter the fray sporting a fine 5-2 record and clutching a tremendous 5-game winning streak in their hands.

The Cavaliers have won but one game this year, but that was against the powerful Duke Blue Devils. Virginia has a 1-6 record, but they have played good ball in every game.

Carolina, after losing its first two games to N. C. State and Clemson, has rolled successively over Southern Cal, South Carolina, Maryland, Wake Forest, and Tennessee.

Besides its win over Duke, Virginia has lost to Clemson, State, Virginia Tech, Army, Vanderbilt, and VMI.

The Cavaliers claim to fame, ace quarterback Reece Whitley, is still on the doubtful list for today's contest. Whitley may play but at this moment his condition is unknown.

Sonny Randle, a fine left halfback and the leading pass receiver in the nation, is the Cavalier star whom the Tar Heels will have to watch today. Randle leads the nation with 34 receptions.

Virginia is expected to throw the ball a lot today, and Carolina has been busy preparing for the Cavalier air attack all week.

Carolina's famed defensive unit comes into the game today as conference leaders by a large margin. Virginia ranks next to last in total defense.

The Cavaliers hope to puncture the Tar Heel pass defense today by filling the air over Charlottesville with footballs. Carolina has been a little lax in pass defense thus far, though no one has yet thrown a touchdown pass against them.

Virginia will have the unenviable problem of trying to stop a rugged Tar Heel offensive unit that has picked up in punch with each successive week. Speedy Moe DeCantis and Wade Smith at halfs, powerful Don Klochak at fullback, and the brilliant Jack Cummings at quarterback spell trouble for Virginia.

Most of the experts have gone along with the Tar Heels and predicted a win for Jim Tatum's boys today. Some have thought, however, that Carolina may be looking ahead to Notre Dame and Duke and forgetting about the troublesome Cavaliers.

Should the Tar Heels bring home the bacon today, it would mark the 100th college coaching victory for Sunny Jim Tatum.

Last year the Cavaliers surprised the baffled Tar Heels 20-13 in Kenan Stadium, catching Carolina up in the clouds after they had upset Duke the previous week.

Selection Board Formalization Is Called For

Student Body President Don Furtado yesterday called for the formalization of the entire Selections Board procedure.

He urged this "formalization" in two questions:

1) Is there a need to maintain two different selections committees for men and women?

2) Is there a need for the Legislature to establish a set grading system which will be used in the future to designate the capability of each candidate?

Pertaining to the second question, Furtado said this: "In my opinion, the job of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board is to carefully interview all applicants for Honor Council positions and subsequently to make known to the student body the names of all students that they consider competent to serve on the Council."

He further said: "The Selections Board should not attempt to be overly selective nor should they set down any prior number that should be approved."

Janie Walters of the Women's Bi-Partisan Selections Board issued a statement yesterday, saying that "no set number (of candidates) was decided upon before the interviews. The number was determined by the fact that there was a natural break in the scores."

What the "natural break" was, Nancy Adams, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, could not recall.

Some controversy had been aroused because out of 45 women applying for the Bi-Partisan Selections Board's endorsement for Honor Council, only nine received that endorsement.

Duke Weekend IDC's Target For Visiting

By NEIL MURPHY

Jim Scott, key man in the IDC's coed visiting agreement, said yesterday that "coeds will probably be able to visit social rooms in men's dormitories the weekend of the Duke game."

Scott indicated that construction necessary in men's dorms will start within a week. Dormitories will have partitions and doors installed and improvements will be made in the social rooms themselves.

USE URGED

Students have been urged by the IDC to take full advantage of the open social rooms on weekends. Rooms will be open Friday night, Saturday afternoons except football afternoons, Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Scott said, "Dorms will have to get their social rooms in good shape. Homely, livable, chairs in good condition, pictures hung, trophy cases perhaps." Several dormitories have started painting their social rooms.

Machinery will grind into crushing the final obstruction to the agreement when the construction crews go into the dorms, Scott said. "The big thing in our way now is the partitioning."

VOTE OVERWHELMING

Scott pointed out that 874 students have voted for and only 44 against the agreement in reports from all men's dormitories except Graham and Avery.

Rules require that each man's dormitory vote at the end of the trial period if they want to continue the visiting policy.

A revision of the rules requires a dormitory officer to be present in the dormitory and available at all times.

Women will be allowed in social rooms and entry halls only during Friday 7 to 12 p.m., Saturday 2 to 12 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 11 p.m. The rooms will be closed till 4:30 on football Saturdays.

BOARD APPROVES

A visiting board; consisting of the chairman or president of the Interdormitory Council, the Woman's Residence Council, Carolina Woman's Council, Pan-Hellenic Council, president of the student body, and two faculty members and their wives; must approve each dormitory before it is opened to coeds.

Gray Poole IFC Court Chairman

Gary Poole was elected chairman of the Inter-Fraternity Council Court Wednesday night. Other officers elected include Garret Fogler IFC Court representative to the Student Council, and Bob Bender, clerk.

The court discussed trial procedure and means of making the court more effective in its function of preventing violations.

New members elected to the court at the last IFC meeting include Joe Alexander, Garret Folger and Marshall Happer.

Student Legislature Praised By President Don Furtado For Stand Against Prejudice

Amended Form Of Greer Bill Hits Clauses

The Student Legislature Thursday night passed an amended version of Gary Greer's (SP) bill dealing with discriminatory clauses.

Greer's original bill would have deleted a legislature amendment to the NSA basic policy declaration; the amended version of his bill changes the wording of the previous amendment.

By deletion to the amendment to the NSA declaration the legislature would have denied campus recognition to any organization having a discriminatory clause in its national charter.

Before passage of Greer's bill, the amendment to this policy read: "However, while the student legislature would possibly like the removal of discriminatory clauses, we do not recommend the denial of recognition to any organization whose national charter includes such restriction clauses as to membership."

The bill passed Thursday changes the amendment's opening phrase to read, "However, while the student legislature would like the removal . . ."

The measure was passed by a 21-16 vote.

A bill changing the selection of jurors for the honor council was tabled for the second consecutive time as the legislators postponed debate so they might look over amendments to the bill proposed by Norman Smith (Ind.) and John Brooks (SP).

These amendments by Brooks and Smith would put teeth in the random juror selection system while improving the position of the defendent in an honor council trial.

Jurors called under the random selection system proposed in the original bill, who failed to appear would lose their right to vote in student government elections and their right to hold student government offices, unless they were excused by the attorney general.

Also under the proposed amendments the defendent's counsel could participate actively in the defense of the accused. Both the defendent and the investigator could question and dismiss any juror whom he found unacceptable.

Jurors could only serve for one session each academic year.

John Brooks' (SP) long held over bill concerning a proposed definite student government policy concerning publication of the Yackety Yack was passed by the legislature after deletion of two of its articles.

The deleted articles would have had student government made refunds to organizations already included in the Yack that paid above $50 per page.

In passing the bill dealing with discriminatory clauses, the assembly heard Davis Young (SP) speak in favor of its passage.

Young said the bill raised two questions in his mind: Would the bill have a tendency to snowball and therefore cause the administration to act and was the bill right or

Dr. Peterson Is New Dean Of Grad School

RALEIGH, (AP) — Dr. Walter J. Peterson, head of the Chemistry Dept. at North Carolina State College, has been named dean of the Graduate School of the University of North Carolina in Raleigh.

His appointment to take over the post next Jan. 1 has been approved by the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina and University President William C. Friday.

In the job, Dr. Peterson will succeed Dr. Donald B. Anderson who is now provost for the Consolidated University.

Dr. Peterson is on leave of absence from State College to serve as director of programs in science education for the National Science Foundation in Washington.

Other appointments announced by the college included:

Kenneth Allan Jordan, assistant professor of agricultural engineering in the School of Agriculture.

Alfred Joaquin Stamm, research associate professor of Wood Technology in the School of Forestry.

Dr. Bostian Will Resign To Be Teacher

FROM A. P. WIRE REPORTS

RALEIGH — Dr. Carey H. Bostian, chancellor of N. C. State College said his resignation, effective July 1, was entirely voluntary.

A committee composed of members of the Board of Trustees, the faculty and of the State alumni will be named by Friday to recommend a successor to Dr. Bostian.

Dr. Bostian expressed surprise at the recent action of the State Alumni Association. The association has been seeking legislation which would give State as many alumni representatives on the Consolidated University Board of Trustees as UNC.

Dr. Bostian stated to the executive committee, "I would like to say that during the time I have worked with you, I have had nothing but the best support from all of you and all the members of the board and I have had just as strong support from the alumni at Chapel Hill and others as from the alumni at State College.

"I hope that all of you will overlook any implication that those of us in the State Colltge Administration feel there has been any discrimination from members, but they have supported State College to the limit."

Consolidated University President William Friday said he deeply regretted the loss of Dr. Bostian. "We are most grateful to Dr. Bostian for all of his actions during these five years of growth and development at State College," he added.

Dr. Bostian, 51, became chancelllor on Sept. 1, 1953. Formerly he was director of instruction of agriculture and a professor of genetics at State.

Student Leader Cites Courage Of Legislation

Student Body President Don Furtado commended the Student Legislature for its action concerning a bill related to discriminatory clauses, yesterday.

He praised the legislators for "stating their opposition to discriminatory clauses and in expressing their opposition to admitting any organization into the University in the future which have clauses discriminating on the basis of race, creed or color.

"I am quite sure that the Legislature will come under quite a bit of criticism for its action, but however, I feel it should be congratulated for its courage and willingness to state its opposition to discrimination within the student community."

Pointing out that UNC has always been a leader in the South academically and otherwise, he went on to say, "the admission of Negro students to the University has come painlessly and without reaction on the part of the students.

"Regardless of their personal views on the issue of segregation, the students, the faculty and the administration of the University have recognized their obligation to the laws of the nation and have, therefore, realistically met their obligations," he continued.

"I believe that this stand on the part of the official policy making body of the students is indicative of its maturity and responsibility." Furtado concluded.

The vote on the bill was 21-16. The bill amends a resolution concerning the adoption of the National Student Association's declaration on student responsibility and rights.

The NSA declaration was presented to the Legislature last spring.

Drink Problem Will Be Topic Of Cabinet

The Student Body President's cabinet will meet Wednesday, Don Furtado announced yesterday.

He said the cabinet will discuss the problem of excessive drinking at athletic contests, football games in particular.

The students should be aware that the Campus Code applies to athletic contests also, he commented.

The student responsibility project of the National Student Assn. Committee will also be discussed. Ed Levy, NSA co-ordinator, and Frank Elkins have been invited to the cabinet meeting.

Some people are willing to lend a hand if they think they have a chance of borrowing two later.

Proper Leadership Lack Could Hurt South Again

A North Carolina historian warned Thursday that lack of proper leadership in dealing with the race problem could cost the South another tragic setback such as that which followed the Civil War.

Fletcher Green of Chapel Hill, Kenan professor of history at the University of North Carolina, said southerners must see to it that discrimination against minority groups is ended.

Green made his comments in the November edition of the national magazine "Current History."

PRESERVE FREEDOMS

He said fear of the Negro's new status, which has "aroused the spirit of white supremacy to a frenzy," could result in reckless actions which might plunge the region into another setback like that which followed the Civil War.

To prevent another setback, Green said, "freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and freedom of the individual must be safeguarded and preserved. Every individual must be assured of the opportunity to develop along his own bent and must not be forced to conform to any fixed mold or pattern."

He listed five "misconceptions about the South, which, he said, were deliberately created by an alliance of certain forces in the North and certain forces in the South who had a common axe to grind. These, he added, were the northern abolitionists and southern romanticists.

Green said the misconceptions are:

1. That the southern social order consisted of only three classes of people: the planter, the poor white or poor white trash, and the Negro slave.

2. That the old South engaged only in staple crop agriculture and purchased almost all of its food and manufactured products from the free states.

3. That the South failed to keep pace politically with the North and that it was ruled by a small planter oligarchy.

4. That the South was intellectually and culturally stagnant.

5. That the North and South were drastically different in outlook.

Mangum Ahead In Outstanding Dorm Contest

Mangum Dormitory is leading in the IDC's Outstanding Dorm on Campus contest.

Mangum has 230 points at present, according to an announcement yesterday from the Interdormitory Coupcil Contest Committee.

In second place is Cobb Dorm with 160 points and in third place is Winston with 135 points. Alexander and Lewis are tied for fourth with 125 points. Tied for fifth place are Graham and Ruffin with 110 points each.

The standings are tabulated through the use of a point system which awards a certain number of points for such dorm activites as: meetings, parties, dorm newspapers, interamurals ond participation in campus events.

The present contest has been running since April ond will continue through March, 1959. During March trophies will be awarded by the IDC to the top three dorms on campus. Last year's dorm winners were: Lewis with 210 points, Everett with 175 and Winston with 155.

The IDC Contest Commitee reported yesterday that the dorms this year are showing greater participation in various dorm and campus events. The physical facilities have been improved because of the coed visiting agreement, the committee said.

The committee complimented student government, the University's office of student affairs ond J.S. Bennett, director of operations, for aiding the men's dorm's ies.

A complete list of the Outstanding Dorm contest appears in the IDC office in New East Annex.

The 18 charter members of the UNC Kappa chapter are: Bryte Abernethy, Sarah Adams, Fletcher Bryan, Jan Cobbs, Carolyn Cohen, Alice Dannebaum, Holly Deifell, Judee Doherty; Nancy Evans, Carol Freeman, Joyce Funai, Pat Hamer, Edith Hurt, Libby Johnson, Lynn Merchant, Charlotte Pope, Nancy Tunnell and Cam Whittemore.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Selection Boards

Somebody should soon decide on what the purpose of a selection board is. The role conceives of that the selection board should have was to approve all qualified candidates, and not to judge between the qualified candidates as to who is most qualified.

At the present time in at least one area, Women's Honor Council, candidates were so limited. It is seriously doubtful that the Honor Council can tell the public that out of 45 people who wanted to run, only nine were capable. The Carolina Womens Council Recommended 21 alone that they thought ought to run.

Moreover, the secrecy over the questions that the council asks is another trouble spot. The fact that the Honor Council can make a selection on one narrow interpretation of what it is to be a lady, seems to indicate a need to have an objective set of questions that can be graded as to the knowledge of a person of student goverment, the Honor system, and the campus code, or that the hearings be open to the public so that selection cannot be dependent on viewpoint. The selection was not necessarily this year made on viewpoint, but in any selection board the opportunity is there.

Finally, there is no need for two selection boards since a candidates qualifications and knowledge is not a matter that can be divided by sex.

The student legislature ought to look into the problem throughly in the next session.

Legislature

The Student Legislature displayed more courage last night than it has shown in at least a semester.

In passing a policy statement against discriminatory clauses, the Legislature has put itself firmly on record against discrimination by race, creed, or national origions.

Great credit should go to Gary Geer the writer of the bill, to Davis Young, as a fraternity man and a person who has compromised on many issues, showed a good deal of courage in speaking on this one, to Mike Fleisher and J.R. Brown, the two University Party members who broke from the party line to vote for this bill, and to Ed Le y who also spoke for the legislation.

Jury Bill

Now is the time for someone to blast some illusions about the worth of goverment by interest.

The present structure of the jury system is erroneous. Under the present legislation all those interested in serving on a jury may, after they sucessfully pass a test and have been approved through an interview.

This is a terrible corruption of the democratic system. Under a remocracy all people within that democracy are the Government, and all people are responsible to serve in that Government. Most people view serving on a jury in civilian life as an unpleasant chore, which must be done as their responsibility to the their responsibility to the democratic community. A person who is interested in serving is looked upon with suspicion, as being prejuriced toward one party or the other.

The idea holds no less true on this campus where students have attempted to set up a democracy perhaps on a simular scale but a democracy nevertheless. It has often been said in this column that student goverment at the University is goverment of 200, and by 200—namely those who are interester. But if student goverment, wants in any sense of the word to be government, then its boundaries are the student in this campus, and denying any student the responsibility and privelege of serving in government simply because he has not showed the interest to be interviewed and has not come to Graham Memorial.

Not only should all students be responsible to serve on the jury system, but it also is an excellent opportunity for a student government to be known by a great many more people. The Brooks Smith additions to the bill providing for a practical means toward the accumplishment of bringing all students under the jury system, and providing the law books with an aknowledgement of their responsibility to the student government of which they are a part.

Government by interest has to cease on the UNC campus. It must be replaced by a democratic method of government. The opportunity has been presented, the Student Legislature ought to take advantage of it.

An Address

Marion A. Wright

It is of interest to note the reasons given for suspension of constitutional rights. Aesop observed that "Any excuse will serve a tyrant." But tyrants have always been careful to couch their usurpations in attractive terms. After all, the people have some attachment for their liberties. They have been taught to revere their constitutions. If they are to surrender any part of rights guaranteed by constitutions, the reasons must appear plausible; the penalties must seem to fall only upon hateful and dangerous minorities.

So the unfailing recourse of the tyrant is the plea of necessity Milton phrased it "And with necessity, the tyrant's plea excused his devilish deeds." The same thought was advanced by William Pitt: "Necessity is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves." Necessity, which knows no law, is, therefore, the logical reason for destroying the law.

In 1794 George III pushed through parliament an act suspending in certain cases the writ of habeas corpus. The reasons assigned were the "formation of a traitorous and detestable conspiracy for subverting the existing laws and constitution" and "securing the peace and laws and liberties fo this kingdom." Because of the grave perils of the moment it was necessary to discard normal procedures.

The act which gave Hitler dictatorial power had as its ostensible purpose, "the reduction of the misery of the Nation and Reich", which could not be overcome under existing constitutional provisions.

The average Englishman was led to believe that a handful of conspirators menaced the state; they had made the suspension necessary. Hitler beguiled the Germans with tales of Jewish perfidy; the Jews made the suspension necessary.

Well, other occasions, other bogeymen, other minority groups.

There is a second badge of tyranny which is in fact, but another facet of the one we have just considered. It is the hostility which tyranny feels for established and respected courts and judicial process. (We must keep in mind that tyranny may mark the conduct of an individual, a group or government itself.)

What stands between the tyrant and the citizen, as we have noted, is Law, usually the Constitution. The instrument through which Law or Constitution speaks is the Court. The Law, conceived of as a real existence, dwelling apart and alone, speaks through the voice of the Court. The Law impinges upon mankind, not more because it exists than because the Court has given it voice. The will of the dictator is thwarted, if at all, because of what the Court has declared the Law to be. In its final analysis, the inevitable calsh is not between two abstractions, Dictatorship and Law, but between Dictatorship personified in an individual or group and Law personified in the Court. Such was the conflict in Washington on Thursday.

So, the character, composition and powers of courts are matters of profound and unholy concern to dictators. An independent judiciary, able, learned and incorruptible, is anathema to the dictator. To him the Court alone may say "Thus far and no further shall you go." In his hot quest of power, in his trampling upon human rights, the sole agency to challenge the dictator's will is these interpreters of the Law. So upon them war is declared.

The tactics of this warfare have been varied and nefarious. In earlier times there was direct action, such as chopping off the head of the judge or sending him into exile, as was done with Aristides, the Just. There have been, among other devices, impeachment, transfer of jurisdiction from civilian to military tribunals, ilmitation of authority, setting up of "people's courts," and change in method of appointment of judges. Whatever the method, the inspiration has been the judge's assertion of individual rights against autocratic will. The object has been to secure compliant tribunals.

Perhaps the most dastardly of all tactics is the sapping and undermining of public confidence in the court. This is a form of judicial character assassination which hardly attains to the dignity of slander. To be effective, properly to discharge his function, the judge must enjoy public confidence and respect. Whatever tends to deprive him of either tends to render him impotent and to make his labors futile. To the extent that the righteous judge is lowered from the pedestal upon which mankind has placed him he becomes valueless to society. Since, more than any other, he personifies the law, the creation of disrespect for him and for the judicial office creates disrespect for law.

The public, taught such disrespect by its leaders, is ripe for rebellion against law. Hence, the demagogue, aggrieved by a judicial decision asserting the rights of a minority, for example, first, attacks the court which rendered the decision, inflames the people against the court, and then leads them in resistance to the decision. Thus, personal abuse is the prelude to anarchy. Thus, rights guaranteed by a constitution are nullified.

Such, then, historically, are the methods of tyrants or demagogues. (The terms may be used interchangeably.) The formula is simple: By decree or legislative act strike down constitutional guaranties; and undermine confidence in courts to the point that their decrees have no public acceptance. Either alone would probably be effective. Taken together they inevitably insure the temporary success of tyranny, whether it be the tyranny of an individual, a clique or a majority. Under such a regime the rights of a minority are doomed.

Uses of those methods are the badges of tyranny or dictatorship. We may see that clearly by the backward view. We see it much more clearly than those who lived through the usurpation of power. When Hitler, for example, rushed his decrees through the Reichstag, millions of patriotic Germans gave assent without realizing for a moment that they were surrendering their liberties to his lust for power. Greater vision is required to discern the pattern of dictatorship in events to which one is party. In the capacity to discern, we are more likely to be affected with presbytopia than with myopia.

1984 Is Now

Russell Eisenman

Georg Orwell's 1984, and Aldous Huxley's "Brave New World" tell of a society in which the people work for the betterment of the society to the extent of putting the state ahead of the individual. This is similar to the American society.

Speaking of Americans, a foreign student said, "You get a good education in your major." The point is we don't receive a broad education. This foreign student had received courses in both philosophy and psychology in high school; in the United States many people never take these courses in college.

After Joseph Rauh, of tre American for Democratic Action, spoke here, Ed Rowland wrote in The Daily Tar Heel that it was deplorable that more students didn't go hear him speak. I agree. It's also deplorable that the reason some students didn't go is they didn't have time. I had to miss supper to be able to hear Rauh speak, because school work left little free time that night. It would be one thing if this school work was giving me a better understanding of contemporary problems. However, only one course, hygiene, is connected to present problems, and this course is so basic that it has given me virtually no profound knowledge. I have found that not only has UNC not contributed to my understanding of contemporary affairs, but it has kept me from having time to be able adequately to get this knowledge on my own.

I feel that the present time is similar to Orwell's 1984. People do not have a good understanding of society. Most people learn how to perform their job, but do not learn how to understand society. Unfortunately, the University of North Carolina contributes to this.

"How About This—Will You Agree To Admit Inspectors If They Don't Bring In Any Books?"

Anthony Wolff

Coach Tatum ought to have his throwing hand soundly paddled (an old academic custom which has fallen into disrepute). The goodly gentleman, whose salary might make the superficial viewer think that he is of more importance to the university than its lowliest talented graduate instructor, has recently encouraged the student body at large to cut Saturday classes and run up to Charlottesville to cheer his charges on to victory.

Unfortunately, many students will probably heed his message, not only for the usual reason that they would rather do almost anything but go to classes, but also because one of the highest paid employees of the state of North Carolina has encouraged them to neglect their education.

Many of the students who will go are those who neglect their studies anyway, so their loss will be slight; and it is even possible that in their absence and because of it some classes may come alive on Saturday.

The sad fact is not, then, that many students will miss two or three classes, but that a principle of sorts has been established which, in the absence of any rebuttal, casts a peculiar light on the university. The principle, is in its simplest form, that football comes before classes.

Who is going to refute this principle? Evidently not the administration, for its policy seems to be one of non-interference with the athletic system, regardless of how much it undermines the educational program.

The student body is also unlikely to criticise Mr. Tatum: his suggestion fits too comfortably into the sentiments of the majority.

The faculty is the only group strong enough to thwart Mr. Tatum's proposed desertion of the academic ranks in favor of vicarious athletics, and yet the faculty has made no effort in this direction. It would be both just and constructive for every teacher to give some sort of quiz—announced or unannounced—on Saturday morning, just to separate the wheat from the chaff.

If it does not do something to counter Mr. Tatum's assertion of the primacy of professional athletics on this campus, the faculty is in effect endorsing the point of view which holds that it is of real importance that the football team win a game, or that they play the game at all. The faculty is admitting that it is fitting and proper that their classes be considered of secondary interest on this campus, and that what goes on in their classes is in fact unequal in importance to spectator sports.

The universal quiz is one of the best tools the faculty has to go about asserting the importance of classes over football. In its most effective form, the quiz consists of one question: "Sign your name in perfect English." Such a quiz fits the established custom, for it is objective and brief, putting no strain on either student or teacher.

The quiz might be weighted so that it will count two or three points on the final grade. For obvious reasons, it need not be curved—the grades will be discontinuous, and therefore impervious to democratic pampering.

It is doubtful that the faculty as a whole is sufficiently committed to the ideal of education to try such a procedure, and so hundreds of students will cut Saturday classes with impunity. The fact remains that it is of no legitimate consequence whether or not the team wins — or even plays—on Saturday, and those who join the Cavalcade are wasting their time in the cause of a superficial and misplaced "school spirit."

Harper's Bizarre

We were sitting with a friend, talking over a cup of coffee. He spoke:

"You know, this is what really matters. I mean. this counts. We're sitting here now talking . . . getting along with each other. What we're talking about doesn't really matter, it's just that we're here. Two of us.

"It's not you especially. Just me and somebody else—that guy over there, or his girl; our janitor, my English professor—anyone will do, but no more than one.

"Three's a crowd? Three's too many, I know that. I . . . I don't know whether you see it or not. What I'm trying to say is, that we've gotten so far ahead in everything else—science, industry . . . I started to say war—we've done great things with things, but we've neglected people. We've neglected ourselves, I guess.

"Why is it that we can send a man to the moon, but John Jones can't get along with his next-door neighbor? Or even his wife, all the time?

"I don't think this is original. In fact, I've picked it up from lots of people. I read about it once or twice, I guess. And my mother used to talk about it. She was right, too.

"I don't hate Russians. And I don't think I'd even be afraid of them if I could sit down with some of them and talk.

"You see, I'm sitting here now, talking with you, and you're talking with me, and we don't hate or fear each other. But that's what I mean.

"See, it's not like I have to get along with everybody right now. Just you. In an hour it'll be my roommate. And tomorrow the janitor, or my girl, or anybody. But it's us "two" that count, because we're trying to understand one another, and if we try hard enough, than wel" forget not to.

EDITOR:

In the past, the Women's Honor Council as a group has refrained from commenting publicly upon personal opinions, publicly or privately expressed. However, we believe that the editorial appearing in the November 4 issue of the Daily Tar Heel and the attitude expressed therein must be answered.

In reference to the comments made concerning the Bi-Partisan Board we would like to first explain the structure. The Board is composed of any three members of Women's Honor Council, one University Party representative chosen by the chairman of the University Party, one Student Party representative chosen by the chairman of the Student Party and the Chairman of Women's Honor Council who presides but does not have a vote. None of the three voting members of Honor Council were members of the same sorority. In all voting a rating scale was used and was done by secret ballot.

The purpose of this board is to endorse as candidates those girls deemed most capable on the basis of one 15 minute interview. The interview consists of questions directed to the girls which emphasize their working knowledge of and respect for the Honor System. The Board had no definite number of candidates in mind to be endorsed. We would like to point out that there is no restrictive action in this endorsement. In the past years there have been many unendorsed candidates who have run and been responsible members of Honor Council. There is never any form of sorority identification in any function of Women's Honor Council.

It is surprising that if the Daily Tar Heel really wanted the truth concerning the Board's selections instead of merely casting implications and creating sensationalism, why some member of the Bi-Partisan Board was not contacted. Having spent eleven hours holding interviews they are thoroughly familiar with the system, whereas it is a fact that the editor was not.

This was a fair, sincere effort on the part of the Board; contrary to the impression which the strong implications of the Daily Tar Heel would imply.

The council feels that there are other opinions demanding comment. It is known that the editor is strongly in favor of combining the Men and Women's councils. This proposal is radically opposed by both the Men and Women's Councils. After working with the system and knowing it, we recognize it to be a radical, idealist, unworkable and totally incompetent idea. To this end, the Daily Tar Heel editorial policy has constantly, through unfounded public criticism and private uncooperativeness worked against the Honor Councils.

The editor has stated that his policy is to be to attack all campus organizations in the hope of improving them and creating intelligent discussion and thought. This, if sincere, is to be admired. However, we are appalled that this policy includes presenting half truths and unfounded insinuations.

The Women's Honor Council welcomes intelligent criticism by any member of the student body or faculty. We do not intend, however, to bow to the Daily Tar Heel or to political factions on this campus until such time as it may be proved that they are sincere, factual and not motivated by personal biasness in their advocations.

As shown by the endorsement, we feel the girls endorsed to be the most capable candidates. We urge each student to go to the polls with an open mind, however, using their own judgment as to the character and ability of the candidates, whether endorsed or not.

Editor:

For the past several years I have been quite interested in the writings and activities of the so-called "Beat Generation." I am by no means beat myself and do not consider myself an expert on the subject. But after reading Mr. Wolff's review of Jack Kerouac's latest book I am driven by curiosity to write this letter.

Mr. Wolff, whom I have found to be an expert on all matters pertaining to literature, has made several statements which I question. The first statement in mind pertains to the sloppy way Kerouac uses the English Language. Mr. Wolff states that one can not use this sloppy style without prupose, but I ask, doesn't Kerouac have a purpose—that of selling books? But then again, who knows? Kerouac might be trying to create a new style in American Literature. Secondly, Mr. Wolff remarks that Kerouac is naive about prose and poetry. I would tend to agree with this remark if I had only read one of Kerouac's books and knew nothing about the man's background. To assure brevity I shall omit several other controversial statements which come to mind.

I feel that Mr. Wolff's review of this book is very poorly done. In fact, I wonder if Mr. Wolff read any further than the inside cover of the review copy of the "Dharma Bums." His choice of quotations and his attempts at making caustic remarks about them are very misleading and insignificant. By a similar method of review Mr. Wolff could make any book seem ridiculous, especially one written in the style Kerouac uses.

Two Violations Tried Under New Jury System

Two cases have been tried by Women's Honor Council since September using the new jury trial system.

In addition, four cases involving violations of the Campus Code came before the Women's Council

In the two cases for Honor Code violations, one coed was found guilty and suspended for one semester . She was convicted on a charge of lying. The coed signed in to serve a one-night's campus but later in the evening broke the campus. In sentencing her to suspension for one semester, the Women's Honor Council also recommended that she be eligible for readmission in January, 1959.

(The jury acts only to determine guilt or innocence. The penalty is decided upon by the Honor Council.)

In the second case, a coed was found not guilty of cheating on a quiz.

Three girls were sentenced to two nights' campus by the Women's Council for opening the dormitory door after closing hours but not leaving the building.

The Women's Council also handed down a Council reprimand and one week's campus to a coed who had accumulated six House Council offenses.

In another case, a one night's campus was given to a girl who returned one day late to her dorm because of a mistake on her sign out slip. She was also warned about signing out correctly.

Two coeds received no penalty for returning one hour and 17 minutes late after a weekend off campus. The Council reminded the girls of the importance of returning directly to the dorm in such a case.

At one of the five October meetings, the Honor Council held a mock trial, using the attorney general, defendant and a jury composed of four permanent jurors.

Council appointments included: Louise Crumbley as representatives to the Women's Residence Council and Jane White as head clerk of the Honor Council.

Moon Shot Readied

Air Force Apparently Making Try

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—An Air Force moon rocket appeared to be in preparation for another launching attempt early last night.

Since a lunar probe launching attempt comes an hour later each day it is postponed, the floodlights last night would not necessarily have to come on until a late hour.

Nevertheless if the knock in the rocket that reportedly forced cancellation of an initial launching attempt early yesterday had been corrected, the new attempt early this morning would come as the next to the last chance to fire an Air Force space probe this month.

After Sunday morning, conditions will be less than satisfactory for a lunar probe until the first week in December.

An attempt to launch the 52-ton Thor-Vanguard combination rocket bearing an instrument-packed lunar satellite was called off about 50 minutes before the planned firing time of 1:22 a.m. EST yesterday.

First reports were that recurrent driving rain and a low cloud ceiling had forced the cancellation.

Later it was learned, however, that a knocking noise had developed within the 88-foot-tall launching vehicle and that it could not be identified in the short period of delay permitted.

If a lunar probe launch attempt runs more than 20 minutes past its initial target time, the attempt must be called off.

Beyond 20 minutes the Moon and Earth have changed relative positions so greatly that the carefully calculated original trajectory or flight path would be far off the mark.

Weather remained threatening last night. Safety rules of the missile test center would rule out a launching if the cloud ceiling settled much below 2,000 feet.

The lunar probe, like Pioneer I which was fired Oct. 11 more than 90,000 miles into space, contains television-type equipment to scan the far side of the Moon and other devices to measure scientific phe-

Given a successful launching it would take the rocket 2.6 days to reach the vicinity of the Moon

'Beatniks' Get Criticized By UNC English Instructor

The "beat generation" was given a critical look by Dr. W. Bernard Fleischmann, UNC instructor in English, in a speech Friday night before the UNC English Club.

According to Dr. Fleischmann, the beat generation of San Francisco poets is attacking valid defects in current American literature and criticism.

"The beat generation's attack on the agrarian fugitive tradition of poets and critics who have too strong an influence on controlling American literary criticism is noteworthy," he commented.

He continued with a statement that the beat generation is correct in its attack on the New Yorker magazine as a style setting influence on America.

"This group," he noted "is right in its attack on conventional and academic elements in American literary criticism and poetry. But," he continued, "the beat generation poets do not have the resources either in a particular tradition or in outstanding individual talent to use as a weapon in their attack."

The beat generation poets, he said, do not have enough to offer in the way of truly original or profound thought to oppose, the academic or middle-brow poetry.

The speaker noted three reasons why the group does not have the means to implement their attack:

1. Nothing distinguishes the beat generation poets from numerous other experimental schools of poetry in American since the Imagist movement.

2. The group does not present a unified literary doctrine.

3. The beat generation poets do not have a sufficiently developed philosophy or spiritual basis.

A member of the UNC faculty since 1957, Dr. Fleischmann holds the B.A. degree from St. Johns College and the M.A. and Ph.D. from UNC.

Mrs. Giduz, 71, Funeral Today

The services will be held in the small chapel at the Chapel of the Cross Church with the Rev. David W. Yates officiating, and cremation will follow. The family has requested that any tributes be in the form of donations to the building fund of the Chapel of the Cross Church or to the Chapel Hill Chapter of the AAUN.

Survivors include, besides her husband, two sons, Roland of Chapel Hill, now studying at Harvard University, and Charles of Levittown, Pa.; two brothers, [illegible] Baker of Lake Hill and Ralph Baker of Seattle, Wash.; and four grandchildren.

Pi Phi's Congratulated For Top Pledge Skit

Diana Johnson, president of the Pan-Hellenic Council, has congratulated the Pi Phis on the winning skit presented by their pledge class at the Council's Pledge Picnic held on Oct. 29.

The Council urged each sorority to enter a float in the "Beat Dook" parade on Nov. 21.

Why this number was endorsed was answered by Miss Walters in the "natural break" reference.

The actual procedure by the Board was to question each girl behind closed doors and to keep a "score" on each. At the end of the interviewing, each member of the Board called out his scores and tallies were made. The girls with the highest scores were endorsed to the "natural break."

The questions asked were not revealed. Each potential candidate was put on her honor not to disclose the nature of these questions.

The membership of the Board includes: three members of the Women's Honor Council, one representative from each of the two campus parties, appointed by the chairmen of the parties.

Tar Babies Seek Third Win In Sudan Temple Bowl Game

RALEIGH—The proceeds are for charity, but Bud Carson's Tar Babies will be out for blood when they take the field aginst the North Carolina's State frosh this afternoon at 2o'clock in the annual Sudan Temple Bowl Game at Riddick Stadium.

The Tar Babies, on the upswing following their 20-0 victory over Maryland, take a 2-1 session into the contest. For the Wolflets, today's game will mark the end of the campaign, and they would like nothing better than a win to give them a final 3-2 record.

State Favored Off Record . . .

If comparative scores mean anything, the Wolflets have to be installed as favorites in the game. Against a common opponent Wake Forest, the State frosh show a 26-18 win while the Tar Babies lost to the Deacons 20-12.

A year ago the Wodflets put on a convincing offensive display and left no doubt in anybody's mind who had the better team as they crushed the Carolina frosh 33-19. Although this year's State frosh is not as big as their predecessors, they have the talent to win and are a better squad than their 2-2 record indicates.

Gabriel Guides Wolflets

Leading the State freshmen into their finale will be quarterback Ramon Gobriel, who at 6-3 and 210 is bigger than most pro signal callers. So far this season Gabriel has thrown eight touchrown passes in addition to scoring one himself.

Besides Gabriel, State Coach Johnny Clements will probably start a backfield composed of Glen Hunter, Al Taylor, and Ronnie Kinek. Hunter, who weighs 150 pounds, is not a powerful runner, but he is one of the leading pass receivers on the team. Kinek at 190 converted to the right halfback slot when Robed Whitley dropped out of school.

Freshman Coach Bud Carson

Carson Uses Same Lineup

Carson will use the same lineup aginst the State frosh that he started in the Maryland game. Ray Farris will once again direct the offence from his quarterback spot. Gil Carson and Gent Shuford are the starting half backs with Joe Davis rounding out the bockfield at fullback.

Bill Lopp ond Benton McMillen tre sure to be the starting ends for the Tar Babies. Don Amos tnd Ben Gallagher open at the tackle positions with Bill Taylor tnd Sam Loflin at guard. Gary Truver, the lightest-starting lineman at 185, will be the starting center.

Carolina students will be admitted to the game free of charge upon presentation of their I.D. cards at the gate. Adult tickets are priced at $2.

NBA Adopts New Foul Rule

NEW YORK — (AP) — An experimental rule on penalties for personal fouls by offensive teams has been made permanent in the National Basktball Assn. The object of the rule was to speed up the game.

Fouled Team Gets Ball

Under this rule the fouled team gets possession of the ball out of bounds at a point nearest to where the foul occurred.

Previously, the fouled team got a free throw. This usually meant the teams had to walk to the opposite end of the court for the penalty shot. The rule was designed to end these marches which slowed down the game.

Rule Now Official

Maurice Podoloff, president of the pro circuit, said the trial measure apparently had worked out well and now was a part of the code.

"A majority of members of the Board of Governors had to notify us of dissatisfaction with the rule by Nov. 3," said Podoloff. "If not, the rule was to become permanent. It now is a permanent rule."

Booters Down State, 2-0 For Second Conference Victory

By JIM PURKS

Carolina's varsity soccer team nailed down its second conference win and sixth win of the season with a 2-0 victory over N. C. State College here yesterday.

The Tar Heels, playing before one of the biggest crowds to attend a home soccer game in three years, outplayed the scrappy Wolfpack almost the entire game.

In the first quarter Carolina was held scoreless, but pounded at the State goal and made 14 shots on goal compared to 2 shots on the Carolina goal for the Wolfpack.

Perkins Scores

Then, about midway in the second quarter, left forward Joe Perkins hit paydirt after taking a setup pass from John Ghanim.

Perkins hard shot went into the left corner of the State goal despite goaltender's Pete Bazanos' efforts to hold onto the ball.

A 1-0 lead was all the Tar Heels' tight defense needed as State was unable to get a sustained drive started against steady fullbacks, Tom Evans, Dave Corkey and Bob Quackenbusch.

Ghanim Gets Second Goal

However, John Granim gave Carolina an insurance goal in the third quarter, making the most beautiful play of the game. Ghanim, playing center forward, almost dribbled circles around his hard-pressing defenseman and then, with his left foot, booted a low liner which easily beat the State goalie.

State rarely threatened to break the Tar Heels' 2-0 lead, although the team gained an upper hand towards the middle of the fourth quarter.

Overall, Carolina's showing yesterday was not as impressivve as in Tuesday's 3-1 victory over Roanoke College. Players on the offensive line failed to play position as well and there was less coordination between the defense and offense.

Coach Marvin Allen's squad will have a week to prepare for next Friday's contest with Virginia, followed three days later with by another conference game, this time with Maryland in College Park.

Klochak Will Try For Repeat Of 1954 Effort

Don Klochak, Carolina's sensational full-back who did such an exciting and efficient running job against Tennessee last week, should remember Charlottesville, where he and his Tar Heel mates collide with Virginia's Cavaliers this afternoon.

"Big Klo" had one of his biggest football days there in 1954 as a sophomore. In Carolina's triumph against the Vols last week he rolled up 92 yards in 15 tries. Against Virginia in 1954 he wound up with 102 in nine carries.

Klochak Scores Twice

Also, against Virginia that day, the big fellow ran for 30 yards for one touchdown and nine for another. As he shared honors with quarterback Jack Cummings in the 21-7 conquest of Tennessee last week, he shared them with quarterback Len (Teedee) Bullock in the 26-14 win over Virginia in 1954.

Bullock also had one of his best days with 70 yards running in 21 keeps, and five completions in eleven passes for 60 yards and one touchdown. Other ball carriers for the Tar Heels were Larry Parker, Connie Gravitte and Don Lear, all gone now.

Klochak is around because he went into the service following his sophomore season, returning this year. After being out so long, with no service football, "Big Klo" had a little trouble getting the spring back in his legs and was used sparingly until last week although he had looked impressible enough in his fleeting appearances to have the fans calling for him.

An 'Armored Tank'

Coach Jim Tatum dramatically unveiled him in all his skill and fury as a first stringer against the Vols and one Tennessee writer called him an "armored tank."

"Big Klo" is a fine looking young man, married to a lovely girl and now entirely settled and adjusted. He likes to play football and has the eagerness and desire that has characterized all the Tar Heels this season and which has had so much to do with the teams' five straight wins.

Cummings And Randle Top ACC Offense List

GREENSBORO — (AP) — Carolina's Jack Cummings and Virginia's Sonny Randle, Atlantic Coast Conference standouts in individual offense and pass receiving, respectively, are making marks for themselves in other statistical departments.

Cummings, according to latest ACC Service Bureau figures, leads in pass interceptions with three, and Randle continues as the pacesetter in kickoff returning with 201 yards in runbacks.

Behind Cummings are eight players with two interceptions each. Close on Randle's heels in kickoff returning is King Dixon of South Carolina with 211 yards in returns. Dixon's chief position of challenge is the fact that he has averaged 23.4 yards per return as compared to Randle's 24.3 yards.

Wray Carlton of Duke is the No. 2 man in kickoff returning, having hauled back eight for 172 yards and a pre-return average of 21.4 yards.

Bunny Bell, the swift Duke halfback, once more tops the punt returners with 97 yards on six runbacks, an average of 16.2 yards per return. His big one was a 65-yard scoring reutrn against N. C. State two weeks ago. Dixon 82 yards in returns, and Claude Gibson of N. C. State and Alex Hawkins of South Carolina, each with 81 yards, trail Bell.

Randle, meantime, has run his record-breaking receiving total to 35 pass catches, and the close race for runnerup honors continues. Pete Manning of Wake Forest currently holds the No. 22 position with 20 catches, but Al Goldstein of Carolina and Ron Shaffer of Maryland have 17 each and Carlton has caught 15.

Don Coker of Carolina still leads the punters with an average of 42.4 yards on 25 kicks, and Jack Cummings of the Tar Heels is again the top man in pass interceptions with three.

Pioneer II Fails After Takeoff

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla.,—(UP)—Weary Air Force missilemen, their dream of moon conquest shattered for now, today attempted ot solve the mystery of why moon rocket Pioneer II fizzled in flight after a brilliant launching.

The 52-ton rocket, carrying a top-shaped moon satellite, roared off to a beautiful start at 2:30 a.m. (EST), but the flight ended less than 45 minutes later when the third main stage rocket failed to ignite.

It was one of the most spectacular launchings ever witnessed at the Cape. The area was illuminated for miles as a light cloud cover reflected the bright flash of fire at launching.

Th third — and as of now final — Air Force bid to place a satellite around the moon failed at an altitude of 1,000 miles, far short of its 220,000-mile distant target.

The mighty rocket tumbled and disintegrated in the earth's atmosphere somewhere over Central Africa, about 7,500 miles from the launching site.

Even as scientists studied flight performance data to pinpoint the trouble, Army moon probers were waiting in the wings.

It is expected that the Army will get the first of its two chances to "shoot the moon" about Dec. 5.

High hopes rode with the rocket as it blasted majestically skyward. The odds for success still were one in 10, but they were the same when Pioneer I streaked 90,000 miles out of this world just a month ago.

Ironically, Ted Gordon, the 28-year-old Douglas test conduetor whose word was law during the critical moments that led up to lauching, said "It was the best missile countdown I've ever been through."

Except for a few minor hitches, everything functioned perfectly during the fina' phase of the 12-hour preliminary countdown that preceded zero hour.

Opera, Carmen Planned For January 13

One of the most ambitious productions ever undertaken by the UNC Department of Music—a musical production of Bizet's opera, "Carmen"—has been announced by its director, Dr. Wilton Mason.

The concert program will be presented Jan. 13 in the newly-renovated Memorial Hall. Rehearsals are well underway for the individual performers and the University Chorus.

"We are performing with one of the finest Carmens ever to sing the role in America," Dr. Mason added.

He was referring to Claramae Turner, contralto of the Metropolitan and San Francisco Opera Companies, who will sing the part of the famous gypsy in the UNC production.

Other Members of Cast

Other members of the cast for the first Chapel Hill production of the popular opera include Gene Strassler, a graduate assistant in music from Apollo, Pa., as Don Jose; Joel Carter, member of the Music Department faculty, as Escamillo; and Martha Fouse, soprano of Chapel Hill, as Micaela.

These performers have been noted for their roles in recent University music dramas and operettas.

Supporting Roles

Supporting roles will be handled by Brian Klitz, UNC graduate assistant in music, singing the parts of Zungia, Morales and El Dancairo; James Pruett of Chapel Hill as El Remendado; Marilyn Zschau of Raleigh, a UNC senior, as Mercedes; and Rebecca Carnes, a graduate student from Shiloh, as Frasquita.

The University Chorus, regularly conducted by Dr. Mason, will be responsible for all the choral scenes of the full-length presentation. Robert F. Steelman of Kinston, junior music major, is the rehearsal accompanist.

Miss Turner, who sings the lead of Carmen, appears each season in concert with major symphony orchestras such as the New York Philharmonic, the Boston, San Francisco, Minneapolis and Los Angeles symphonies.

She was chosen by Maestro Arturo Toscanini to sing Ulrica in "Ballo in Maschera" in a performance unanimously heralded as "without precedent in any recent decade." This performance recorded by RCA Victor was the last opera conducted by Toscanini.

Flight Training Free For Dozen Seniors

A dozen senior men are getting 35 hours free flight training this semester from an instructor at Wilson Air Service in Raleigh.

The men, of course, had to qualify for this special training through their eligibility to the Air Force's flight school. All 12 have this in common: they are seniors, in the AFROTC and have passed an officer's qualification test and flight physical.

Almost all two hours a week of the Flight Instruction Program is spent in the air. Leaving from Horace Williams Air Port here, the boys and their instructor make cross country and local flights.

After eight to ten flying hours, each cadet will solo. This solo phase of the training is expected to be completed by the Christmas vacations.

The remainder of the semester will consist of cross country and local flights, navigation and instrument flying.

The free flight training comes compliments of the government and its contract with Wilson Air Service.

The Flight Instruction Program, now in its second year here, qualifies each boy in the program later to take Civil Air Aeronautics Administration tests for a private pilot's license.

Holiday Hours Announced By Merchants

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Assn. today announced dates and times for after-dark shopping and holidays during the Christmas season.

The Christmas Holiday period will officially open Dec. 1 with a parade, starting at 7 p.m. from the Colonial Store on Franklin St. The parade will continue on the main thoroughfare.

Stores will remain open that night until 9 p.m., the first date when merchants will keep their doors open until a later hour.

They will also be open until 9 o'clock on the nights of Dec. 5, and Dec. 12, and on nights starting Dec. 17 through Dec. 24, with the exception of Saturday night, Dec. 20, when they will close at the regular times.

Merchants will observe a two-day Christmas vacation on Dec. 24 and 25, and will close again on Jan. 1.

Night shopping, somewhat disappointing to merchants in the past, may improve with the advent next week of parking meters. The meters will be in operation downtown until 6 p.m. each day.

UP Not Meeting

University Party Chairman Jack Lawing has announced that the University Party will not meet until after Thanksgiving vacation.

Presbyterians Will Discuss 'Beat' Writings

"Are We Beat, Lost or Uncommitted?" will be the topic of the program for students at the Presbyterian Hut, off Rosemary St., this evening at 6:30.

A supper at 5:30 will precede the program.

Readings from "Howl" by Allen Ginsberg, "Memoirs of a Shy Pornographer" by Kenneth Patchen, "A Coney Island of the Mind" by Lawrence Ferlinghetti and "The Time of the Geek" by Jack Kerouac will be presented.

Discussion and questions will follow the readings.

Students participating include Larry Anderson, Chuck Nisbet, Ann Mills, Sue Gregory, Bill Sugg and Frank Mansfield.

Cecil Hartsoe will provide music during the program.

Eleanor Brawley, associate to the student minister, invites students to come sit on the floor and participate.

Tar Heels Capture Sixth Straight; Trounce Cavaliers By 42-0 Score

PROBABLY BY DUKE WEEKEND

Visit Agreement Nears Completion

By NEIL MURPHY

Jim Scott, key man in the IDC's coed visiting agreement, said Wednesday that "coeds will probably be able to visit social rooms in probably 17 men's dormitories the weekend of the Duke game."

Scott indicated that construction necessary in men's dorms to make it possible for them to be opened will be started within a week. Dormitories will have partitions and doors installed and improvements will be made in the social rooms themselves.

Students have been urged to by the IDC to take full advantage of the open social rooms on the weekends. Rooms will be open Friday night, Saturday afternoons and nights, and Sunday night. They will be closed on football afternoons.

Scott said, "Dorms will have to get their social rooms in good shape—homely, livable, chairs in good condition, pictures hung, trophy cases perhaps." Several dorms have already started painting their social rooms.

Machinery will grind into crushing the final obstruction to the agreement when the construction crews go into the dorms, Scott indicated. "The big thing in our way now is the partitioning."

Scott pointed out that 911 students have voted for and only 14 against the agreement in reports from all men's dorms except Avery.

Rules require that each men's dorm vote at the end of the trial period if they wish to continue the visiting policy.

A revision of the rules requires that a dorm officer be present in the dormitory and available at all times.

Women will be allowed in social rooms and entry halls only during Friday 7 to 12 p.m., Saturday 2 to 12 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 11 p.m. The rooms will be closed until 4:30 on football Saturdays.

A visiting board consisting of the chairman or president of the Interdomitory Council, the Women's Residence Council, Carolina Women's Council, Panhellenic Council, president of the student body, and two faculty members and their wives must approve each dorm before it is opened to coeds.

Old East, Old West and Battle-Vance-Pettigrew dorms will not be included in the agreement because of their physical make-up.

See AGREEMENT, page 3

Spirituals Are 'Y' TV Topic

Negro spirituals is the topic for the weekly Y-sponsored television show "Dimensions" Monday night at 9:30 on WUNC-TV, Channel 4.

With Jim Carse of the Y as narrator and with a special chorus, these three basic elements of the spiritual will be emphasized: the words, the rhythm and communication through both the words and rhythm.

Script writer for "Negro Spirituals: The Message, The Implications, The Insight" was Louise Crumbley, a senior here.

One basic element, the words of the spiritual, indicate the meshing of sophistocated theological and Biblical doctrines in the ordinary hum-drum life of a people in bondage.

The meaning and understanding of their discovery comes in the second basic element, the rhythm.

Communication from the individual and among individuals is the third basic element.

The characteristics of Negro spirituals have been described as: straight forwardness and universal truths through the use of the ordinary.

Pledge Officers Elected

Kappa Delta sorority recently elected pledge class officers for 1958-59.

Melissa Osborne was elected president;; Peggy Moore, vice president; Linda Dancy, secretary; and Barbara Peitch, treasurer.

Three Squads See Action In Big Win

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special To The Daily Tar Heel

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. —(UP)— Carolina's first three units all moved with equal ease against helpless Virginia here yesterday as the Tar Heels won their 6th straight by completely routing the Cavaliers 42-0.

All three units also showed an equal adeptness at defense as the Cavaliers never got a serious threat going all afternoon.

KLOCHAK SCORES FIRST

The first time they got their hands on the ball Carolina marched straight down the field 59 yards for a touchdown. On the first play from scrimmage big Don Klochak smashed the entire distance into the end zone but a clipping penalty nullified the play. Klocnak did it again a few moments later, from the 8, and this time it stuck, Jack Cummings passed to Moe DeCantis for the extra 2 to give the Tar Heels an 8-0 lead with 10:50 still left in the first quarter.

Just before the end of the quarter the Hills struik again with Skip Clements hitting Don Kemper in the end zone with a 27-yard pass play Clements threw the ball just as he was hit but it was still a perfect strike. The try for 2 failed, but Carolina owned a 14-0 lead with the first quarter not yet over.

UNC LEADS 22-0 AT HALF

After driving from their own 46 to the Virginia 10, Jack Cummings took to the air and found Emil DeCantis waiting in the cross-stripes for the Tar Heels' third touchdown. Cummings passed to DeCantis again for the extra points to give his mates a 22-0 lead. The half ended with that count on the scoreboard.

The boys from Chapel Hill started the second half exactly the way they did the first, scoring the first time they got the pigskin. Cummings again elected to pass, and Al Goldstein grabbed his aerial at the Virginia 40 then romped the remaining yardage for the score. The play covered 63 yards in all. Don Klochak bulled over for two more points to put the Tar Heels on the big end of a 30-0 count.

A mixture of the second and third units launched a sustained drive from the Carolina 34, climaxed by Sonny Folckomer's 1-yard dive into paydirt. Ed Lipski was stopped short of the goal, but Carolina was ahead 36-0.

Danny Droze put on a real running exhibition for the last touchdown, gaining 31 and 9 yards, and finally smasking over from the 1. This TD pulled the Heels to their final margin, 42-0.

So many players looked great for Carolina, it would be impossible to single out individuals. The defense had Virginia's vaunted air attack well at hand, allowing only 6 completions. Virginia did gain 141 yards on the ground, but mostly against the third unit.

APO National President Honored At Chapter Dinner

Carolina's Rho chapter of Alpha Phi Omega honored Bill Roth, national president, at a dinner at Brady's restaurant Friday night. Roth refounded Rho chapter in 1948.

Testimonial speeches were given by Chancellor-Emeritus Robert B. House, APO southeast section chairman T. Mac Long and Occoneechee Council Scout Executive John Shutt.

Roth, told he was to speak to the pledge class, arrived at the surprise dinner in his honor at 7:05 pm.. Representatives from chapters at North Carolina State College, Virginia Polytechnic Institute and Georgia State Teachers College, as well as friends of Rho chapter from South Carolina, attended.

After an invocation by Mr. James Wadsworth, the APO members ate a dinner of fried chicken, french fries, salad, hush puppies and coffee.

After dinner Rho Chapter President Harold Johnson introduced Chancellor-Emeritus House who started his speech on the topic "Pioneering with a Harmonica Solo." House said "World War II moved the students right out of the University. Bill was a member of that generation that put us back on the right track after the war."

"In most fraternities, graduates wear their pin on their undershirts. In APO you wear it on your character. One of the greatest things about Bill is that when he could have commanded other forms of success, he chose service to God, man and country in scouting by the investment of himself."

Dr. John Shutt followed House, speaking on Roth's life and honors. "Bill served in nearly every position in scouting at one time or another. He said that he might as well go into professional scouting since that was all he did and he might as well egt paid for it."

Shutt pointed out that Roth has received the Distinguished Service Award of the Order of the Arrow, WWW and is now the Director of Field Service in Occoneechee Council, BSA.

"Bill is presently active in the JCs, Red Cross, Rotary and is a Sunday school teacher in his church. He has made a place in the hearts of everyone he has ever known," Shutt said.

T. Mac Long, who helped Bill refound Rho chapter said, "Our first law of growing was to do something. We have something great in APO and would have to hate a man not to tell him of it."

Speaking of early service projects, Long said, "A job didn't have to be big for Bill to do it. It just had to be there. A usual comment that a brother made at this time was 'Bill has been loading me down with work and I love it'."

President Roth then told the brothers at the dinner that Rho chapters first service project was to furnish a crippled girl from Florida with "pushers" to wheel her from class to class. The girl, in gratitude, tooled the chapter log book.

Roth said "APO is the largest and the best men's fraternity in the nation." He referred to the principle of APO, service as "an attitude and spirit."

Harold Johnson then led the brothers in the Toast song and dismissed the meeting.

Roth, who was elected national president this summer in Austin, Tex., transferred to UNC in 1948 from Ashville-Billmore College in Ashville. He received his BS in Commerce in June of 1950. He did graduate work in Social Work.

His honors at UNC include the presidency of the Grail, membership in the Golden Fleece and the position as Director of Graham Memorial Student Union, as well as his position in Alpha Phi Omega.

Alpha Lambda Marks 51st Anniversary

Delta Sigma Pi was founded at New York University November 7, 1907. The purpose of the fraternity is to foster the study of business in universities, and to encourage scholarship, social activity and the association of students for their mutual advancement by research and practice.

The fraternity also strives to promote closer affiliation between the commercial world and students of commerce.

Last Day

Today is the last day to enjoy free parking in Chapel Hill.

Tomorrow, the most modern type of no-arm bandits goes into operation, and students who want to park will have to pay for the privelege. Townspeople will be caught in the same dilemma.

A sober note was added to the parking meter controversy a couple of days ago, when a solid citizen of a Virginia town offered Chapel Hill a number of parking meter posts that used to have parking meters on top of them in his town. It seems that the local gentry went to the nearest big city to shop, and the local people got wise.

AFROTC

You, who are in the Air Force Reserve Officers Training program in the first two years, are in a doubtful gamble.

You have taken no exhaustive physical and mental examination and can indeed be dropped from the program.

At present there are about 200 students participating in the program. However, the average graduating class is around twenty.

The emphasis is currently being placed on the development of fliers, and the physical fitness of these individuals is of primary concern.

For those who are not in maximum physical condition, the AFROTC program is a waste of aime, and before you re-register for the program next semester, have a check-up. You are losing credits by taking the course if you have no future in it.

Secondly you who are not contemplating flight training aught to look into the possibilities of continuing in the Air Force program in your junior year.

The Air force does not expend any money toward a student's education in the University, except for uniforms and books, but these are on a lend-lease basis, so that the loss is only on depreciation.

The student who is not physically fit has nothing to gain and everything to lose academically.

The Air Force might reconsider its current program, and the student ought to make next semester's decision carefully. Two years of courses is a lot of time to waste.

Tax Aid

A state committee has reported that the state should consider the idea of utilizing sales tax money for the educational aid, and this is a recommendation to be taken seriously.

It advances an idea of matching grants, but whatever method the idea of putting more state money toward the educational establishment, it is an idea to be hailed.

The state has been too long committed to other areas such as road building. And the commitment to education has been minimal. The realization that education is an important factor is healthy.

The ultimate realization that education is primary is still to be reached. It can be hoped that this realization will come soon.

Chancellor Bostian

It is with regret that the resignation of Chancellor Bostian is noted. He has done much to raise the level of education at the college and bring its level up comensurate with high standards of education.

His shoes will be large ones to fill.

New Records

Record stores have different records, and one local record shop has some of the most different.

One record company runs a series of records beginning with the words "Music For." One of their latest carries the inscription "Music For Expectant Mothers." How far can the record industry get?

For those who like their realism, really real, there is also a record of stethescopic heartbeats. Fascinatin' rhythm.

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

This week the big news is of course the election and how the Democrats battered down Republican bastions all over the U. S. with few exceptions and gained the biggest majority in the House and Senate they have had since New Deal days.

The election proved what forecasters had predicted for weeks: that the people were dissatisfied with the GOP and were ready for a change, that Ike's personal charm was losing its effect, and that no other Republican could replace him.

In campaign speeches and stumping tours Nixon, Knowland, Dulles and other top personnel in the GOP tried to stem the Democratic tide but it was as futile as King Canute telling the ocean to recede.

The surprises in the Election were the election of a Congressman from Vermont on the Democratic slate—the first in 106 years—the Democratic sweep in several normally Republican midwestern states, and the election of Nelson Rockefeller to the Governor's chair in New York over incumbent Averill Harriman.

In winning that crucial contest, Rockefeller placed himself in the middle of any speculation about the GOP standard-bearer in 1960. No other Republican winner turned in as great a victory.

There were some other winners for the GOP, though, bright contrasts to the predominatly Democratic tide. Barry Goldwater, arch-conservative in Arizona who battles the labor movement as much as liberalism, won a close race for his eSnate seat. In North Carolina Rep. Charles Raper Jonas fought off a determined bid for his House seat from Democrat Dave Clark and won a close one.

On the other side of the ledger, Democrats Pat Brown and Clair Engle stopped the bids of Republicans William Knowland and Goodwin Knight to switch jobs. Knowland was whipped by Brown for the governorship, and Knight lost to Engle for Knowland's old senate seat.

Final unofficial returns show the Democrats piled up 13 new seats in the Senate, giving them a 12-vote majority. In the House they picked up 47 seats for a lead of 61, more than ample voting strength.

In races for governors' positions in 322 states, the Democrats won five more seats than they had before, and they now lead numerically 34-14.

In the wake of the election, the AFL-CIO demanded an end to all state right-to-work laws which ban the union shop. In seven states in which the question was an issue, the union-hated laws were opposed in five states, all heavily industrialized. Union leaders had urged members to get out and vote against the laws and for Democratic candidates.

The executive council of the national union called on the new congress to revoke the sanction given the right-to-work laws in the 1947 Taft-Hartley Act. The statement continued to say that the Democrats won such a sweeping victory because of the loss of public confidence in the GOP.

The lineup of the 87th congress favors such action, because the preponderance of conservative southern Democrats has been lessened by the election of new northern and western Democrats. But the southerners still hold the majority of committee chairmanships because of the seniority rule.

Another big backer of the Democratic campaign, the Americans for Democratic Action, declared that the election results were a declaration for liberalism more than for the Democrats. The chairman of the ADA, Robert R. Nathan, said that voters repudiated the smear-fear Eisenhower-Nixon line and instead elected those very "ADA-type northern and western radicals that the Republicans asked the voters to reject."

Nathan cited the election of such men as Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota, Harrison A. Williams of New Jersey and William Proxmire of Wisconsin to the Senate as examples.

President Eisenhower, whose policies seem to have been rejected more than any other president in off-year elections, said people he classes as spenders have been elected to the new, Democratic-controlled congress. He served notice on them he will fight increased spending as hard as he can.

He made clear that there will be no basic change in administration policy as a result of the election.

Press comment around the world widely interpreted the U. S. election results as a swing toward middle of the road liberalism. U. S. foreign policy, a period of recession, right-wingism in the Republican Party and what was called the shrinking prestige of President Eisenhower were some of the reasons cited for the Democratic sweep.

The London Times said editorially that it hoped the Democrats will use their big majority to cooperate harmoniously with the President. The editorial said the temptation to assign a single cause for the Democratic victory should be resisted.

But it noted that the recession period damaged Republican chances in many regions and that "the handling of the Formosa Crisis had been criticized by many strong groups."

There were two major events in world-wide news this week besides the election: the coronation of Pope John XXIII in Rome, and the U. N. action on a plan for standby forces to meet international emergencies. The plan was shelved by the General Assembly's special political committee.

Counterpoint

William Cheney

Througout its long and distinguished history the University of North Carolina has held a position of progressive leadership among the schools of the South and of the Nation. Today, this leadership stands in jeopardy.

One of the great trends amoung the universities of the day is that towards the realization that academic studies should be balanced by a comprehensive program for social adjustment. Well developed recreational facilities and programs have become characteristics of the modern university. Unfortunately, Carolina's attitude towards this matter has been archaic and reactionary to the extreme.

It probably would be safe to say that the average Carolina student spends somewhat more than half his time while engaged in activities directly or indirectly connected with academic studies. This disgraceful situation arises from the fact that the recreational facilities and extra-curricular outlets at U.N.C. are totally inadequate to meet the demands of a public spirited and socially minded student body. The student is literaly forced into a semi-monastic life of study and thought; he can find no other way to spend his time. One danger arising from this situation is that the student, if subjected to this type of atmosphere long enough, can develop intellectual tendencies. All of this tends to create anti-social subcurrents and should be avoided if possible.

Happily, some progress is being made towards rectifying this situation. Among other things, a new student union and improved recreational facilities in the dormitories have been proposed. These should do much to save the student from the unbalanced values which are becoming so evident here. Improvements of this sort cannot help but bring U.N.C. nearer to the level of such instiutions as the University of Miami. Truly any building funds which the university obtains could not be used in a better cause.

A Letter

Editor:

People laugh at us Southerners. They say we're backward in a lot of our ways.

I'm a Southerner and I guess I come from one of the most traditionally Southern states in the entire forty-nine. As most of you know, just from reading such authoritative journals as the News and Observer and The Daily Tar Heel, newspapers that are very careful not to present biased or sensational or yellow journalistic material in their pages, Georgia is just about the most "southern" Southern state of all. At least it should be the last one the Supreme Court touches. Well, I used to be one of the biggest die-hard confederates in the bunch when it came to arguing about the Civil War. I was a true confederate, a real johnny reb in every sense of the word. That is I was until I happened one day to peep out of the big mob I was in and asked someone why we were mad at "them damn Yankees," and he couldn't think of one reason. "We just are!" was all he could say.

Now, some eight or ten years later, I have just about come to see why people think we're backward. One very striking example took place last summer in my own state. It was the gubernatorial election. Now out of all the people in Georgia, and there are a few of us who aren't Ty-Ty's or Darlin' Jil's, there ought to be someone sharp enough to represent and govern our state properly. But if you could have seen the three prizes who were nominated to run (I'm not sure that they knew what they were running for, I think one of them thought he was running for the state line), you'd see why maybe even old Stonewall Jackson himself would agree with me.

Now I'm not saying these fine candidates were crooked and I'm not doubting their education, but to give you an example, and start with the mildest of the three, the first man "nominated" was named Lee Roy Abernathy. Now you might say oh, well, what's in a name? The guy might be O.K., and I'd agree, if it weren't for the fact that Lee Roy had for the past ten years been a gospel singer by profession in numerous camp meetings and done "Saturday night singing" shows on T.V. The second candidate for governor was William "Bill" Bodenhammer, who, I had heard, had at least finished the fifth grade. He strengthened his platform for governorship by whistle-stopping many of the small towns in Georgia' but wouldn't seem to go near Atlanta), ranting and raving and screaming that when he was elected governor he would "keep the country unit system in our greaaant state!" (you've really got to see and hear these men to get the full enjoyment of their unconcious humor. And the third was Earnest Vandiver, a city slicker from the word go, who had been "born, bread," and by the time the election was over, might have been dead in Georgia.

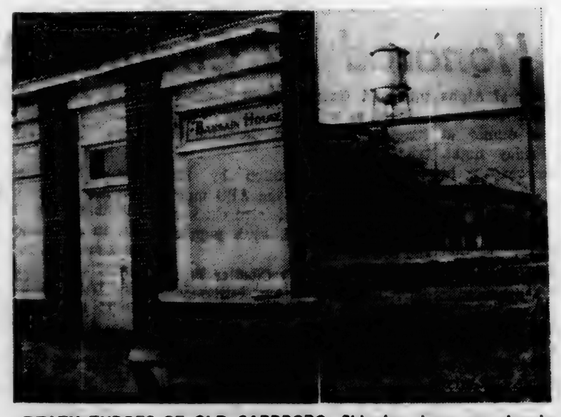
As you might guess it was a tense and exciting day when the people went to the polls. I think if our dorm janitor (had he been white) had run, he probably would have beaten Bodenhammer and Abernathy. It was a clean sweep — Vandiver by a landslide. Who else could we elect? We had no choice. Vandiver didn't even have to resort to crooked measures. I think he felt cheated by winning honestly.

I guess I'll always live in the South, though. I like Atlanta and Chapel Hill a great deal. But my faded grey confederate cap seems to have slipped off.

CHARLIE WHITFIELD

Neither Black Nor White...

Mostly Shades Of Gray



DEATH THROES OF OLD CARRBORO: Shipping doors are closed at the woolen mill as production slows to a stand-still. The store building is empty; the farmers trade in Durham. Attempts at both industry and commerce failed to save a center of ruralism. Unconditional capitulation to urbanized Chapel Hill remains the only course.

Norman Smith

Ring on, oh bells of Carrboro, Ring out loudly your hymns each evening. Ring so you can be heard even over the hurly-burly of Chapel Hill. Ring with the self-conscious loudness of the vanquished and the decadent. Ring your death knell.

Carrboro was a trading center for farmers. Carrboro had a woolen mill to employ its citizens. Carrboro had a busy railroad station. But now the farmers get in their cars travel over a superhighway to do their trading in Durham. And the woolen mill is being abandoned. And the tracks are rusting, the station house crumbling for want of repair.

When you walk down the main street of Carrboro, people say "howdy" whether they know you or not; if you have been around before likely as not they will know you and something about you, though. A neighbor is a friend, and you call everyone by his first name.

There is always a group of men standing around the pot-bellied coal stove in Lloyd-Ray Hardware Co. during the winter or lounging in front of The Smoke Shop in summertime. They wear galluses and union suits and high work shoes; they look comfortable. They like to talk of old times, of rain and drought, of hunting and fishing, of new babies and new preachers. They talk slow, easy and if you join them you want to stay for a spell.

Now Carrboro is surrounded. On all sides the tenacle-like streets of Chapel Hill greedily advance through forests of pine and fields of corn. Bulldozers and prefabricating crews rend the daylight hours with the din of their labors. Salesmen from the dozen local real estate firms with starry-eyed prospects, are out a-building castles in Spain in sub-divisions and developments (those nebulous locations marked off by tiny wooded stakes and bumpy roads with picturesque names).

Chapel Hill is rowdy and robust, driving at a frantic pace and bursting at the seams. Slogans are shouted: "UNC will have 12,000 by 1970." "The research triangle will bring industry!," "Durham-Chapel Hill will become one of the great urban complexes of the state!"

Cash registers along East Franklin Street tinkle their merry symphonies from early morning till late at night. Parking meters will soon rear their ugly, snub-nosed visages suspended on emaciated, hungry-looking necks out of anachronistic dirt sidewalks. Neo-Georgian architecture serves the interests of commercialism. The nauseating belch of the fire siren penetrates to the farthest reaches of the town as engines roll forth to extinguish blazes in poorly-wired, poorly-heated, hastily built houses. Sewage lines rupture and make the ground mushy underfoot. Rotting garbage piles litter the alleys. Traffic snarls choke the streets at quitting time.

A smile is a rarity. The art of conversation is being extinguished by the frantic activity of the day and the television of the evening. Neighbors know not their neighbors.

Everywhere in America ruralism is dying: Carrboros are withering while Chapel Hills are waxing strong. Urbanization with its automation and materialism and rapid pace engulfs us all.

I hate the commercialism, sewage, and traffic snarls of Chapel Hill. These are growing pains, prices that progress extracts painfully from those who partake of its fruits. And we all are addicted to this fruit. We have hi-fis, go to modern stores, wear Ivy League clothes, enjoy a higher standard of viling than has any nation in the history of the world, drive automobiles, have amazingly effective medical attention, use refrigerated and frozen foods. I question that even the most aesthetic or impractical individuals would seriously be willing to abandon all of this for some "golden age," some utopian dream of pastoral ruralism.

Ring on, oh bells of Carrboro. Ring bravely but to no avail. I am coming to help tear down what you stand for; then I will help to rebuild a new city—fat, rich, and fast—by feeding it lavishly the fruit of progress. (But within I am not so sure: as I hear the bells play last stanza of the last hymn I wonder how great is the price we have to pay and how much of the account has not yet been rendered to us.)

GROWING PAINS OF CHAPEL HILL: Neo-Georgian architecture has come to serve the interests of commercialism. Any aesthetic attraction of such an edifice is bastardized — whoever heard of a 17th Century auto service station? Garbage ferments and breeds disease in the alleys; the driving tempo of business leaves no time to give heed to cleaning up.

'Y' Activities Amaze Reporter

By ANN BALLENGER

A campus reporter for Mademoiselle magazine, who expressed amazement in the multiple activities of UNC's "Y," discussed her magazine's College Board contest at length recently at a tea in Spencer Dorm with Carolina coeds.

Miss Kim Kurt of Mademoiselle also told of the importance of skill in typing and shorthand for girls seeking jobs in New York City.

For the coed at UNC having even a minute interest in the fields of literature, art, fashion or interior decorating, Miss Kurt urged entry in the College Board contest before its Nov. 30 deadline.

The contest, she told the 36 coeds present at the tea, offers great opportunities for those girls who pass the initial tryout, the most important benefit being College Board membership.

A College Board member is in the official running for the guest editorship of Mademoiselle, and is a contact on her campus for the magazine. She is also sent questionaires made out by the magazine's advertisers and is invited to visit Mademoiselle and talk with the editor when she is in New York.

If chosen as a guest editor (upon the merit of two assignments chosen from the list given by the magazine) the lucky girl goes to New York for six weeks in June.

"Besides a glamorous six weeks, Miss Kurt explianed, "you get direct experience working with a magazine, having a deadline, drinking bad coffee and trying not to get a complex when models walk by."

The guest editors are given the opportunity by Mademoiselle to interview important persons in their chosen field of work, and are also given the chance to criticize Mademoiselle with suggestions as to how the magazine could better interest college girls.

When asked if guest editorship pays well, Miss Kurt stated that it was "not so much an earning as a learning experience."

As for the Mademoiselle art and fiction contests in the early spring, Miss Kurt said the magazine had a reputation for discovering young artists and writers.

Winners of these contests have the satisfaction of being widely seen as well as known. Asked if Mademoiselle had any set policy as to style of fiction or art, Miss Kurt stated that the rumors of the magazine's being partial to abstract art were not entirely true and that it had no set policy on style for short stories.

For Carolina coeds interested in job opportunities in New York City, Miss Kurt said secretarial jobs paid more—thus the need for knowing typing and shorthand.

However, she added that a secretary was not just a secretary in the general sense of the term, but must "have an interest in a certain field, a certain amount of background in it and a willingness to learn more about it."

"Other jobs," she said, "may not pay well but have terrific compensations."

Miss Kurt showed a special interest in the activities and students of UNC. She asked for the opinion of poetry on campus, mentioning that she was trying to persuade Mademoiselle to include more of it.

She was also interested in the student radio and television station and was delighted when asked to view "Dimensions," Monday night's "Y" sponsored TV program.

She was astounded at the work the "Y" does, and stated that it was the most active organization she had ever heard of.

Agreement

Scott indicated that all the dorms would open at the same time rather than open as they were passed on by the visiting committee as originally planned.

UNC Education School To Hear Harvard Dean

Dr. Francis Keppel, dean of the Graduate School of Education, Harvard University, will speak at the UNC School of Education Fall Convocation Thursday, Nov. 13., at 3 p.m. in the auditorium of Carroll Hall.

The program will highlight the annual observance of American Education Week on the University campus. Although designed specifically for students and teachers, the convocation is open to the public.

Dean Keppel's subject will be "The Importance of Professional Preparation in Education." He will be introduced by Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of UNC faculties.

Prior to becoming dean of the Graduate School of Education in 1948, Dean Keppel served as assistant to James Bryant Conant, president of Harvard University. He is a member of Phi Delta Kappa, Phi Beta Kappa, American Association of School Administrators, Century Association and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. In 1957 he served as U. S. delegate to the Twentieth International Conference on Public Education in Geneva, Switzerland.

Tar Babies Beat Wolflets, 24-19 In Shrine Contest

RALEIGH — Carolina's Tar Babies made good on all their extra point trys to give them a 24-19 victory over the State College freshman in the annual Sudan Temple Bowl Game here yesterday.

The Wolflets also scored three times but could make only one point out of a possible six extra points to wind up on the short end of the score. Glenn Hunter kicked the only State extra point as the Tar Babies blocked another kick and stopped a running extra point play.

Shuford Scores Three Times

Halfback Gene Shuford accounted for all the Carolina touchdowns on plunges of 1, 2, and 3 yards. Ray Farris ran for two extra points and Gene Carson tallied the other on a plunge.

The game, played before some 10,000 snaf in Riddick Stadium and others who saw it on television, saw State jump out to a halftime lead of 13-8 but then wilt in the final thirty minutes to lose the contest by 5 points.

Gabriel Tallies For State

Wolflet quarterback Roman Gabriel scored twice for the losers, both times on runs of 10 yards. Al Taylor made the other State touchdown on a 1 yard run.

For the Tar Babies it was their third victory of the season and assured them of a winning campaign with only the Duke game on Thanksgiving Day remaining on the schedule. Yesterday's loss gives the Wolflets a 2-3 season mark.

McMillan Halts Drive

The charity contest went right down to the wire with State threatening to score in the final minutes to snatch the win away from the Tar Babies. End Benton McMillan intercepted a Gabriel pass in the final period to prevent the Wolflets from pulling the game out of the bag.

For Tar Baby Coach Bud Carson it was a sweet win and avenged the 33-19 loss his squad suffered at the hands of the Wolflets a year ago.

Cross Country Meet In Raleigh

The UNC cross country team, with a sly, determined eye glued a week ahead to the conference meet, focuses the other upon Raleigh tomorrow where the annual State Championships will be held.

Disappointing Season

After stumbling through a rather disappointing season with a 3-4 record, the Heels, vowing to own up to their ability in the ACC meet here next Monday, consider tomorrow's meet a "gut-grinding" workout in preparation for it.

Captain Dave Scurlock and junior Cowles Llipfert will lead the still Bishop-less Tar Heel brigade into battle and will be flanked by Sonny Sweet, Alex Coffin, Bing Somers, Howard Kahn, Bob Foxworth, and Doug Henderson.

Frosh Climax Campaign

If the varsity views this meet with a shrug, for the undefeated freshmen it is the mouth-watering climax to a tremendous season. Rett Everett, David Peltz, Dennis Rash, Fred Lavery, and Louis Sullivan should be the top five Tar Babies in their finale.

Outlook: Unbeaten Duke should gobble up most of the medals in the varsity race with State and Carolina providing most of the pressure. Top runner should be Duke's Pitkethly.

10 POINTS FOR MOE — Halfback Moe DeCantis was the top scorer for the Tar Heels in their 42-0 triumph over Virginia. DeCantis scored one touchdown on an 11 yard pass from Jack Cummings and caught two extra point passes for a total of 10 points.

Roundup Of Other Games

ATLANTA, Nov. 8 — (AP) — Fleet Floyd Faucette put on one of the greatest running exhibitions on Grant Field in many a game today, and led Georgia Tech to a 13-0 football victory over Clemson.

His 54-yard run for Tech's first touchdown was a beauty. Zipping through a hole on the right side, he danced away from Clemson linebackers, cut across the field to the far sideline and simply outran the angling Tiger secondary men.

He chipped in with several other big gains, spinning away from tackler after tackler. He rolled up 116 yards in 10 carries.

Tech's superior overall speed and alert defensive play were the big factors. Center Maxie Baugham turned in a magnificent defensive job, intercepting one pass and making several key tackles to stall Clemson's power machine.

Tackle Billy Shaw and fullback Marvin Tibbetts also were trojans on defense, helping hand the Tigers their first shutout in 15 games.

Clemson, pointing for the Atlantic Coast Conference title and a bowl bid, undoubtedly was handicapped because star quarterback Harvey White was not in top form. A sore ankle kept him out of practice all week and his timing—particularly on passes—appeared off.

Tech scored again in the second period after a 25-yard pass from Joe Delany to Jimmy Beasley gave Tech a first down on the one. Fred Braselton sneaked it over from there.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 8 — (AP) — Quarterback Bill Kaliden skirted right end for 5 yards on fourth down—with just 11 seconds remaining in the game—to earn Pitt a 29-26 upset victory over Notre Dame today in an intersectional football thriller before 55,330 at Pitt Stadium.

Kaliden guided Pitt 73 yards in 14 plays for the winning touchdown.

It was a heartbreaking defeat for the Fighting Irish but they had nobody to blame but themselves, losing the ball five times on seven fumbles, oftimes just when their attack was rolling.

Thus Pitt remained a bowl game prospect on its 5-2-1 record for the season with two games to play. Notre Dame stands 4-3.

The Panthers raced to a 15-0 lead in the second quarter, taraing a fumble and a pass interception into touchdowns before the Irish exploded behind the rifle arm of George Izo.

The 20-year-old junior from Barberton, Ohio, hit Monty Stickles for two touchdowns on 11 and 8-yard passes in the second quarter and scored twice himself in the third and final periods from short distances.

Mike Ditka's 52-yard punt that squirted out of bounds on the Irish 2-yard line paved the way for Pitt's first touchdown. Izo fumbled on the next play and John Guzik fell on the ball for Pitt on the one. Dick Haley plunged over for the score.

Iowa Goes To Rose Bowl

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 8 — (AP) — Unbeaten Iowa won the Big Ten Football Championship and a trip to the Rose Bowl today by hammering winless Minnesota 28-6 behind whizzing Willie Fleming's two spectacular scoring sprints.

Fleming sped 63 and 46 yards in the first half to propel the nation's second-ranked football power to its sixth victory and fifth in the Big Ten. The Hawks' lone blemish is a 13-13 tie with the Air Force.

Iowa's victory, linked with the Ohio State-Purdue tie and Wisconsi's triumph over Northwestern, mathematically clinched the Hawkeyes' fifth Big Ten Championship and their second in three years.

Little Rock Told To Begin Mixing

St. Louis (AP)—The Little Rock School Board was directed by a federal appeals court today to take positive steps to achieve integration in its district, where the four public high schools have been shut down.

The court did not establish a time-table for reopening the high schools. Nor did it spell out how the integration order should be carried out. These matters were left up to Federal District Judge John E. Miller of Arkansas and the school board itself

Gov. Orval E. Fabus of Arkansas indicated the Little Rock Private School Corp. will continue operating a senior high school for white students in a private building with private funds.

The three-judge division of the U. S. Eighth Circut Court of Appeals, in its unamious opinion, also outlawed a plan for leasing the public high school buildings to the Little Rock private school group.

The court directed Judge Miller to order the school board and Virgil T. Blossom, Little Rock school superintendent, to "take such affirmative steps as the district court hereafter direct to facilitate and accomplish" integration in the district.

'Century Bill' To Be Debated By Phi Society

By STAN BLACK

Sherman's march through Georgia will be debated by the Phi Society tonight at eight o'clock in Phi Hall.

The bill of the evening is so-called "century" bill dealing with events 100 years ago in the light of their own times.

The odds seem pretty good that the body will condemn Sherman's destructive drive from Atlanta to the sea, which ocurred almost 100 years ago.

On the other hand, a strong affirmative argument has been prepared by members of the Ways and Means Committee, sponsors of the bill. A hot debate on the bill is expected, although it is hoped that General Sherman's name will not be dragged in the mud.

Any persons interested in the debate have been invited to attend the meeting, which will be held at 8 p.m. on the fourth floor of New East in Phi Hall.

Close-up Mars View Offered At Planetarium

Because the planet Maru is now moving into its most favorable observing position in years, viewing sessions through the Morehead Planetorium's 13-inch reflector telescope will be held nightly through Friday, Manager A. F. Jamano has announced.

The observations, limited to persons attending the Morehead Planetarium program, "The Mysteries of Mars," were originally sceduled for Monday's through Wednesdays in November. They will revert to that schedule Nov. 17.

"We are increasing the number of supervised observations next week, weather permitting, because the planet will be many times clearer than usual and will be higher in the sky," Jensano said. "It will be brighter than any other object in the sky, and we hope to get in some excellent glimpses of the polar caps and other markings."

New Meters Thinning Out Parked Cars

Parking meters went into operation in Chapel Hill yesterday.

Usually-crowded Franklin St. spaces were conspicuously available for downtown shoppers.

Chief of Police Bill Blake reported that "quite a few" tickets were handed out to motorists who ignored or forgot that it now costs to park here.

"That was to be expected on the first day," Chief Blake said.

Twice - weekly collections of meter deposits will be made for the first time this week.

Loyalty Oath Abolishment Is Di's Topic

A bill to abolish mandatory faculty loyalty oaths of state employed people has been introduced by President Gary Greer for debate at tonight's meeting of the Dialetic Senate.

All people employed by the state of North Carolina and who hold positions of trust and profit are required to sign an oath pledging the support of state and federal constitutions. They must also disclose in their application forms weather they have ever been a member of a party supporting violent overthrow of the government.

Many citizens believe such practices to be violation of personal freedom. These practices, they say, question the loyalty of Amtrican citizens and identify individuals with past association, judging them accordingly.

The subject of state loyalty oaths has been previously discussed in The Daily Tar Heel by the editor Curt Gans. He said loyalty oaths would be a strain on man's freedom of concience if he did not agree with every article of the United States Constitution,

Theft In Dorm Is Reported

Chapel Hil Police yesterday were investigating the theft of $169 in photographic equipment from a room in a University dormitory.

John B. Read told officers that someone entered his locked room last Wednesday and took a camera case, a movie camera, a light meter, a portrait lens, and four rolls of film.

He said $5 in cash was also stolen.

Cadet Peter Foley Commended For Action In Saving Girl's Life

Cadet Peter A. Foley received a commendation letter from the AFROTC for his quick thinking aid to a snakebite victim. He received the commendation during recent ceremonies.

He was commended for his quick thinking in aiding a snake-bite victim Sandra Carlton, a freshman of Lexington. She received the bite while walking through Kenan Woods about 6:30 p.m. Oct. 6.

Dr. Mauro, who administered treatment, credited Foley's action with saving her life. Foley applied a tourniquet.

Cadet Lt. Col. William S. Godwin commended Foley in his letter by saying, "You are commended for your noteworthy action which resulted in the saving of a human life. The ability to think and act quickly is a necesary prerequisite of a future United States Air Force Officer."

Cadet Foley, a member of the AFROTC Drill Squadron, is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Neil D. Foley of 3330 Windsor Dr., Charlotte.

Cadet Foley is presently enrolled in the General College and expected to graduate in 1962.

Mrs. Julia Staples Is Only Honorary

Six undergradute women and one honorary member were tapped into Carolina's highest honorary organization for women, the Order of the Valkpries, in a secret pre-dawn ceremony this morning.

Recognized were Miss Nancy Ann Adams, Miami, Florida; Miss Charlene Lynne Bass, Elberton, Georgia; Miss Sipra Bose, Chapel Hill; Miss Diana Arneson, DeVere, Morganton, North Carolina; Miss Margaret Lee Jackson, Boca Raton, Florida; Mrs. Julia Staples, Chapel Hill; and Miss Nancy Elizabeth Turner, Cary, North Carolina.

The Valkyries began their candle-light march at 1:30 a.m. in their customary black robes and hoods. As the march proceeded through the women's residence halls, the sound of the golden gong called forth those women who were recognized for the Valkyrie ideals of scholarship, leadership, character and service.

Following the secret ceremonies, a special breakfast was served at 6 a.m. in honor of the new members. Former members of the Order were also present for this conclusion of the ceremonies.

The Order of the Valkyries was begun on the Carolina campus in 1942 so that outstanding women students might be given special recognition for their services. The name of the organization is taken from an ancient Norwegian legend centered around the warrior god Odin, who represents Thought and Memory and who was mankind's benefactor.

Odin had nine select maiden attendants, the Valkyries, who were daughters of the gods and yet were mortals as well. These attendent maidens waited on the tables in Asgard, but their chief task was to go to the battlefield and decide at Odin's bidding who should win and who should die, and then to carry the brave dead to Valhalla, the hall of fame. It was considered a great honor to belong to this chosen group because they shared the glorious companionship of departed heroes.

The purpose of the Order as stated in the Valkyrie creed is: "As a Valkyrie I will strive to accomplish gladly and quietly the tasks which lie before us, to be unaffected by success and undaunted by failure, to have an active interest in the welfare of my felow students; to act always with a spirit of helpfulness and to try to inspire co-operation in others; to be sincere and considerate on all occasions, to work toward a tolerant and sympathetic understanding of others, and yet to stand staunchly by my own convictions; to be above pettines in all my dealings and to direct my thoughts and actions persistently toward the highest purposes, as a Valkyrie I will strive constantly toward those ideals of character, scholarship, leadership and service for which our organization stands.

SP Approves Twenty Point Fall Platform

The Student Party passed last night a revised 20 point program, calling for, among other things, the abolition of class officers, study into the problem of deferred rush, revocation of mandatory loyalty oaths.

The platform was revised from the 14 point platform submitted last week.

The SP plans to encourage active student support of the budget request of UNC by continuance of efforts for a new adequate student union, elimination of self-liquidation of dormitory construction efforts for increase in the state funds alloted per dormatory occupant.

They will back initiation of a policy of faculty leaves and action to insure student control of student paid employees.

The SP advocated elimination of discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color or national origin, as it pretains to the University community.

They will continue pushing improvement of dormitory social facilites as well as revision of tre Studtnt Traffic Council and assiciated bodies.

The platform calls for the elimination of involuntary payment of fees for athletic passbooks and mandatory loyalty oaths for persons applying for University employment.

Concerning other campus problems, SP wishes to provide for adequate study facilities, relief of traffic congestion and parking problems, application of the intent of "uslimited absence" attendance regulations, continued action for free telephone service in the library and installation of more "hear hear" phones in dorms.

The platform supports proper use of the information resourses of NSA as well as support of the NSA project to make student citizens of the state more cognizant of educational needs.

MAN TOLD TO ADAPT HIMSELF

Radiation Is Part Of Modern Life

Man was told to adapt himself to the atomic era here Saturday in one of a series of radiation lectures.

The speakers were Emil Chanlett, associate professor of sanitary engineering of the UNC School of Public Health, and John Lumsden, chief industrial hygiene engineer of the N. C. State Board of Health.

Chanlett and Lumsted were the fourth speakers in the fourth-month long Medical Science Lecture Series sponsored by the UNC School of Medicine. The lectures, open to the public, are heald each Saturday at 11 a.m.

The speakers explained that radiation has become a part of modern life, especially in the fields of industry and medicine. Therefore, the people must change to this new system that confronts them, just as the people before the present generations changed to meet the system brought about by the Industrial revolution, they said.

"It is well known," the speakers said, "that certain damages result from exposure to radiation and ways must be found to determine and measure the safe limits of such exposure. At the turn of the century it was though that man could safely be exposed to a certain amount of radiation. Today the amount of daily exposure that is consitered safe is only one-five-hundredth that of what was consitered safe from 1900 to 1925."

What has brought about this reduction in the amount of exposure consitered safe? Chanlett and Lumsden cited two main reasons. "It is now known that over exposure to radiation may produce abnormal affects on the future generations. It also is believed that there is a shortening of the life span due to radiation. There is evidence of this from experiments with labratory animals.

"On the other hand, there is no evidence that people working in atomic energy projects have been so effected. The extensive safety precautions taken on such projects are determined by awareness of all possible risks."

The speakers listed three principles that should be followed in regard to radiation exposure.

1. Exposure should be reduced to an absolute minimum.

2. The effects of radiation must be recognized as accumulative and scientist must be concerned with the lifetime burden of radiation.

3. An exposure to radiation must be decided upon in terms of benefits that may be derived from the exposure. Such decisions should be left up to the physican, dentist and safety engineers, and those professions concerned with environmental protection such as industrial gygienists and healtn physicists.

The title of Saturday's lecture was "Enviromental Measurement of Exposure: Units and Limits." The same two men will speak ntxt Saturday on "Environmental Measurement of Exposure: Instruments."

Other fourthcoming speakers in the series, atd their subjects, will be:

Dr. Charles Bream, UNC School of Medicine, and Dr. Richard Richardson, UNC School of Denisry, "How Safe Are Diagnostic x-ray Procedures?" Nov. 22.

Dr. Logan Irving, UNC School of Mellcine, "Ionizing Radiation and Cellular Metabolism," Nov. 29.

Dr. C. C. Congdon, Biology Division, Oak Ridge National Labratories, "Biological and Chemical Protection Aginst Ionizing Radiation. "Dec. 6.

Dr. Donald P. Costello, UNC Kenan professor of zoology, "Some Effects of Radiation on Animal Cells, Dec. 13.

There will be no lectures on Dec. 20 and 27 because of the Christmas holidays.

Armed Forces

Today is Veteran's Day, alias Armistice Day, alias Tuesday, for what needs to be said at this juncture could be said at any time and any place, but had better be acted upon soon.

Out on one of the fields of this University there will be a group of students marching. One group will wear blue uniforms; the other will wear bluish-gray. Both are in the process of defending the United States of America. All the students among the group are being partially or totally subsidized by federal funds. All are being trained.

Last week, the Air Force unveiled a fighter plane capable of flying at twice the speed of sound. This is an incredible achievement, but what is more incredible is the fact that this plane with the money and hours of planning and labor that went into it is obsolete or will be within six months. Yet, a mass of public funds went into its creation, and equal masses are going into the creation of items of warfare which will do nothing constructive but utilize some of the public funds to put many to work for the antieipation of a war in which the article that this many is working on will be useless.

The problems posed are three-fold. The ecomnic problem of a country built on military expenditure is primary. The problem of military planning is secondary. The problem of service organization is tertiary. The human factor counts as over and above all these three, and must be realized in connection with each.

In an article written by Felix Morley in Modern Age and given to all freshmen in the special fifty advanced group, the author points with some validity to the commitment that the United States has made to defense as being a necessity for the preservation of a national economic balance. In short, he points out that the United States is committed to preparaion for war.

He backs his up by showing the plight the United States would presently be in if armament spending would have not such a high priority on the list o appropriations. He shows a picture of massive unemployment and a recession that would not only curl one's hair but would no doubt make one bald. Forty billion dollars is a lot of money and supports many people.

If the country is so committed to a war economy then, how can the United States present a peace-loving face to other nations. The answer to this is simple. It can't. It tries quite hard, but it comes ensnarled in its own efforts whenever such questions as disarmament and cessation of testing comes up. The truth usually will come out, and it has done so on many occasions.

How can one reverse this trend? This is more difficult to answer, but can be. The trend can he reversed in several ways. First, legislators must realize that defense is not the only vital factor in the nations economy—that things such as foreign aid, school construction, and many others have as high or higher priority in making this country a vital force. They must cut through the swath of propaganda that makes every request respectable and needed in order to find out just exactly what is necessary and vital to the nation's defense, and in what areas America's competition is improving. It must channel what money is necessary into this area, but with an eye for the importance of such things as education. School construction, road building, and foreign aid may place American finances in different areas, but it will not radically endanger the American economy. At some time or another, the overall military establishment must be reduced and the money placed strategically. Not only will the people of the United States save money, but some of the more worthwhile goals America should be striving for—free and competent education for all to the best of each person's individual ability—might become a reality.

But how can one strategically place the needed defense money. The answer is not simple. It is even more complex when a report such as the Gaither report of Russian military strength has never been released so that the necessary facts are in the hands of the legislators. However, certain facts can be deducted.

The day of the manned aircraft is in its twilight if not already moved on into the day of the missile. Hence any increase or continuation of high level expenditure for the construction of airplanes is useless and a drain on the taxpayer.

The development of cruisers, destroyers, and aircraft carriers is likewise getting to be outdated as the Russians have realized long before us, and have been able to capitalize on by concentrating their naval force on submarine construction. Project Polaris, the submarine to air missile is the largest single worthwhile development of the present military establishment. Coupled with atomic submarine development, the Navy has shown at least in part a forward look.

The third factor that needs to be looked at is the army. There are two types of war to prepare for. In a limited war the readiness of only a limited amount of men is necessary to sustain the United States in a respectable "deefnsive posture" as George Washington put it in his Farewell Address.

Hence, the necessity for the draft as it is now, is somewhat limtied. If the war is to be

An Address

Marion A. Wright

(The following is the conslusion of an address made before the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Council on Human Relations)

We have been concerned thus far only with affirmative action to destroy constitutional rights, best typified by the decree, the edict or the legislative act. But such rights may also be negatively destroyed. Here the procedure is relatively simple. Merely fail to support or uphold the rights. The results are identical in either case; individuals have been denied rights which the Constitution and courts have said are theirs. There is no difference in morals or in practical effect between suspension of a constitutional right by formal decree, on the one hand, and by non-enforcement, on the other. The individual whose home has been searched without a warrant, whose printing presses have been stopped, or who has been kept out of a school is hardly concerned with the precise method used to deprive him of a right the Constitution and Court have said is his. All that concerns him is that he has been the victim of despotic power.

One struck by lightning is only academically interested in whether the bolt which hit him is positive or negative electricity.

Nor does the number of persons who exercised the power make any appreciable difference. It may be one man—a Hitler, a Mussolini or a Stalin—or it may be a few or many acting in concert—a governor and a legislature, or a school board—who have thus made a mockery of the constitution they were sworn to uphold. Tyranny is tyranny, whether or one or many.

There is no scale by which rights guaranteed by a constitution may be weighed and compared with each other. All are of equal sanctity, equally entitled to support. An assault upon one is an assault upon the Constitution itself. It is no more and no less reprehensible to strike down the right to attend a public school than to strike down the right of assembly or of worship.

Individuals who applaud the one run the grave risk that they will be confronted by other invasions not so agreeable. The people, beguiled in the one instance, may be shocked in others. Liberties perish not so much by inundation as by erosion.

Surely, it is not necessary tolabor an obvious point. The denial of the right of school attendance is a bald suspension of a constitutional right. But, as the dark and bloody record of tyranny reveals, one suspension is not enough. The attack upon the right of school attendance was merely the beginning. It has been followed by other gross invasions of personal liberty. Teachers' oaths; law requiring that organizations bare theri memberships; laws designed to forbid aid to litigants in Civil Rights cases; congressional and state inquisitions into groups favoring observance of law; discharge of professors, legal harassment of liberal or even moderate newspapers—there has been a host of repressive actions designed to stiffle dissent. Non-official action everywhere has been blown into flame. We in North Carolina have not stooped to much of this folly.

This violence to constitutional principles has been accomplished by the ancient technique of, frist, planting in men's minds fear of a minority, creating a bogeyman, and next, depicting its organizational spokesmen as menaces to "our institutions." If the shades of Hitler, or Mussolini, or Stalin could crawl up tot he edge of the pit they would confer their benediction upon what here transpires.

When those who now seek to deprive certain human beings of their rights first emerged into public notice—these governors, legislators, school boards—they were champions and protectors of the rights of all men. Such is the familiar and historic role of the demagogue. The people have nursed such men into power. Having been thus elevated, their true characters are revealed. What we now behold is the ugly image of tyranny.

Dress it up in all the pretty words in the dictionary, it is still tyranny. It follows the historic pattern. It uses the tools. Its leaders strike the poses. It seeks the same ends. Unchecked, it will run the same course.

It not only can happen here. It is happening here.

On Writing

Sidney Dakar

Recently a friend of mine said she was a poetess. At first thought I said that she wasn't, yet. I pointed out that even though she had written over thirty poems, some of them quite long, that she would have to sell some of them before she could really call herself a poetess.

After giving this some thought I realized how wrong my thinking had been. Why should selling poems be a criterion of sucess in this field, as indeed it is? If she believes she is a poetess and writes poems, which may or may not be called good by various people, then in reality she is a poetess.

Who is a critic to judge just how good a poem really is? Who has the right, merely by writing a critical review in the influential press, to make or break a young author? How do these critics know how much emotion was poured into these writings? True, any great writing must produce the same emotions in the reader as the author had while writing the work. But the critic can't possibly determine what affect the reading of a certain work will have on the millions of individuals that might read it. It seems to me that about (the only thing) the critic can do is to pass upon the technical construction of poetry.

Some of our greatest poems and novels in the world could not be sold for more than a few dollars, if at all. Many great manuscripts gathered dust for years before some publisher would even agree to pay the printing costs. Emily Bronte finally sold her WUTHERINGG HEIGHTS for about $10 of today's money. The publisher kept the work for several years and finally sold it back to Miss Bronte for the same price. Finally, it was published. At least one author, Maugham, thought that WUTHERING HEIGHTS was one of the ten best novels ever written. The list is endless of authors who died without a penny and without any recognition of their works. Now these authors are proclaimed masters of the craft, as I am sure many of the unknown authors of today will be in the year 2000.

Of course there is no absolute determination of greatness. Greatness is merely defined by the generation in question. The next few generations may and usually do have a completely different idea of greatness. It is too bad that the only scale of greatness our civilization has is fame.

On The Pasternak Award

Harrison Salisbury

In the fury of political propaganda set off by the award of the Nobel Prize for Literature there is serious danger that the nature of Boris Pasternak and his work may be cast into the shadow.

What the Nobel committee has done is to pay homage to the nobility of man, to the courage of the solitary hero, to the individual as opposed to the mob. It has honored not only a literary talent but a philosophy of life and a life lived accotding to that philosophy.

There has been some surprise that out of the charnel house of art erected by Stalin should arise a gift so free and vaulting, a mind that shrugs off shackls, a poet of humanity, a critic not only of the land which hedistinguishes by his presence but of the age and civilization of which he is a part.

Such surprise is rooted in an unawareness of the dialectics of nature and in an undertvaluation of the force of human spirit. Indeed, it may be that only in Russia, only in a soil deep scarred with ideological plows, could such genius be nurtured. The hardsh knout of Russian dictatorship has yielded uus a century of poets, philosophers, creators, and thinkers. If Czarist intrigue set the stage for the deaths of Pushkin and Lermontov, if Dostoievsky faced a Czarist firing squad and went in exile to Siberia, if Tolstoy, Chekhov, and Turgenev felt the hand of Russian censorship and Russian oppression the world engraved their names in golden letters. The names of their persecutors are long forgotten. Pasternak's life and work are in the great tradition.

The official Soviet detractors have said that in "Dr. Zhivago" Pasternak has betrayed the Bolshevik Revolution and provided his country's enemies with a useful weapon. Such rubbishy talk merely betrays how little these men understand what Pasternak is about.

It is true that he rejects "the modern coddling and worshiping of man," holding that such systems are based on a false premise and "pathetically amateurish." He has little faith in current practicts of social betterment in Russia, but he concedes that there have been "wonderful, unforgettable" achievements in the care of workers, the protection of mothers, and the curbing of the money power. Of the Revolution itself and of Lenin Pasternak speaks in terms of awe. His attack is against the miscarriage of the Revolution, against the "fanatical men of action with their one-track minds" who fill the world with fanaticism which "is worshiped for decades, thereafter for centuries." And he is repelled by the "revolutionary madness"—the mass guilt feeling which produced a compulsive desire to confess—even to confess false crimes.

Even these profound caveats are secondary, however, to the basic conflict between Pasternak and the order in which he finds himself. This conflict has to do with the nature of life and of living, of the relationship between the individual and society.

"Man," says Pasternak, "is born to life, not to prepare for life. Life, itself, the phenomenon of life, the gift of life is so breathtakingly serious. So why substitute this childish harlequinade of immature fantasies, these schoolboy escapades?

"When I hear people speak of reshaping life it makes me lose my self-control and I fall into despair," he says. "Reshaping life! People who can say that have never understood a thing about life—they have never felt its breath, its heartbeat, however much they may have seen or done. They look on it as a lump of raw material that needs to be processed by them, to be ennobled by their touch. But life is never a material, a substance to be molded . . . Life is constantly renewing and remaking and changing and transfiguring itself . . ."

Thus, Pasternak takes his stand and sets himself apart from the modern tendency, not only the tendency of his own country but the tendency of conformist, materialist America. The Soviet propagandists who suppose that Pasternak has merely stripped from Communist file its veil of sham and hypocrisyh ave missed the mark entirely. Pasternak's indictment covers the Organization Man as well as the Party Man.

"The fashion," he writes, "nowadays is all for groups and societies of every sort. Gregariousness is always the refuge of mediocrities, whether they swear by Soloviev or Kant or Marx. Only individuals seek the truth."

This is the heart of Pasternak. His lovers are concerned with "the riddle of life, the riddle of death, the enchantment of genius, the enchantment of unadorned beauty" and not with "the small worries of practical life—things like the reshaping of the planet." They live in the imminent presence of death. Tragedy is their chaperon. Lonely they live and lonely die. But in their life they are complete in themselves. They expect nothing and they are not disappointed. It is out of this solitary contemplation that Pasternak has gathered the strength to fulfill, as he says, his duty as a writer, to bear witness as an artist, to write of the times through which he has lived.

Perhaps, as Pasternak suggests, it is only when "all customs and traditions, all our way of life, everything to do with home and order, has crumbled into dust in the general upheaval and reorganization of society," only after the whole "human way of life has been destroyed and ruined" that we finally perceive "the naked human soul stripped to the last shred."

Such is Pasternak's message to the world—to his own Revolution-wracked Russia and to our slick technocratic society. It is probably only in the fire and stress of forty desperate years that this brave, resonant philosophy could be forged. Once again to Russia are we indebted for revealing to us the triumph of man over the world in which he lives. —From The Saturday Review

Letters To The Editor

You have proclaimed your desire to arouse the campus since the beginning of your campaign last year and you have tried to accomplish this in a great many ways this year, often using issues of questionable validity. Now you have dug to the bottom of the heap and come up with the nastiest insinuation of all. I am referring to your editorial of Nov. 5, concerning the bi-partisan board selections for candidates for Women's Honor Council. Had you taken the time to inquire about those things which you questioned, I think you would have seen for yourself that the implications in your questions were completely unfounded.

I don't intend to try to answer all of your questions because I'm sure the able chairman of Women's Honor Council can and will do a better job of it. I only wonder why you didn't do a little investigating before you isued forth your intimations.

As I recall from a high school journalism course, a good reporter (and I'm sure this would apply to editors, also) always find out "who, what, when, where, and why" before he writes the article. Perhaps a short review of these basics would be beneficial to you.

The campus has the right to know the news and I'm under the impresion that you are in charge of seeing that this right is fulfilled. Is it wrong to ask for a few answers and fewer questions?

full scale, the foot soldier will be of limited value, if of any value at all, since the war may last but a few days or less depending on how many nuclear missiles can be launched in how much time and how accurately they will be launched. There are those who would say that the two opposing governments may agree on ground rules respecting nuclear weapons, but there should be a reminder made that no weapon has ever been created that has not been used, and no weapon will not be used when a country is threatened by losing its identity, and the people in charge wih losing their power.

The United States under the present situation would probably be the first to use these weapons, for at present the U. S. is in a good position to be losing a war. Hence, a commitment to sheer manpower would be foolish. Hence although many key industries would suffer from loss of business, the country would not be weakened by shifting emphasis and cut back.

Finally, the government must realize that the threat of Communism is real, and the forces amassed against the United States are united in their defense and in their outlook. It would seem rather ridiculous at the present time for the United States military establishment to be divided against itself, but the fact remains that it is. The Army, Navy, and Air Force, not to mention the Marines are in a minor war against each other for supremacy, causing the United States no small amount of lost time, money, and knowledge in red tape, bickering, and research overlap. Internal competition is fine when it serves a purpose, but when it tears into the entire military establishment, it destroys the strength of the United States, and in doing so gives the best reason in the world for combining the three forces into one United States defense unit under a single head.

Veteran's Day

Veteran's Day was created in order to honor the Veterans of American Wars.

Originally it was Armistice Day, named to honor the World War I dead in the name of the day that ended that war.

It must today be set aside as a day of tragedy, where human life has been sacrificed or utilized for the ambitions of a few.

It must be looking forward to the day when men, turned rational, will be able to avert war, and breed understanding amongest the people of this world.

This is not too much to ask.

Communications

In this week's issue of The Reporter, Edward R. Murrow pointed a charge against the radio-television industries for their failure to grapple with the presentation of ideas on the air waves in favor of the western and soap operas.

Speaking of the industry, Murrow pointed to the complete lack of programming designed to shake the comfortable situation of the common American and awaken him to the realities of a troubled world in which he lives.

He told further of the complete lack of news presentation unbroken by commercials, and the increase of the five-minute news broadcast in which the resultant program is something less than what should be news—informing the public adequately.

He showed ironically how the Federal Communications Commission was urging editorialization since none was voluntarily coming from the networks.

The problem of the communications industries is acute. Only on Sunday afternoon are people subjected to anything worthwhile, and much of this is watered down to be uncontroversial.

Mr. Murrow has himself presented chal lenging programs and, as a result, his See It Now is no longer being televised.

Mr. Murrow said rightly that the communications industry will one day reap the reward for their lack of endeavor. The reward may well be the decay of American democracy.

As Mr. Murrow says, the economic dent in the network budget would not be so great as to prohibit more serious fare on television. Maybe his words will be heeded.

For the first time since 1947, in the heyday of Choo Choo Justice, a Carolina football team has won six straight games. Each week the wins have become more convincing, and this great record is not going unnoticed. At least three bowls (Sugar, Orange, and Gator) have indicated an interest in the Tar Heels, but most are adopting a "wait and see" attitude pending the outcome of Carolina's next two contests.

At Virginia three units rolled over the helpless Cavaliers with almost equal ease. Everybody looked good. With Reece Whitley on the sidelines manning a telephone, Virginia was never in the ballgame.

HELP FOR CUMMINGS

Help appears ready for workhorse Jack Cummings in the person of soph Skip Clement. The youngster from Westbury, N.Y., had quite a day for himself after looking good all week in practice. Clement completed 7 passes out of 9 attempts for 129 yards and one touchdown. The TD toss was a beaut, as Clements hit Don Kemper in the end zone just as he himself was tackled by a Virginia defender.

Rabo Walton, another soph quarterback, also looked very good in completing 2 of 4 pitches and gaining 23 yards in 3 carries along the ground.

DECANTIS SCORES

Emil DeCantis, perhaps the most underrated player on the squad, rolled up one touchdown and two 2-point conversions for high scoring honors with 10. Another soph, Milan Wall, grabbed off three passes and turned in some fine runs.

The lines, all three of them, looked like the proverbial brick wall. Virginia couldn't move the ball through, around or over the Carolina defense.

SCHROEDER OUT FOR NOTRE DAME

John Schroeder, the fine sophomore end who earned a starting position and has performed brilliantly, suffered an injured knee which puts him definitely out of action for Notre Dame, and posibly out for the season. This come as a severe blow to the Tar Heels, though Don Kemper or Mac Turlington will surely play well in his place.

The Bull, Don Klochak, after thrilling fans by romping 59 yards for a touchdown on the first play from scrimmage which was later called back, still proceeded to rack up 62 yards on 6 carries for an average of 10.3. Wade Smith trotted off with 40 yards on 6 carries.

NOTRE DAME BEATER

Elsewhere, Notre Dame lost a heartbreaker to Pitt by 26-23 in a hard-fought contest. Some figure the Irish may snap back strong this week-end, but they must be physically tired after such an effort. Georgia Tech handed Clemson its second loss in three games. The Tigers haven't looked at all good lately, failing to score against both South Carolina and Tech and edging Wake Forest by two points.

With the exception of Schroeder, the Tar Heels figure to be in just about peak physical shape for Notre Dame barring injuries this week in practice.

NEXT WEEK THE BIG ONE

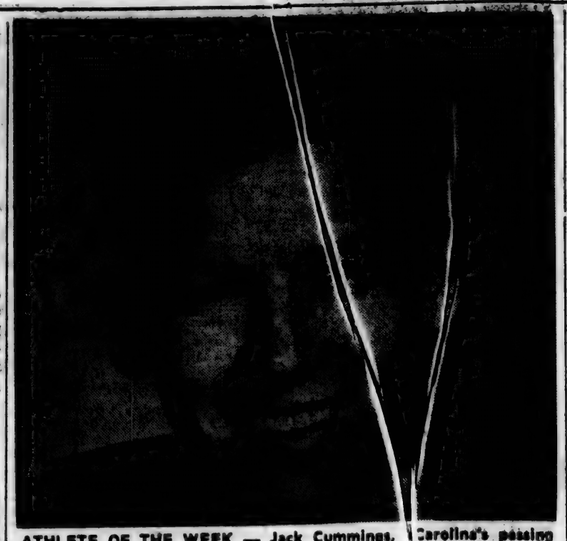
The Notre Dame game shapes up as the biggest one of the year for Carolina, if not for the Irish also. This will be the proving ground for the Tar Heels, it should answer a lot of questions as to just how good this Chapel Hill team is. Many feel the six-game skein is just a freak, and that they haven't played anyone of note anyway. Saturday the doubting Thomases will be answered one way or another.

The game wil be just as big in the way of individual duels. Notre Dame flash George Izo will be trying his quarterbacking skill against that of proven Jack Cummings. Don Klochak's counterpart for the Irish will be All-American Nick Pietrosante. Both teams are also noted as having two of the finest lines to be found anywhere. But the best team will win, and it will take a great team effort for either to emerge victorious.

THE UNIVERSITY GETS TOUGH

We take a rather dim view of the way the University handled the Virginia game. The students did not turn out in such numbers as was previously expected, mainly because they had to go to class Saturday. For the first time in several years, there was no official Caravan. The Virginia game was supposed to be the Caravan and busses and tickets were scheduled, but students felt they must remain at home rather than take the cuts.

So, at the last minute, many decided to stay at home and watch the game on television rather than take cuts by going to Virginia. We realize that football is not more important than scholastics. It appears to us, however, that the University could certainly have afforded one day of free cuts for the student body in view of the circumstances.



ATHLETE OF THE WEEK — Jack Cummings, Carolina's passing magician and expert ball-handler, is Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week after his fine performance against Virginia. Cummings completed 4 of 6 passes for two touchdowns and two extra points.

Cummings Chosen Athlete Of Week

Jack Cummings, one of the nation's leading quarterbacks who has guided his Tar Heel teammates to 6 straight wins, is the Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week.

Cummings' fine passing and play-calling was instrumental in getting the Heels off on the right foot at Virginia, eventually leading to a 42-0 rout of the Cavaliers.

Cummings threw Don Kolochak at the Cavaliers the first play from scrimmage and the Bull responded by romping 59 yards for a touchdown. When the play was called back because of a penalty, Cummings refused to give up and on sucessive running plays guided his mates to the Virginia 8. Then once again he fed to Klochak who blasted over for the first of many Tar Heel scores.

In the second quarter Cummings struck through the air after an intervening Skip Clement to Don Kemper pass had netted a second touchdown. Jack got his pass off from the Cavalier 10 just as he was hit, but it was still a perfect strike to the waiting Hamill DeCantis in the end zone.

Cummings passed twice more to touchdown. In the second half, the Tar Heel wizard pitched a 63-yard scoring pass to Al Goldstein to drive the final nail into the Virginia coffin and erace any doubts as to the final outcome.

Cummings also did most of the punting in the early part of the game, getting off several good kicks. His total passing record for the game reads: four completions of six tries for 62 yards, two touchdowns and two conversions.

Jack Cummings is the lad who came off the bench last year to supply the needed spark at quarterback after Dave Reed and Curt Hathaway were out for the season.

Cummings is a 6-2 183-pound junior from Lower Merion, Pa. He was president of the Sophmore class last year and was married to his high school sweetheart last summer.

Pogo Originator Walt Kelley Will Speak, Sketch Tonight

Tonight is the night.

Walt Kelly speaks tonight at Hill Hall.

Pogo originator Kelly will speak and sketch tonight as the Carolina Forum's second presentation for the fall. The time for the address, which is open to the public, is 8 p.m.

Kelly makes about 50 speeches each year before college students and faculty groups, hospital patients, professional societies and conventions. The Pogo creator has circled the world twice. His most recent trip around the world was spent adressing cultural groups and gathering material for a new book.

As of Jan. 12, 1958, Pogo books reached a sales of nearly 2.5 million. He has published a book of 30 original songs and music and a long-playing record of 18 of the songs.

Of course, Kelly's fame started with his Pogo comic strip which now appears in 507 newspapers in the United States and abroad.

OTHER CAMPAIGNS

Besides the presidential campaign of 1956, other Pogo campaigns include the Department of Labor campaign for manpower, a campaign for the Treasury Department's Savings Bonds drive and Life magazines attempt to convince the public to use common sense and caution on Asian flu.

For the Labor Department campaign (Stay in School and Graduate) Kelly was given a special award for his work. Pogo praised the value of a high school diploma through radio, newspapers, television, posters and stickers and a cartoon which was carried in 600 newspapers.

'Get Tough' Car Policy Announced

Holt Patterson, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, yesterday announced a "get tough" policy regarding violators of car registration rules.

Patterson hit at the student who has his car registered in another student's name. Both student's are liable for trial before Honor Council, he said.

This "get tough" policy won't go into effect until Saturday, thus giving students an opportunity to report themselves to Ray Jefferits, assistant to the dean of student affairs. If this "reporting" is done before Saturday, Nov. 15, the students will not go before Honor Council, Patterson said.

IMMEDIATE ACTION

"The Honor Councils will no longer ignore flagrant attempts by members of the student body to illegally possess a car on this campus but initiate action immediately," he said.

The policy statement from Patterson was made because "some concreaf policy by the Honor Councils should be stated and adhered to by the members of the student body."

The violations referred to by Patterson stem from the law passed in 1956 by UNC students and approved by the University trustees. This rule bans the use of cars to all freshmen as well as sophomores not having a "C" average.

Jordan Vows To Charge Syria With Act Of Aggression On King

Premier Rifai Tells Parliament Government To Go Before U.N.

AMMAN — (AP) — Premier Samir Rifai told a cheering emergency session of Parliament Tuesday night Jordan will accuse Syria of an act of aggression for intercepting King Hussein's vacation-bound plane.

Thunderous applause greeted his announcement that the government would bring the case before the U.N. Security Council and ask Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold to take quick measures for a debate.

Parliment then unamiously adopted a resolution giving the government a free hand to take any action necessary in the new crisis.

The premier spoke as the country went on a spree of celebration.

A national holiday was declared to celebrate the adventurous young king's escape from what he charged was an attempt to kidnap or kill him in a flight over Syria Monday.

DARING HERO

Hussein, who celebrated his birthday Friday, emerged as a daring Moslem hero for defying the Sryian MIG fighters and making a sucessful getaway.

Some officials suggested President Nasser's United Arab Republic—of which Syria is a province—attempted to kidnap the pro-Western king and force him to abdicate in favor of a friendly regime.

There were clear indications that if this was the plot—and the U.A.R. denies any such plot—that it backfired. The young monarch gained popular support for his determined stand of independence from Nasserism.

While Jordians celebrated in a carnival spirit mixed with bitter demonstrations aginst Syria, two British jet fighters flew into Amman.

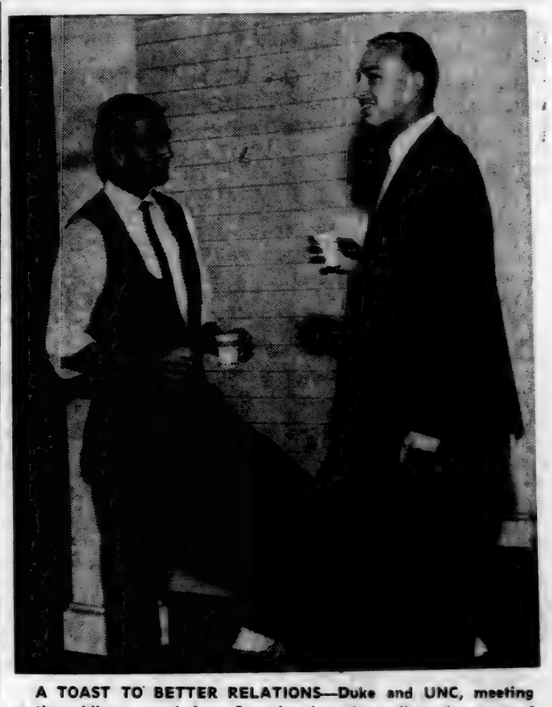
They are the first of 12 Hawker Hunters being given Jorden under the U.S.-British military aid program.

Syrian Paper Says Hussein Wasn't Aboard

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — The newspaper Al Alam said Tuesday Jordan's King Hussein was not aboard the plane intercepted by United Arab Republic fighters Monday.

The newspaper declared the incident was a plot "engineered in agreement with the U. S. and British ambassadors in Amman in an attempt to rekindle the tension between the U.A.R. and Jordan."

The paper said Hussein never really intended to leave the country on vacation, because "he is aware that even his close supporters are plotting to dethrone him in favor of his younger brother, Prince Hassan, under a regency council."



A TOAST TO BETTER RELATIONS—Duke and UNC, meeting on the gridiron a week from Saturday, have been discussing ways of turning spectator enthusiasm into good sportsmanship. Duke's Pep Board Chairman, Ty Heinekens (left) is shown with University Club President Dave Jones. Heinekens spoke to the University Club last night and urged both schools to avoid vandalism at the game.

16 Candidates Fail To Attend Compulsory Meeting Monday

The Elections Board announced yesterday that 16 candidates for office in the Nov. 18 campus elections did not attend Monday's compulsory candidates' meeting.

These 16 must submit a written excuse and a five-dollar fine to the student government office or Bob Furtado, chairman of the Elections Board, by 7 p.m. today or else be dropped as candidates.

Students not attending the meeting Monday night, according to the Elections Board, were: Ray Bagwell, Susan Cordin, Patty Faires, R. V. Fulk, Ira Hardy, Lou Harvin, Howard Holderness;

Everette James, Dave Jones, Ann Lucas, Joe Mazzei, DeWitt McCotter, Ann Mills, Bob Pearce, Tony Salinger and Bob Turner.

Five UNC novice debaters will take part in the 1958 "Carolina Forensics" to be held Friday and Saturday at the University of South Carolina in Columbia.

Charles Carroll of Thomasville and Russel Eisenman of Savannah, Ga., will form the affirmative team. The two freshmen won a superior team rating at a recent tournament at Wake Forest College.

The negative team members are Jeffrey Lawrence of Washington, D. C., and Joseph Roberts of Aurora, Colo.

'Beat Dook' Parade Set For Friday

The PiKA's traditional "Beat Dook" float parade will march through Chapel Hill streets Friday, Nov. 21, at 3 p.m.

The planning for the parade and the annual "Beat Dook" beauty contest is being completed by members of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

David Grigg, in charge of arrangements for the parade and beauty contest, yesterday announced several deadlines and other details.

The deadline for beauty contestants is Friday, Nov. 14. Floats must be entered by Tuesday, Nov. 18. These entries will be taken by David Grigg, in 312 Ruffin, or at the PiKA house.

Dorms or sororities or fraternities entering floats in the parade may enter one contestant each in the beauty contest.

The divisions for entries has been changed slightly. This year, for the first time, men's and women's dorms will work together on submitting a float. This is being done, Grigg said, to encourage more participation. The other three divisions are: men's dorms

HARVARD DEAN — American Education Week is being observed here, highlighted by the annual fall convocation of the School of Education tomorrow afternoon. Dean Francis Keppel of Harvard University's Graduate School of Education will address the convocation at 3 p.m. in Carroll Hall auditorium, speaking on "The Importance of Professional Preparation in Education." The program is open to the public.

Deadline For Telegram Is Extended One Day

The deadline for a telegram urging the Tar Heel football team to victory in Saturday's battle with Notre Dame has been extended one day, said University Club President Dave Jones.

Each name costs ten cents, and all organizations have been asked to turn in their money to the student affairs office by 3 p.m. Friday.

Racial Tension Meeting To Be Held At Pfeiffer

UNC students have an opportunity to attend a conference on racial tensions during the Thanksgiving holidays at Pfeiffer College in Misenheimer, according to Ed Levy, National Student Assn. coordinator.

Levy said yesterday any interested student should sign up with the secretary in the student government office in Graham Memorial. Room and board expenses will be paid through a grant from the Field Foundation.

150 GOING

A total of 150 students from 75 southern colleges and universities (including UNC) will be present for the conference Nov. 28-30.

Several student leaders from all parts of the South have met together during the past year to discuss the relation of students to racial tensions confronting southern campuses.

This conference is being sponsored by southern divisions of the United States National Student Assn., YMCA, United Student Christian Council, National Federation of Catholic College Students and the American Friends Service Committee.

The November conference will be titled "The College Student in the Changing South: a consideration of racial tensions confronting the southern campus." The purposes of the meeting, as stated by a group of southern student leaders in Atlanta last spring are:

1. To bring together people of good will to discuss problems arising out of racial tensions in the South:

2. To develop a fuller understanding of the problems involved through the interaction of fact and varying opinions;

3. To consider possible solutions of human relations problems confronting the southern campus and community; and

4. To foster an opportunity for exchange of ideas between student leaders who come from all parts of the region.

NO RESOLUTIONS

The conference will be devoted to the discussion of problems and their solution and will not engage in legislative action, debate or the passage of resolutions. Each participant will represent his own views and opinions, not his college or university, Levy said.

The conference will be interracial, planned by southern students with only southern college students invited to participate. He said this will be an "open conference" with no predetermined commitment to any one point of view.

Fourth Concert To Be Given Next Tuesday

The University String Quartet will present the fourth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series in Hill Hall, Nov. 18 at 8 p.m.

Quartet members, Edgar and Dorothy Alden, Jean Heard, and Mary Gray Clarke, will perform Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 132; Boccherini's Quartet, Op. 32, No. 4; and Debussy's Quartet, Op. 10.

Both Dr. Alden and Miss Clarke are members of the UNC Music Department.

Dr. Alden is former concert master of the N. C. Symphony and of the Mozart Festival Orchestra in Ashville.

Mrs. Alden, violist and teacher of strings in Chapel Hill, has also held first chair position in the N. C. Symphony and the University Symphony.

Mrs. Heard, second violinist, studied with the late Ottokar Cadek of the University of Alabama and with Mischa Mischakoff at the Juliard School of Music in New York.

Miss Clarke, first cellist with the University Symphony, holds a master's degree from the Manhatten School of Music, and has performed in concerts in Germany as well as in this country.

Khrushchev's Latest Declaration Could Carry Grave War Danger

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev seems to be setting the stage for a major effort to force the Western powers out of Berlin.

The showdown this effort will produce may be slow in coming, perhaps one to three years. But it will probably carry the greatest danger of all-out war between the Soviet and western blocs that the world has seen for a long time.

TAKEN SERIOUSLY

Those are the estimates made here Tuesday of the future significance of the latest moves in Moscow and western capitals over the fate of divided Berlin. American officials take seriously Khrushchev's Monday announcement that the Russians intend to turn over administration of East Berlin to the Communist authorities of East Germany.

The timing of his declaration may have been determined by interest in fostering Soviet ties with Communist Poland. Russian attempts to settle German issues could be construed in Poland as being designed to pave the way for peaceful settlements and a demilitarized zone along the cold war front in Europe.

But the best informed authorities here said today they had no doubt that in the long run Khrushchev will undertake the serious attempt to force the western powers out of Berlin and build up the prestige of the Soviet dominated regime there by making the East German government supreme in the city.

The United States, Britain and France have occupied the city jointly with Soviet Russia since the end of World War II, and U. S. and British spokesmen Monday night turned down Khrushchev's demand for an end to the occupation. The State Department reasserted the U. S. policy of fighting if necessary to preserve western interests in the city which is entirely surrounded by East German territory.

Khrushe's latest maneuver had been foreshadowed by East German propaganda attacks on the western position in Berlin. However, some authorities here see it significantly against a background of failures by the Soviet Communist high command during the past year of "Sputnik diplomacy" to make any really important or profitable gains in the drive to expand Red power.

While it is true that the Soviets have built up their influence in the Middle East at the expense of western power since 1955, for example, it is also true that the most recent crisis centering on the revolt in Iraq and the landing of U. S. and British troops in Lebanon and Jordan did not produce any great net gain for Moscow.

NO FORMOSA GAIN

The same assessment may also be made of the outcome of the latest Formosa crisis as it stands to date. The Chinese Reds, with an involvement of Soviet military aid and prestige, were unable to make the Chinese Nationalists and the United States pull away from Quemony and Matsu by use of force. The Chinese Reds also failed to talk the United States into pulling its forces out of South Korea although they claimed they had moved out of North Korea.

By contrast with these probings and pressures the East-West front in Europe has been relatively quiet in the last decade.

In the view of many top authorities here the cold war front in Germany has always been the most dangerous area of East-West conflict because of the stakes involved.

Essentialy, these stakes are control of the western Europe and the political and military resources of the western European countries by Moscow.

No one here thinks that Khrushchev deliberately wants to start a war over Berlin but believe he would be willing to risk a war if he was convinced he had a fair chance of coming through the crisis as the winner of most of the stakes—for example, with Communism dominant in West Germany and a threat to the rest of Europe.

Carter, Henry Plan To Leave For Convention

UNC represeentatives will join student union leaders from the colleges of the Southeast in a district convention at the University of Kentucky in Lexington, Ky.

Bob Carter, Graham Memorial Activities Board president, and Howard Henry, director of the student union, will leave the Raleigh-Durham Airport at 8:50 a.m. tomorrow for the District 4 convention.

The three-day meet, tomorrow through Saturday, will include discussions of programming and operations. Carter was requested by Paul Adams, region 4 president of Auburn, to lead a discussion on the "crystalization of ideas through effective orientation programs."

Carter said the UNC deligation was not very large because the budget did not include such travel expenditures. He added that in the future some action may be taken to improve the situation. The convention last year was held at Duke University and a large number of delegates were sent from UNC.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday include:

Alfriedia Joyce Patterson, Marcia Elizabeth Klinge, Lucy Ann Forsyth, Barbara Ray Deans, Robert Douglas Gillikin, Haywood Vernon Norwood, Mary Randall Anderson, Frank Webb McCracken, Benjamin Casey Herring, Michael George Widoff, James Frank Page, Boris Pasternak, Cary Erwin Matthews, Walter Harold Lasater, Michael John Swain and Komal Harry Doen.

Of Myths

The majority of people are living in a world of myth.

They peer through a clouded windshield, imagine they see reality, and are happy in the warmth of the radiator.

Outside it is cold, the wind is howling and the snow falling. Ice, an inch thick, covers the road, but the car and its occupant move on without fear or knowledge.

The side of the road drops off a hundred feet into a river, and on the other side of the road is a solid rock wall, and the ice still covers the road.

The car and its occupants are going to town, to the movie, to ice skate, or some other diversion in the contentment of riding on modern sciences finest snow tread tires.

Someday, some place, the car will skid. It will plunge over the edge into the river. It will smack against the rock wall. Or it will smash into an equally unseeing car coming from the other side, but the prospect does not bother the driver. He does not think that far.

Occasionally a cold blast of air comes through the vent, but the driver will only swear loudly and put a stronger piece of cardboard over the vent. He will then drive on unconcerned.

He knows where he is going, and he knows not. He has direction, and he has not. He is living, and he is not.

The majority of people are insulated from reality by a solid mass of self-built blubber. From childhood they have learned what is right, what is wrong, and what counts, and have accepted the word of authority without a mutter, much less a question.

They are directed, and accept direction. They live in a world centuries old, and never awaken to the real world.

They are afraid of their own shadow, and are afraid to speak out lest they hear their own voice.

They see the world in their image — their image borrowed from their forefathers, from the newspapers, from the television, and from in general others.

The image is comfortable. The verities never change. They are not to be doubted.

Their life is spent building that wall of blubber to insulate themselves from reality. They are concerned with social graces when the lives of billions are at stake. They are directed to capital accumulation when there is a need for courageous ideas. They are attuned to being silent. Their talk reflects the idle patter of a sixth grader, and they never leave the rut.

They never emerge from the hole of decadence, blindness, and complacency. They never once open their eyes.

Occasionally one small voice in society speaks with the authority of truth, and they are uncomfortable. They do not think, but build a further wall of rationalization so that this truth cannot reach them in the same spot again. Some insulate through anger, some through circuitous logic, some by hot air.

In this miasma, the world lives. Often from the sheer momentum of its own boredom, the people try to escape into the further unrealities of entertainment, but here is always a return to the barren trivial life of before

People need to be told what they are. They need to be shocked out of their pants, but there are so few to do the shocking.

They need to be told that when they say "realistic", they have no idea of reality, and when they say "practical", the practice is applied to a situation that does not exist.

They should awake of themselves, but won't, and when told, they cannot understand. And those who tell never achive their purpose, — that of awakening the sleepers.

Valkyries

Something must be done about the Valkyries' gongs before they kill some of the people that they want in their order.

However, one favorable commentary that can be made is the initiation of Miss Julia Staples. After having worked with Miss Staples for a summer, her selection can only be termed as deserved.

Congratulations are in order for a truly wonderful person.

SP—The Candidates Speak—UP

This is the first in a series of articles covering the Student Legislature campaign district-by-district. The Daily Tar Heel will interview each candidate for legislature, asking each candidate three questions on issues that have been important on this campus in the past and are important at the present time. In each district, all candidates will be asked the same three questions from a list of some 15 questions to be asked all candidates. In this way The Daily Tar Heel hopes that both the candidates point of view and the major issues will be brought into focus. The series is being compiled by Dee Daniels and Stan Fisher, and begins today with Men's Dormitory Districts I and II.

Dorm Men's I

In Dorm Men's I, the two Student Party candidates running for one-year seats are Tom Cordle and Joe Mazzei.

The three questions asked these candidates for this district were:

(1) How do you feel about the athletic system presently in effect?

(2) What, in your opinion, is the relationship of the University to the town with regard to parking on campus?

(3) What, in your opinion, would be the best type of cut system?

Tom Cordle

Cordle, a junior from Charlotte, answered the questions by saying:

"I like the athletic system here at the present time. I believe that 'big time sports' have a place here on campus. A 'big time' football team is needed to help defray the other sports such as soccer, wrestling, cross country and the freshman sports. I don't believe that an athlete should get any special consideration in the class room. A good athletic program raises the campus spirit and therefore helps all phases of the University."

"I believe that on campus parking is the concern of the University. I think that money received from violators of the on campus parking rules should go to the University and be used in the improvement of the present parking facilities and also such areas dealing with traffic on campus as fixing the road through the woods to the new dorms."

"A type of cut system which would allow a student a reasonable number of cuts is the best type cut system. It is hard to define reasonable but I think that most Carolina students are able to decide for themselves how often to go or not to go to class. To me a reasonable number would be seven, eight, or nine with some restrictions placed on those students who fail the first hour quiz. With the present system some students are allowed no cuts which I think is very unfair and demanding. I think that the Carolina students should work toward a system of unlimited cuts. Starting with a reasonable number is one way to begin work toward the goal of unlimited cuts."

Joe Mazzei

Joe Mazzei, is a freshman from Fals Church, Va. Mazzei, in answering the questions, said:

"It's nice to have a team that wins ,but I don't think that we should go too far with 'Tatum's educational fund.' Also the attitude of some of the departments to each other is not as it should be, such as trying to tell someone how to run his department. For example, there are a couple of cases of people, really good in one thing or another, who have been cut out of something because of this inter-department attitude."

"I don't think the town should be getting the parking ticket fines, they should go to the university. One of the reasons that I feel this is the installation of parking meters in town. It is also wrong, in my opinion, to fine or give tickets to people who are citizens of Chapel Hill and have to run some errand on campus. There should be a centrally located parking lot for just these people."

On the best cut system, Mazzei said, "I believe that a student should be able to cut a class as many times as he wishes, just as long as he is able to pass a final exam with the same marks that he could get by attending all of his class meetings, and is able to keep up in the required homework assignments."

Dorm Men's II

In Dorm Men's II, Roger Foushee and Jim Crownover are the SP candidates running for one-year seats. In this district the three questions asked the candidates were:

(1) Are you for deferred rush?

(2) How should quiet in the dorms—if there is a problem—be enforced?

(3) What do you think about loyalty oaths?

Jim Crownover

Jim Crownover, is a junior from Asheville.

Speaking on deferred rush, Crownover said, "In principle, I favor deferred rush. However, and more practically, I do not think that deferred rush, at this time, is feasible because of the lack of funds to accomplish the move. If money could be provided from some outside source for the purpose of helping financially less stable fraternities through the first difficult year, I would definitely favor deferred rush.

On quiet in the dorms, he said, "First of all, there is most definitely a problem of lack of quietness in the dorms. As for the matter of enforcement, I would like to go on record as praising Rudy Edwards, in particular, and the IDC, in general, for their formulation of the Dormitory Council Court system. I am a firm believer in the DCC, and I also think that individual dorms will be able to work out their own problems better when they do it completely outside the realm of the rest of the campus.

Crownover continued on the question of loyalty oaths, saying, "I am in favor of loyalty oaths. I think that a person who is employed by the state of North Carolina should be willing to uphold its Constitution. I do recognize the freedom of speech and do not feel that this is the issue herein involved. I respect an instructor's right to present both sides of an issue, but I definitely feel that the same instructor should be restricted in what he says when it comes to matters concerning the overthrow of the federal government and disloyalty to the state Constitution."

Roger Foushee

Foushee, a current legislator, is a junior from Burlington. His replies to the questions were:

"The principal function of a University is to educate the students therein. Anything which hinders or is detrimental to this purpose should be corrected. To subject a freshman, just out of a completely different academic environment, to the choice of visiting a great number, if lucky, of fraternity houses and finally choose the one he wants the first or second week he is in school is to jeopardize his academic standards. Delaying the formal period of rush is certainly desirable for the general welfare of the student body. I admit, however, that there are certain economic factors which fraternities face. These must be studied and solutions found for them! Then we shall see the whole student body benefit by a delayed period of rush!

"There is definitely a problem of noise in dorms, especially those of the single long corridor. The origin of noise is quite an indictment of our scholastic atmosphere. Of course, a certain amount of activity will create noise, part of this to be expected. But a group within the dorm should be created to set up and enforce strict adherence to quiet hours, rules that have 'teeth.' This is too big a task to ask an IDC representative to do individually. The social stigma is too great. But a court of the dorm who can and will expel a 'trouble-maker' can bear this brunt. Quiet hours must be maintained if we are to fulfill our function of a University .

"Many of us may have forgotten the late Sena-

Dorm Men's I

Running on the UP ticket for the two 1-year Legislature seats in Dorm Men's I are Don Hayes and Randall Johnson.

The questions posed these candidates were:

(1) How do you feel about the athletic system presently in effect?

(2) What is the relationship of the University and town with regard to parking on campus?

(3) What would be the best type of cut system?

Don Hayes

Hayes, a freshman from Belmont, says:

"Tatum and the other coaches were hired to produce winning teams. How they go about this, as long as it is legal, is their business. There should be a closer connection between athletes and student government. Possibly there could be some type of council to develop a closer feeling.

"The parking problem on campus should be the concern especially of the town of Chapel Hill. Presently the town doesn't realize this and has made moves which further hindered the problem. The town should be made aware of the fact that the campus parking problem is also their responsibility and should work to help alleviate the problem.

"A cut system should allow a minimum of three cuts for each class and any over that, should be between the teacher and the student."

Randall Johnson

Johnson, a freshman from Garner, replied by saying:

"I think it (the athletic system) is improving due to the fact that coaches are stressing better grades. Also, football players are participating in more activities. As a result, representation of the school by the team is being improved.

"I think fines should be paid to the University instead of the town to use for improved parking facilities on campus. Our big problem now is lack of parking space.

"I think professors should make courses interesting enough that students wouldn't want to cut. In required courses, students should not cut because they need this background. In more advanced courses (not required) the decision to cut or not should be left up to the student."

Dorm Men's II

John Frye and Allen Hornthal are the candidates from Dorm Men's II for the two 1-year seats.

They considered the following questions:

(1) Are you for deferred rush?

(2) How should quiet in the dormitories—if there is a problem—be enforced?

(3) What do you think about loyalty oaths?

John Frye

Frye, a freshman hailing from Hickory, answered the preceding questions as follows:

"Deferred rush would be good in that it would allow time for freshmen to adjust to college life, but there are two reasons which make me opposed to it at the present time. First, it would be difficult to maintain such a long period of strict silence; and second, the present financial conditions of the fraternities make it necessary that the fraternities take pledges as soon as possible.

"Quiet in the dormitory should be enforced by the DCC and the IDC because this is a student problem and should be handled by student representatives, as Honor Code violations are dealt with by students, not the administration.

"I think the loyalty oath should be required because of the influence an instructor has over his students. Precautions should be taken to employ only those professors who would set good examples for their students. It is not unreasonable to demand that a professor pledge his loyalty to the Constitution."

Allen Hornthal

This and other disadvantages make deferred rush impossible to begin at the University without harm to the fraternities.

"There is a problem of excessive noise in the dormitories. If enforced to a greater degree of efficiency, the present system should take care of this problem. Another help would be to give greater authority to the dormitory counselors.

"Loyalty oaths are definitely outdated. However something to achieve their purpose should replace them. I suggest a definite screening process of all prospective teachers of the University."

Hornthal, also a freshmen, is from Tarboro, his opinions on the same questions are:

"In my opinion, deferred rush has definite advantages. The present system is far from perfect. It is very feasible that the rushee and the fraternity are both at a disadvantage under it. However, without a pledge class at the beginning of a semester, a fraternity's financial status would be wrecked tor McCarthy and his righteous campaign to 'defend America,' even, mind you, if we had to destroy part of its Bill of Rights, the 5th amendment. In the first place, one who is really out to overthrow the government by violent means will have absolutely no qualms of conscience about signing a loyalty oath. It will mean nothing to him anyway. Therefore loyalty oaths cannot possibly fulfill their original purpose, 'To keep communists out of our schools.' Secondly, loyalty oaths are a direct invasion of one's academic freedom. A scholar must have complete freedom to analyze any and all concepts and ideas; he must never be forced to accept something he has not come to in his own reasoning. The only loyalty oath required in a democracy should be the willfully law-abiding citizen who is free to hold divergent views if he so desires. That is, unless one thinks we have the truth already and don't need to search further. Man never has the truth but life must be a continuous search for Truth.

"This is the spirit that keeps our University alive. Is the University to seek after truth or to be merely the mouthpiece for existing public ideas? When one signs a loyalty oath here he pledges support of a state constitution which condemns as immoral public inter-racial affairs. Is this immoral just because the state says so? Loyalty oaths jeopardize the true academic freedom of a University. When our spirit of a University is gone, then the great experiment of democracy will also be gone. God willing, that day shall never descend upon us.

Radicleer

Cort Edwards I

There are two groups of people that are finding themselevs isolated from the rest of society because of the paths they have chosen to follow.

These two groups, minority groups to be sure, are the college educated women and the non-educated men. Both are at extreme and opposite ends of a "loneliness" scale.

However, many more people from all walks of life have been smitten by this "aloneness" but very few people are actually aware of what ails them and even less try to do anything to combat it.

Loneliness can be a very deadly thing.

Let's go back and see what loneliness is, it's cause, and how it affects people. Perhaps one of the best ways to discuss such a topic is through the use of an analogy.

It is my hypothesis that each individual (either male or female) is born into this world as an ISLAND unto himself (used generically). In order for him to survive he just build BRIDGES (lines of communication) to other islands.

The first bridge he must build is that bridge between himself and his mother (or a mother substitute). Through the use of this bridge his basic needs are attended to, and with luck he survives.

The child doesn't actually build a bridge, instead he opens the circle of his "self" personality just enough so that his mother may construct a bridge over to him. The result is the same, and communication is established. One might call his "negative bridge building."

As he grows older he builds more and more bridges; first to his immediate family group, and then later to his playmates, schoolmates, etc.

By the time this person reaches his late teens or early twenties he should have built enough bridges so that he has self-confidence and faith in his fellow man. Building bridges for this person should become a matter of course. If these bridges are adequate then he will be a well-adjusted individual.

Unfortunately, this type of well-adjusted person is becoming a rarity in our culture.

Many boys (and even more girls) at this age are burning down the old bridges that have become too painful. For example, they are breaking away from an unhappy home and striking out for themselves. Others are tearing down or at least loosening their end of the bridges with islands such as the church, the opposite sex, the community, or cultural ideals.

Many young people today are thrown into an entirely new environment (such as college or into a business) and have discovered that it is most difficult to build new bridges and they are afraid to open themselves up so that a bridge may be built over to them. They are afraid of being hurt! When they were younger they were probably overprotected and it was the other people that did most of the bridge building upon their shores. Because of this over-protectedness, they never fully learned how to build solid bridges by themselves.

In any event, the person who finds himself unable to build lasting bridges or even any bridges with those around him or who finds himself unrelated to the various types of groups in his new environment, invariably discovers that he is alone.

He is a social isolate. He is spiritually and emotionally living in a void.

Before we go any further, let us examine these bridges.

There are two general types of bridges that the individual must build and each bridge can be constructed with a varying degree of strength which may range from a temporary board-over-the ditch type of bridge, to a giant superstructure type bridge that can withstand all opposition.

The first type is the INTEREST bridge. These bridges are impersonal, very easily constructed and generally are not very enduring. They are primarily formed for the services that the other islands may perform for them and therefore, are simply a means to an end.

An example of this type of bridge is one's relationship with the grocer, landlord, or mailman. The relationship lasts only as long as it takes for the island to perform the service.

The second, and by far the most important type, is the SENTIMENT bridge. These bridges are built to satisfy the desire for affectionate responses (love, security, recognition, etc.). They are characterized by sympathy, intimacy, and mutual attachment.

The major distinction between the two types of bridges is that Interest Bridges are primarily for physical and tangible goods and services. The Sentiment Bridges are primarily for the intangible and emotional services.

Examples of sentiment bridges are one's relationships between themselves and their parents, loved ones, and good friends. Other types which are less important are those ties with one's religion, race, class, nationality, or community.

The sentiment bridges are usually very difficult to build. They are also much more enduring. In the beginning of a relationship they are most susceptible to the dissociating forces in our culture today.

Some of these dissociating forces are such things as specialization, conformity, segregation, stratification, competition, and urbanization. These forces have been tearing down the individuality of a person and are doing a good job in changing him into a non-thinking, non-participating human being or robot.

Before one can have a close friend one must consider not his worth or his intelligence; instead we must find out his color, his political beliefs, his class, his religion and where he lives!

Instead of aiding humanity these forces have created feelings of inadequacy, deprivation, and a thwarting of independence.

People are constructing fewer and fewer bridges today. And furthermore, the bridges are getting weaker and weaker. They are becoming more superficial, unrealistic, and avenues of escape.

In short, people today are very unsure of their role in society. They are losing their identity as individuals and in our fast moving society they are unsure of what role they are to play.

At one tie in the stream of history, people gained their security, affection, etc. from a very strong family structure. From the family they learned the role (or roles) that they were to play for the rest of their lives and they did not question the validity of their parents directions.

Later on, the Christian Church took over and one's behavior and role revolved, more or less, around the church and her teachings. People changed from worshipping the family to worshipping a god.

And then, along came science and technology which at the worst destroyed the sentiment bridges and at best has severely weakened them. The all-omniscient god-head isn't anymore. Most people still pay lip service to him, but very very few follow the way of life set out for them by the Church.

So now we have no one to tell us what we can do and what we can't do. People no longer have the faith or trust in their family, their church, science, and worst of all, in themselves.

There is no institution that is trusted and respected enough to take over the role of supreme-mother.

The result: a society of floundering neurotic isolates.

The situation is not quite as bad as this but it is well on the road to this endpoint.

Look around you and what do you see?

A campus full of secure well-adjusted people? who date for intellectual stimulation? or who spend their free time in the library trying to solve some of the cultural problems they have been confronted with in some class?

HA!

Graduate Club May Operate Under Proposed Constitution

The UNC Graduate Club will operate under a constitution—provided two-thirds of the graduate students vote in favor of a constitution in the fall campus elections Nov. 18.

A constitution for the club approved at a meeting of the Graduate Club Monday night. If accepted by the necessary two-thirds this will be the first constitution for the club.

The constitution sets up an executive authority, composed of president, secretary, treasurer and standing committees.

Provisions for a Graduate Council composed of the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, chairman of all standing committees, and one representative from each division of the University, are also included in the constitution. The Council is authorized to "assume the legislative functions of the Graduate Club and such legislative functions as have been stated in this constitution."

Procedures for election of officers and ammendments are also set up.

Through this constitution, the club expressed its aim to make the Graduate Club a more permanent organization.

Plans for a coffee Hour this Sunday afternoon in the parlor of Kenan Dorm from 4-6 p.m. were also discussed at the club's Monday meeting. Reports by Paul Wehr, representative to the campus Dance Committee, and Marvin Tatum, representative to the Library Committee were also heard.

Nolie Vay White was appointed chairman of the Publicity committee.

Talent Show Ticket Sales Start Today

Tickets go on sale today for the third annual Carolina Cavalcade of talent. The show will be presented Nov. 18 in Memorial at 8 p.m.

Appearing on the show will be 22 acts, including vocal, instrumental and dance performances. The type of acts range from classical to an Elvis Presley take-off.

Although no more acts will be accepted for the show, students are needed to help with the technical production (lighting, microphones), according to directors Jim Talley, Ess Bruner and Wally Kurait.

Several acts on the Talent Show appeared last year, but have come up with new selections for the 1958 show. These include: Les Sutarius playing Dixieland jazz, Nick Kerns and his rock n" roll combo, vocalist Kack Anthony, Jim Talley's singing group, "The Shades"; "Circle 4" vocal group of Chi Omega sorority.

Other repeats are: Henry McInnis, pianist; the UNC Men's Glee Club, Shield Flynn, guitarist; and Ed Crow and Joe Alexander in a "drum battle."

New acts include this line-up: comedy-pianist Nancy Aubrey, Ann Summers doing acrobetics, Bob Williams and Belle Harkrader in a dance duo, "The Night They Invented Champagne"; and David Barringer in a parody of Elvis. Two other guitarists will appear: Frank Elkins and Al Miller.

A song and dance routine will be presented by Tim Longly and Louise McGee. Freshman comedian Wendell Manuel will also appear in addition to these others: the Sigma Chi singers with Charles Clement as the group leader, Jimmy Gibbs, pop vocalist who also sings with the Men's Glee Club; and Ralph Harrington, pop vocalist.

The Jazz Journeymen, a professional group featuring progressive Jazz guitarist Harrison Register will perform. Register appeared on the 1956 Talent Show.

From the Men's Glee Club, two quartets will supply additional songs.

Beware Irish; No Chapter Of SPE There

By Ed Rowland

Memo to Coach Tatum: Beware Notre Dame.

This warning is not because the Irish have a good team, which they do, but because they do not have a chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity on their campus.

It may be coincidence, but a Sig Ep chapter has figured in each of the sixwins the Tar Heels have this year, and if Notre Dame wins their game with the Tar Heels this Saturday—well, it too just might be coincidence.

OFFERS BET

The story is that N.C. Delta of Sigma Phi Epsilon has bet or offered to bet a skin on each of the games North Carolina has won this year. The game with State was neglected through some oversight at the beginning of the season, and Carolina lost. There are no fraternities at Clemson, so no bet could be made, and we lost.

Southern Cal Sig Eps accepted a get, and UNC won.

Southern California bet the local chapter, and UNC won again.

Maryland reluctantly accepted the bet, and their fears were proven accurate as UNC won once more.

REFUSALS

Wake Forrest refused the bet, though the offer was made, and UNC came through with flying colors, just as they did aginst Tennessee and Virginia. In both cases a bet was made from Chapel Hill and turned down in Knoxville and Charlottesville by the Sig Ep chapters.

Virginia chapter members declared unamiously, "No thanks."

Now, it is Notre Dame.

If North Carolina loses to the Irish, Coach Tatum will probably petition immediately for a chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon to be established in South Bend, so such a calamity can't happen again.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND DTH SPORTS EDITOR

The big noise—which was very much in evidence this week near Kenan Stadium—is Coach Jim Tatum's way of acquainting his players with the uproar they'll have to compete with this week at Notre Dame.

The noise is made by a record of the UNC-Virignia game of 1948, and is played at about double strength over the loud speaker system. Tatum reports that although the boys were confused at the beginning of practice, toward the middle of the session the effects began to wear off and the players became accustomed to it.

"THEY HAVE BIG ENDS"

Yesterday at Tatum's press conference, he and Emmet Cheek told writers of the outlook for the Notre Dame game. "They have two of the biggest, strongest ends I've seen," Tatum observed. It would seem that in Nick Pietrosante the Irish may have a runner similar to Carolina's Don Klochak. Pietrosante is a bull-type runner who they like to call on for short yardage up the middle.

The halfbacks are fast around the corners, and especially dangerous on punt and kick-off returns. The big man to watch is their soph quarterback—George Izo—who has dazzled ND opponents with his spectacular passing since being moved up to a starting position after the Purdue game.

IZO LEADS AIR ATTACK

Izo loves to throw, and he can do it well. He pitched the pigskin around for over 300 yards against Pitt in a losing cause last week. Izo is also a smart quarterback; he knows when to call what. Before the coming of Izo, Notre Dame had been almost strictly a ground team. The new-found punch he furnishes through the air makes them doubly dangerous.

Their line, led by Co-Captain and All-American candidate Al Ecuyer at guard, is as tough as all Notre Dame lines have a habit of being.

IRISH NEVER QUIT

One thing is for sure: a four letter Anglo-Saxon word doesn't appear in any of the dictionaries around South Bend, the word is "quit." If it does, it applies to the other guy only. A Notre Dame team will never give up no matter what the score. They are aggressive and willing.

Against Pitt, the Irish were behind 15-0 early in the contest but before the Panthers could catch their breath the Fighting Irish had pulled within a point at 15-14. They could easily have won the game if they had only had time to pull off one more play.

COMPARATIVELY POOR RECORD

This year's Notre Dame team won't have the credentials that some of their past outfits have carried. They have only a 4-3 record to date. They are, however, ranked 18th in the nation even with this slate. And everyone knows that they are a much better team than their record shows.

"Notre Dame, if it were possible, would schedule the nine best teams in the country every year and play them," Jim Tatum has said. This is one of the reasons for their rather anemic record. Such teams as Army, Navy, Purdue, Pitt, and Iowa on a schedule means trouble for anyone.

FUMBLITIS

A factor which led to the Irish downfall at Pittsburgh was their inability to hold onto the football. Notre Dame lost 5 fumbles to the Panthers during that one. Against Duke they also had butter fingers. The fumbles, however, have usually come on backfield mixups rather than from any one player.

Another factor which may be in Carolina's favor is that the Irish have to deal with number 2 ranked Iowa next week. The Tar Heels hope may be to catch the Irish looking ahead, although they are famous for playing each game as they come to it.

HEELS HAVE NEVER BEATEN IRISH

Carolina will be trying to do Saturday something that no Tar Heel team has ever been able to accomplish. Carolina has never beaten Notre Dame. They have come close, the margin of victory in both 1950 and 1951 being only a touchdown. But in eight games with the boys from South Bend, Carolina has never brought a victory back to Chapel Hill. Even in the Charlie Justice era the Heels couldn't knock off the Irish.

Sugar Bowl Committee Is 'Still Looking'

By ED TUNSTALL

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Unbeaten Louisana State looks like a cinch for the host's role in the Sugar Bowl on New Year's Day, but an opponent for the speed-spurred Bayou Tigers is everybody's guess.

LSU, rated the nation's top football team in the Associated Press poll for the last three weeks, has only Mississippi State and ancient rival Tulane blocking its first perfect season in 50 years. The Tigers have breezed past eight opponents with comparative ease and routed Duke 50-18 last Saturday.

Barring an unexpected turn of events, LSU will make its fourth showing in the Sugar Bowl on Jan. 1, looking for its first victory in the Deep South's No. 1 sports spectacle. LSU lost to Texas Christian 3-2 in 1936 and came back the following year to bow to Santa Clara 21-14. Oklahoma smothered the Tigers 35-0 in 1950.

Won and lost records restrict the field of probable fores to a half-dozen teams. And Louisana's segregation laws-prohibiting interracial athletic competition will trim the list even deeper.

Resurging North Carolina and a pair of Southwest Conference teams-Texas Christian and Southern Methodist-top the probable opposition for the LSU, almost assured of the Southeastern Conference title and the national championship.

The Sugar Bowl, of course, just isn't saying whom it will invite. Sugar Bowl President Claude (Monk) Simons, Tulane hero of the inaugural game in 1935 aginst Temple, said any team with a presentable record and not tied up with conference commitments would be considered.

LSU's list of credentials is enough to make any bowl selection committee drool. Halfback Billy Cannon, an exciting, explosive runner, is among the nation's top backs and looks like a good bet for All-America honors. Center Max Fulger is the stalwart on a defense that has permitted less than six points per game.

After season-opening losses to North Carolina State and Clemson, North Carolina swept past six rivals, clobbering Virginia 42-0 last Saturday. Notre Dame and Duke are remaining Tar Heel foes.

The only blot on Texas Christian's seven-game record is a 17-0 loss to Iowa, ranked second in this week's AP poll. The Horned Frogs have three Southwest Conference games left-Texas, Rice and Southern Methodist.

Both TCU and Rice are unbeaten in conference competition and the winner will earn the host spot in the Cotton Bowl. Rice is all but eliminated from Sugar Bowl consideration since the Owls lost 26-6 to LSU in the season's opening game for both teams.

Colorful SMU, boasting one of the nation's great passers in quarterback Don Meredith, has lost three of seven games, but the setbacks came from Ohio State, Notre Dame and Rice and all by narrow margins. The Mustangs, however, still must face TCU and one will drop from the list.

Once-beaten Syracuse and always rugged Pittsburgh are ruled out by segregation laws. Pitt lost to Georgia Tech 7-0 in the 1956 game when Pitt fullback Bobby Grier became the first Negro to play in the event.

Tar Heels Lead Stax

As Carolina's football Tar Heels gain momentum in their torrid chase for a possible bowl berth, they have moved out in front in virtually all of the ACC statistics.

Latest stax, through 8 games, show the Tar Heels leading in Total Offense, Total Defense, and Rush Defense. They are second in both passing and rushing offense, and third in pass defense.

Individually, magician Jack Cummings leads all others in the conference in both total offense and passing. Wade Smith is 5th in the league in rushing.

Sigma Nu Meets SAE

The team from the Sigma Nu house will go up against the SAE's for the fraternity blue championship today at 4:15.

On the regular season, both teams had identical records. Each won four games and lost only one. Also both of these teams were in the same league.

In the play-offs each of these teams won three games in order to advance to the finals, thus giving them identical records of seven wins and one defeat.

The outstanding person or backbone of the SAE team is Ed Burnson, who helped his team through the season. For the Sigma Nu's the honors are divided between three players, Adin Rucer, Art Kilpatrick and Ed Moore. All three gave aid in helping their team to reach the finals.

The protest between the Ruffin and Joyner game was upheld in a lengthy session yesterday. It was decided that the last 15 minutes of the game will be replayed.

Football Practice

Carolina's football team worked on pass defense Tuesday as it speeded up preparations for Saturday's important contest at Notre Dame.

Coach Jim Tatum's team will be facing a fierce passing combination when it runs into the Irish duo of quarterback George Izo and end Monte Stickles.

The Tar Heels also worked on defenses geared to stop big Notre Dame fullback Nick Pietrosante.

Senior Center Ronnie Koes was named to serve with tackle Phil Blazer as co-captains against the Irish.

Booters Vs. Davidson

The Carolina soccer team plays host to Davidson College here Friday. The Tar Heels, by winning their last four matches, have now won six of seven this year. They are undefeated in conference play.

Carolina will be led by high-scoring Mike Thompson and all-around star John Ghanin.

ANYONE FOR FOOTBALL?

When Pancho Sigafoos, sophomore, pale and sensitive, first saw Willa Ludowic, freshman, lithe as a hazel wand and rosy as the dawn, he hemmed not; neither did he haw. "I adore you," he said without preliminary.

"Thanks, hey," said Willa, flinging her apron over her face modestly. "What position do you play?"

"Position?" said Pancho, looking at her askance. (The askance is a ligament just behind the ear.)

"On the football team," said Willa.

"Football!" sneered Pancho, his young lip curling. "Football is violence, and violence is the death of the mind. I am not a football player. I am a poet!"

"So long, beater," said Willa.

"Wait!" cried Pancho, clutching her damask forearm.

She placed a foot on his pelvis and wrenched herself free. "I only go with football players," she said, and walked, shimmering, into the gathering dusk.

Pancho went to his room and lit a cigarette and pondered his dread dilemma. What kind of cigarette did Pancho light? Why, Philip Morris, of corris!

Philip Morris is always welcome, but never more than when you are sore beset. When a fellow needs a friend, when the heart is dull and the blood runs like sorghum, then, then above all, is the time for the mildness, the serenity, that only Philip Morris can supply.

Pancho Sigafoos, his broken psyche welded, his fevered brow cooled, his synapses restored, after smoking a cigarette Philip Morris, came to a decision. Though he was a bit small for football (as even four feet) and somewhat overweight (627 pounds), he tried out for the team—and tried out with such gut and gumption that he made it.

Pancho's college opened the season against the Manhattan School of Mines, always a mettlesome foe but strengthened this year by four exchange students from [illegible] who had been suckled by she-apes. By the middle of the second quarter the Miners had wrought such havoc upon Pancho's team that there was nobody left on the bench but Pancho. And when the quarterback was sent to the infirmary with his head driven straight down into his esophagus, the coach had no choice but to put Pancho in.

Pancho's teammates were not conspicuously cheered as the little fellow took his place in the huddle.

"Gentleman," said Pancho, "some of you may regard poetry as sissy stuff, but now in our most trying hour, let us hark to these words from Paradise Lost: 'All is not lost; the unconquerable will and study of revenge, immortal hate, and courage never to submit or yield?'"

So stirred was Pancho's team by this fiery exhortation that they threw themselves into the fray with utter abandon. As a consequence, the entire squad was hospitalized before the half. The college was forced to drop football. Willa Ludowic, not having any football players to choose from, took up with Pancho and soon discovered the beauty of his soul. Today they are seen everywhere—dancing, holding hands, nuzzling, smoking.

Yack Beauty Competition Dominated By Rebel Belles

By RON SHUMATE

Southern girls must have "snowed" the judges for the 1959 Yackety Yack beauty contest.

Not only is the new queen, Eleanor Smith, a Southern belle, but all 14 members of the queen's court hail from states and a U. S. possession (Puerto Rico) below the Mason-Dixon line.

Blue-eyed, blonde Eleanor Smith of Atlanta, Ga., was selected the 1959 queen Tuesday night from 111 other Carolina coeds. She was sponsored in the contest by Alpha Tau Omega fraternity.

A junior and English major here, Eleanor is a pledge of Chi Omega sorority.

The queen and her court represent nine different states and Puerto Rico. North Carolina placed five members in the final 15. Georgia had two, and Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Florida, Alabama, South Carolina and Puerto Rico one each.

The queen's court members and their sponsors are: Mary Bailey, Phi Gamma Delta; Mary Britton, Kappa Alpha; Dottie Bull, Tri Delta; Judith Bunn, Sigma Nu; Carol Carruthers, Delta Kappa Epsilon; Clare Hanner, Pi Kappa Alpha; Coleman Jenkins, Sigma Chi; Ann Lucas, Chi Phi;; Barbara Meitzler, Kappa Delta; Susan; Merirtt, Spencer dorm; Jane Elizabeth Newsome, Chi Psi; Sally Pullen, Delta Sigma Pi; Sally Wade, Pi Kappa Alpha;; and Linda Watkins , Pi Kappa Alpha.

Southern belles dominated the 111 entries with fewer than 20 entries from "Yankee-land." North Carolina led the entries with 66. Virginia and Georgia were second with seven entries each.

The contestants paraded individually before five judges and approximately 500 other spectators, made up largely of members of the 40 organizations sponsoring the beauties.

Judges were Mrs. William Aycock, Mrs. Kay Kyser, Mrs. Kemp Stagg, Dr. James King and Jerry Ball.

Ball entertained during one of the three intermissions with imitations on the piano of an old-time music box and an old nickelodeon. He also played a medley of tunes which had been nominated for Academy Awards.

Miss Kack Anthony also entertained with her renditions of "My Funny Valentine" and "Mr. Wonderful."

NEW CROWN FOR A NEW QUEEN—Miss Eleanor Smith of Atlanta, Ga., is crowned Yackety-Yack queen for 1959 by Miss Diana Johnson. Miss Smith was sponsored by Alpa Tau Omega.

PEP RALLY

The University Club will sponsor a pep rally tonight at 6:30 in the area between upper and lower quads. The cheering squad and the UNC Band will lead the cheering in honor of the team. A member of the football coaching staff will be on hand to say a few words about the coming Notre Dame game.

Bishop's Co. Brings Together Church, Stage

The long separation between churches and stage is being brought to an end by The Bishop's Company on its annual tour during which it will give a performance at the University Methodist Church at 8 p.m., Nov. 17.

The English theater was born out before the altar of the church and the Bishop's Company is the first modern American company to reunite the forces of religion and the theater.

The Company, sponsored by the Campus Christian Council, will present C.S. Lewis' "The Great Divorce" while in Chapel Hill.

"The Great Divorce" takes man as an observer on an excursion to the borders of heaven. He and his fellow bus passengers, residents of hell, are met by their counterparts who are willing to help them earn eternal happiness.

The divorce of the play is between heaven and hell.

The casts of the touring units are inter-racial and inter-faith. The Company has a full schedule as part of the concert series of colleges and universities as well as churches.

Founded in 1952 by Phillis Benbow Beardsley, the Company has toured over 300,000 miles, playing in 42 states and Canada. The Company is an independent organization named in honor of Methodist Bishop Gerald H. Kennedy.

A special service will be held immediately before the play.

Winston And Tri Delts Win Co-Rec Volleyball

In the semi-finals Sigma Nu-McIver team defeated a team from Cobb and the Tri Delt House while Winston and another Tri Delt team were winning over Chi Phi and Alderman.

The members of the winning team were: Mary Hartzog, Linda Rehm, Pat Page, Joe Hester, York Laresee, Hugh Donahue, Roy Cashion, and Sid Woody.

Sherman's 'Life' Saved No Necktie Party In Phi

By STAN BLACK

General William Tecumseh Sherman will not be hanged in effigy in front of Phi Hall after all.

Members of the Phi defeated by a slim margin a bill urging the hanging.

The Phi's bill of the evening, introduced by Rep. Don Jacobs, was debated as though the participants were living seven years after Sherman's march through Georgia in 1864.

In his opening comments on the march Rep. Jacobs noted that General Sherman undertook the destruction of Georgia in order to prostrate the Southern war effort, but questioned the nessity of this as "the South was already beaten and down."

Rep. Jacobs enlightened the group by his eyewitness account of Sherman's "golden horde, sweeping out of the hills to ravage the plantation of "Mr. Marcus," a wealthy slaveowner. He protested the "wholesale slaughter of women and children" by Sherman's troops and called for the immediate hanging of General Sherman in effigy.

In a more serious vein, Rep. Bob Morely declared that although Sherman was undoubtedly guilty, "we all share in his guilt for having allowed the war to break out in the first place. We should try to profit from the lesson the war has to teach us."

Conditional Rep. Ben Morley noted that the battle of Atlanta was the North's first big victory and a decisive follow-up was necessary. Rep. Bill Jackson said that history has already passed its verdict on this man. Consequently it would only arouse tempers to hang Sherman in effigy.

In what was definately a minority opinion, Rep. Judy Huntress said that she felt Sherman was working to achieve a swifter peace. bill nine to four. Rep. Don "Cal-defeated the bill by a six to four vote. A vote of all present defeated the houn" Jacobs was declared Speaker of the Evening for his stirring eyewitness account off the battle of Atlanta.

Next Tuesday night the Phi will hold a reading night, with interested members and guests free to read anything they wish to the body.

'Insulation Or Isolation?' Will Be 'Y' Retreat Topic

"Insulation or Isolation?" will be the topic of a joint YM-YWCA retreat scheduled for Nov. 15-16 at Camp Betty Hastings ner Winston-Salem.

Organized to discuss "communication," interpersonal and otherwise, the overnight retreat is expected to be attended by 25-30 students. Committee Chairman Paul Wehr emphasized, however, that there is still room for others interested in attending.

Jim Carse of the YMCA and Jack Roth, of the Boston University School of Theology are the scheduled speakers for the event.

Roth will speak on the meaning of the word 'communication" as it will be used at the retreat and will discuss its importance and evidences of isolation on campus.

Carse will speak on communication on different levels, such as intellectual, emotional and social.

A third session will be devoted to "a discussion of possible ways in which Carolina students might further true communication among ourselves and among the rest of the students,"Wehr said.

Organizing the retreat is a special subcommittee of the Y Conference Committee. Members include Chairman Wehr, Pappy Churchill, Diane Nobal, Maxine Lee, Betsy Harriss, Marcey Klingel, Pleas McMichael, Wendell Manuel, Frank Mansfield and Randy Shelton. . . .

According to Wehr, the retreat will begin at 3 p.m. Saturday and will end at noon Saturday. Costs for the overnight event will be $3.75 per student. This will include transportation, meals and sleeping accomodations.

Parking Meters Still Drawing Complaints

By CHUCK FLINNER

"You don't have any trouble finding a parking place."

Chapel Hill Police Chief W.D. Blake said yesterday. Police had received a number of complaints on the meters but felt the people would soon adjust to them.

One of the major complaints concerned the red indicator which continues on the half-hour meters for 24 minutes. The pointer shows the checking officer how long the time has been expired. It is designed to give the violator a break if the meter has been expired only a short time. The one hour meters show up to 12 minutes tolerance.

Many Chapel Hill users often think the meter has not yet expired since the indicator is visible. Guy Waldeck of the Dual Parking Meter Co. told the police they could cut off the indicator if they wished. He said, "some towns like them, some don't."

Other complaints to the police department stem from putting coins in the wrong meters, and not reading the instructions and meter properly.

One user complained that the timing was off and he only got 55 minutes on a one hour meter. Waldeck said that the new meters were adjusted to give about 65 minutes.

Waldeck explained to police,"At first it's new to everybody. It's new to you (the police), it's new to the public—everybody." When the public becomes familiar with the meters the complaints will "level off," he added.

Chief Blake expressed belief that the complaints would soon "level off" and was pleased that the Franklin St. parking situation had improved.

Pharmacy Sorority Initiates Nine Women

The magazine, designed mainly to provide programs for major events on the campus with a set advertising consistency to keep space constant, was established by the Student Legislature recently.

A committee from the Publications Board will hold the interviews, which, according to Publications Board Chairman Harold O' Tuel, will be open to all students.

The chosen editor and business manager will have the right of choosing their own staff and being members of the Publications Board.

INCLUDED TIN WHISTLER

Pogo Background Explained

By MIKE O'HARA

A tin whistler, a drawer of funny pictures, a political cartoonist—all these things are part of the background of Pogo's creator, Walt Kelly.

Mr. Kelly spoke to the second meeting of the Carolina Forum last night after a rousing introduction by the Journalism School Dean Norval Neil Luxon.

The cartoonist quickly explained that he was born in Philadephia of "rich but dishonest parents." However, he moved to Bridgeport, Conn., at the age of two "taking his mother, his father and a large number of animal crackers."

Afterwards he worked on a paper as a reporter—he was told that the salary was little but he'd meet some interesting people "They were right the pay wasn't much."

Kelly went west "in search of food" and ended up in Hollywood working as an artist for Walt Disney. He also played tin wistle with the "Firehouse Five."

After seven flops, Kelly finally made a hit. His strip is carried by 517 papers with a combined circulation of 44 million.

The most important thing that a cartoonist can do is point out the failings of the human race. Kelly explained that he had no message as such. "Human beings are the funniest people."

"There's no area in this world that's so scared that we can't take a stand on it."

After Kelly's "speech" students stormed the stage in hopes of getting one of the cartoonist's charcoaled animals. . . .

Kelly Says 'I Just Want To Be Funny'—He Is

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

"I only want to be funny," insists Walt Kelley, originator of Pogo, the solemn little possum who delights millions of comic strip fans every day.

The cartoonist who spoke at Hill Hall last night refuses to think of himself as a crusader. "I don't see how anyone can think of himself as a crusader and keep a straight face—unless he's a fool."

His answer to the popular saying that "You have to be an intellectual to understand Pogo" is that most of his mail comes from children. "Would you consider a small child an intellectual?" he asked. He added that he spends about one-third of his time answering that mail.

Pursuing the "intellectual" idea, he said that he feels that the American people are becoming more intellectual and some comic strips, newspapers and magizines fail to relize it.

Asked if anyone that he had made fun of in his strip had ever asked him to "lay off", he answered that anyone who admitted he was being represented as an owl or a possum was silly. "I can get away with a lot," he reflected.

He doesn't feel its quite ethical to throw out something he has already started to comment on something "big" that happens in the world. "If I haven't been smart enough to see it coming, I don't think its quite fair to jump on it later,"he said.

Library Group Is Conducting Stack Checks

The Student Library Committee conducted a check of the stack area Tuesday night in order to determine if there were people in the stacks who did not have permits.

Of 125 people checked 27 people either did not have a stack permit or did not have their stack permit with them. Those who did not have permits were reminded that the proper procedure to get a stack permit was to apply to their faculty adviser.

Those who did not have permits were told not to use the stack area until they got one. The only way to gain legal access to the stacks is with a permit. An invitation of a friend who has a permit is not sufficent.

The committee plans to conduct future checks at unannounced times. Some action will be taken after the first warning aginst repeated violations.

Carolina-Duke Competition

"Our rivalry has developed over the years into a "gentlemen's rivalry," Ty Heinekins, chairman of the Duke Pep Board, told University Club members Tuesday night.

Heinkins praised the working relationship between his school and Carolina. He said that as Pep Board chairman, he is to discourage acts of vandalism by Duke students.

Sandry Strang, Spencer Dorm respectively was elected secretary of the club. She replaced Mary Hartzog, who resigned because of a pressing work load.

Joan Castle, a graduate counselor, spoke briefly to the club about the pep rallies held in the west by such schools as UCLA, USC and Stanford.

Dave Wible, co-chairman of the PiKA "Beat Dook" float committee, spoke briefly on the plans for the parade. He said that a night parade had been proven to be unfeasable.

A committee of three was appointed by President Dave Jones to explore the possibility of the club sponsoring an evening event in downtown Chapel Hill. Committee members are Bill Franklin, Judy Huntress and Bob Adams.

Three trophies for the best homecoming displays were given to the representatives of Pi Beta Phi, Phi Delta Theta and Old East.

Harold Johnson Wins 2nd Term As APO Leader

Harold Johnson was re-elected president of Alpha Phi Omega Tuesday night by acclamation. Johnson began his second term in office with the announcement of a serving project planned on University property at Buggs Island.

The Following officers were also elected: first vice president, Allen Spader; second vice Presidents, Jim Scott and Lee Kitterage; treasurer, Randal Ethridge; recording secretary, Allen Atwell; corresponding secretary Bill Ridenhour; alumni secretary, Jim Billsoly; historian, Jerry Morgan and sergant at arms, Rob Pearce.

The fraternity decided to go to Buggs Island Friday and help to prepare the University Recreational Area planned there.

Saturday Deadline Set For Car Registrations

Hugh Patterson, chairman of the men's honor council, has called attention to the Saturday deadline for the registration of students tomobiles.

Patterson said "Any student who does not have car privileges will be tried by the appropriate Honor Court unless this student presents himself with the owner of the car to Ray Jeffefries by Nov. 15.

"It should be noted that both the student who registered the car and the student whose car was registered are subject to trial by the Honor Council unless the previously stated action is taken prior to Nov. 15."

25th Session's Last Meeting Starting Early

By STAN FISHER

The Student Legislature, convening tonight for the last meeting of its 25th session, will act on Gary Greer's amended proposal to put Honor Council juror selection on a campus-wide basis.

The meeting will be at 7 p.m. in the Phi Hall, fourth floor New East. This meeting is a half hour earlier than the body usually assembles.

Bills to be acted upon tonight other than Greer's jury selection proposal are as follows:

(1) A proposal to provide any student organization with an opportunity to consider and voice an openion on legislation affecting the organization.

If this bill should pass the assembly, any prospective introducer would have to confer with the chairman of the organization whose structure, jurisdiction, or area of responsibility would be altered by the proposed legislation.

The bill would be incorporated into the by-laws of the Legislature. Given adequate time, the organization would be required to make the proper arrangements if the affected organization would voice an openion on the legislation.

(2) A bill to establish a committee to study the drinking rules of the University.

The committee, if the bill passes, would investigate the problem and make recommendations to the administration and University Board of Trustees. It would report back to the legislature not later than four weeks after the committee has been set up.

(3) A proposal advocating the pavement of the dirt area between Lenior Hall and Law School.

(4) A bill placing the Carolina Forum and State Student Legislature delegation under the Forensic Council.

This bill proposes the combining the budgets of the two organizations under the budget of the Forensic Council, but earmarked for expenses.

The Forensic Council would submit its revised Constitution no later than the first legislative session in December.

(5) A bill to submit for ratification by the Student Body an amendment to the Student Constitution calling for a single annual spring campus election.

If passed, the bill provides that appropriate legislation be instituted to correctly modify all existing applicable by-laws and statutes.

The bill to put Honor Council juror selection on a campus-wide basis will be making its third appearence before the legislators tonight. Last Thursday night the controversial proposal was temporarily tabulated so legislators might look over amendments proposed by Norman Smith (Ind.) and John Brooks (SP).

The proposed amendments put "teeth" in the jury slection bill. They provided that any juror called who fails to show may be deprived of his right to vote in campus elections and to hold student government offices, unless excused by the attorney generall.

COMPLAINTS ANSWERED

Law Library Policies Explained

By A. PRINGLE PIPKIN

The administrator of the Law Library and Law Student Association officials answered charges Tuesday concerning reserve books and other problems.

The Law Student Library Committee revealed that it had been working on recommendations for the improvement of the library before a student recently publicly expressed dissatisfaction with the library.

The student complained of the lack of a four day reserve, the numbers of copies of certain volumes on reserve which are not used, the policy of having to check out a book before 9:45 p.m. for overnight reserve and the prohibition on taking certain volumes out of the library.

The librarian, Miss Mary W. Oliver, explained that books were put on reserve when professors requested it; when there was a great demand for the book or a scarity of copies of that volume.

Each semester the books on reserve are reviewed. The books have to be checked out again at 9:45 in order to give the other students a chance of using the books.

Concerning the reshelving of books on open stacks, she said it was the policy of the library to have the students replace the books because the library staff is limited.

A problem of space made it necessary to put the Regional Reporters, law reference books, on two different levels.

The elevator is closed at the same time as is the desk so as to prevent any student getting caught in the elevator (there have been cases when it has failed to function) during the night she explained.

She stated that it is permissable for a student working at the desk to study if his other duties had been attended to first.

Another criticism had been that in the past the Law Student Library Committee had been afraid to function.

Linwood Peoples, chairman of the committee, said the committee had solicited recommendations for the improvement of the library.

When the suggestions have been completed they will be submitted to the librarian, he said.

Since the committee was approved in mid-October it has met several times informally. Tuesday night it met with Law Student Association President Joseph B. Chambliss.

"Through our committee we have received very good cooperation," Chambliss commented. He said the library committee does not have a regular meeting time but meets as necessary.

Middle East

It is amazing what a policy of non-imperialism and laissez-faire can do in the Middle East.

In the few short months since the allied intervention in Lebanon, which so nearly solidified the entirety of the Arab world against the west, the policy of non-intervention has wrought miracles.

One by one the Arab states have become disillusioned with Egyptian president Abdel Nasser, as the self-less voice of Arab nationalism, and have recognized him for what he is — a person hungry for power. Indeed, the situation is now such that the Jordanian claim of attack of King Hussein's plane has a good deal of legitimacy, and will be seen as such by the entire world.

This is not to say that the dirve to nationalism in the Middle East has abated any, but it's direction has changed. The centralized drive with Nasser at the hub has been splintered, and the splinters are pursuing their separate paths toward self-determination.

The fact that this area can be molded into one against the west should be a warning sign before future Lebanon's and military controls such as exhibited not long ago in Algeria.

Pay Phones

From one report the pay phones in the library average approximately five local calls per day since they were established, which is a far cry from the lines of five waiting to use the telephones in times previous.

If the object of those who put the phones into operation was to dissuade peope from using these phones, they have accomplished their purpose. If the object was to draw revenue, then the revenue has not been drawn in sufficient quantity.

It is high time that free phones were put back in the library so that students can have the benefit of using the phones at no extra cost, and so that the phones, which are obviously there to serve some purpose, will be used.

Duke Students

The Duke coach has been hanged in effigy on the Durham campus, and a large number of students participated in the fiasco.

It is still a source of amazement that so much energy can be put to something so trivial as a losing season in football.

If that much energy was applied to academic pursuits rather than the shameful procedure of hanging a coach in effigy, the world would be a good deal better.

Fun is fun, but this surely is not fun.

Grad Club

The new constitution of the Graduate Club is a hopeful sign.

Incorporating representatives from each department and school, as well as various committees to insure even grater participation, the Grad Club is currently doing its part to advance the concept of student government to a larger segment of the University.

The graduate student has a very definate place in the student body politic, and this place is one of leadership.

A step in the right direction has been made, the number who vote next Tuesday

UP—The Candidates Speak—SP

This is the first in a series of articles covering the Student Legislature campaign district-by-district. The Daily Tar Heel will interview each candidate for legislature, asking each candidate three questions on issues that have been important on this campus in the past and are important at the present time. In each district, all candidates will be asked the same three questions from a list of some 15 questions to be asked all candidates. In this way The Daily Tar Heel hopes that both the candidates point of view and the major issues will be brought into focus. The series is being compiled by Dee Daniels and Stan Fisher, and begins today with Men's Dormitory Districts III and IV.

Dorm Men's III

Running on the UP ticket for the three 1-year Legislature seats in Dorm Men's III are Tom Cannon, Bill Farrell and Joe Oppenheimer. Candidate for the six months seat is Tom Butler.

These nominees answered the following questions:

(1) Would you enforce more rigidly or do away with the drinking regulations at UNC?

(2) How do you feel about federal aid to education?

(3) What do you conceive of as the role of the graduate student in student government?

Tom Cannon

Tom Cannon, a freshman from Raleigh, answered by saying:

"I feel the drinking laws should be abolished, for they are not being enforced. The Campus Code should be a sufficient guide for conduct.

"Public schools should receive federal aid, but the states should keep firm control of the school operation.

"I believe the graduate student should be represented in student government so that his problems might be recognized."

Bill Farrell

Farrell is a freshman from Winston-Salem. He answered by saying:

"Drinking regulations have to be in order to keep up the prestige of the University, but in some cases the rules could be more realistic along the IFC proposal that each student be on his honor to conduct himself as a gentleman.

"I wholeheartedly am in favor of Federal aid in education as long as the money is given with no strings attached and the University is allowed to govern itself.

"The student government is elected by the students of the University of North Carolina. If the graduate student desires to run and the students vote for him, they certainly have the right to hold office. This is the democratic process and after all, we do live in a democracy."

Joe Oppenheimer

A freshman from Birmingham, Ala., Joe Oppenheimer replied to the above questions as follows:

"Whether we like it or not, drinking is a definite part of American social activity, and I believe that any move to abolish it at UNC would only give rise to disharmony in student relationships, and would serve to make drinking a clandestine underground occurrence among students. College students should be mature enough to sensibly regulate their drinking habits. Of course, not all members of the student body have attained such a maturity; however, not even these students would benefit by being denied drinking privileges, for they must learn at some time the effects of alcohol. They will not always be governed by rules limiting their alcoholic consumption. Hence, I would favor doing away with drinking regulations at UNC.

"Federal aid to education is greatly needed within many of the secondary school systems of the country. In a number of the nation's poorer states, talented high school teen-agers are not receiving the challenging education necessary for intellectual growth. Consequently, some of America's most promising students are being denied, or at least delayed in, the opportunity to explore the fields of advanced scientific study. The primary goal of all should be the provisions of the best education possible, as soon as possible, for all American youth. It is the best way to insure this country's continued prosperity and world leadership. The fastest way to attain such a goal is to grant the needed finances for construction of buildings, increase of teachers' salaries, etc. through federal aid.

"The role of the graduate student in student government should be an active, influential one. The graduate student has had the benefit of longer experience, and hence he can serve well in an advisory capacity also. He has, as a rule, reached a higher level of maturity and can therefore offer a more feasible, realistic program of legislation. As members of the student body grad students have the right and duty of choice in government; for they are affected in the same manner as undergrads by student legislation. They should be encouraged to voice their opinions and render their knowledge of experience to the UNC student government."

Tom Butler

Butler, a freshman from Raleigh, is running for the six months seat from Dorm Men's III.

Butler commented: "Since the drinking regulations are not enforced, I feel as though they to be abolished. The Campus Code should suffice in governing students' behaviour.

"Federal Aid is a tremendous help to education I don't, however, want to see the federal government interfere with the states' rights.

In order that the graduate students' needs and opinions might be heard, I think he should be represented in the legislature."

Dorm Men's IV

The only UP candidate from Dorm Men's IV is Bob Sevier, who is running for the one year Legislature seat. Seiver is a freshman and is from Asheville.

He answered the following questions:

(1) How do you feel about segregation?

(2) What are your feelings toward discriminatory clauses?

(3) Are you for mixed Honor Councils?

Bob Sevier

Sevier says:

"Regardless of our personal feelings, we must accept the Supreme Court's ruling that segregation is gone. But I think we should proceed very, very cautiously in doing away with it. The University has handled the problem well, and I hope they will continue to do so.

"Discriminatory clauses are, of course, established by charter members of organizatoins in keeping with what they think will be best for their organizations. I do not feel that they are necessarily indicative of bold prejudices, and I feel that very often they are to be desired. All such clauses existent on the Carolina campus have been established by virtue of national charters and are beyond our jurisdiction.

"I do not feel that a mixed Honor Council could or would be any more efficient than the present separate councils. Unless glaring weaknesses should appear in our two-council system, I see no reason to change it."

Dorm Men's III

Dorm Men's III—In this district four candidates are running; Ray Bagwell, Tally Eddings, and Mike Shulman, all for 1 year seats; Dan Brown is running for a six months seat.

In this district the candidates were asked to answer the following questions:

(1) Would you enforce more rigidly or do away with the drinking regulations at UNC?

(2) How do you feel about federal aid to education?

(3) What do you conceive of as the role of the graduate student in student government?

Ray Bagwell

Ray Bagwell, 18, is a junior from Raleigh. Bagwell is running for a one year seat.

Bagwell said, "It is the responsibility of each student to act as a gentleman at all times. Excessive drinking may cause one to violate gentlemanly principles. This problem can best be solved by upholding the principles which have been set up in the Campus Code."

On the question of federal aid to education, Bagwell said, "Federal subsidies to education are very worthwhile, and can do much good. However, if we must sacrifice educational freedom to gain these benefits, I am opposed to federal subsidization."

"Student Government should include all university students. Graduate students are university students, therefore, student government should include graduate students," was his answer to the graduate student problem.

Dan Brown

Dan Brown, 19, a sophomore from Selma, is running for the six months seat open in this district.

Brown's opinion on the present drinking rules is, "I would enforce it (the drinking regulations) more rigidly for I think that the drinking should be cut down quite a bit from what it is. The conduct used when drinking is involved and the name that we get from this conduct is a great misfortune to the name and tradition of the University."

He commented on federal aid to education by saying, "I believe that providing money for educational projects by the federal government is all right; and for such things as buildings, books and new and better facilities, it is very needed sometimes."

"The graduate student truly is a part of the University. But I believe that he should have little dealings with the student government unless he is directly involved then I feel that he should have a voice in it," he said in answering the graduate student's place in student government.

Tally Eddings

Running for the third one year seat in this district is Tally Eddings, 20, a junior from Tabor City, who again favors heavier enforcement of the drinking rules, saying:

"There is nothing wrong with a social drink, but I would be in favor of more rigid enforcement of drinking when it comes to public drunkenness. This is a violation of the campus code and should carry severe punishment."

On the topic of federal aid to education, Eddings said, "I am in favor of it. The federal government is determined to tell the states how to run the states' schools' so why not let it help finance education. Eventually, this would lead to a more balanced educational system throughout the United States."

Discussing the question concerning the role of the graduate student Eddings went on to say, that his conception of the graduate's role was as "the man in the background" type of person.

"They are necessary for better student government. Ray Long and Joel Fleishman are the type of fellows I'm talking about. Both are in law school, but keep in touch with what is going on on the campus and take active part in the essential elements of student government," he ended.

Mike Shulman

Mike Shulman, 18, a freshman from Charlotte, answered the questions, saying, "I would enforce the drinking regulations at UNC as rigidly as possible."

"I am in favor of federal aid to education, so long as federal aid does not include federal control of education. Some states need a great deal of financial aid in their school system.

"The role of the graduate student in student government should be that of an advisory position. He should be allowed some voice in student government, but should not be made to bear the greater responsibility."

Dorm Men's IV

Dorm Men's IV—One 1-year seat is open in this district. Running for the single seat on the SP ticket is Dave Matthews, 20, a junior from Winston-Salem

Dave Matthews

Matthews, the incumbent legislator, was asked for his opinion on segregation; he replied,

"I think that from both moral and practical aspects segregation should be eliminated in the South gradually. It does not appear that anything other than a gradual process is possible."

Other questions asked Matthews were: What are your feelings toward discriminatory clauses? and, Are you for mixed Honor Councils?

Matthews answered, "In principle I am opposed to discriminatory clauses in the charters of campus organizations. However, where selectivity ends and discrimination begins is very hard to determine. I recognize the right of organizations to be selective in choosing their memberships.

"I am for mixed honor councils if some effective means of distinguishing between honor violations and social violations for coeds can be devised. Certainly lying, cheating, and stealing are the same for men and women. It would therefore seem that similar penalties are called for, and these can be meted out only under one unified honor council, composed of both sexes. However, it sometimes happens in the case of a coed, that a social violation and lying are closely tied. Who then is to have jurisdiction? I don't believe a mixed honor council is qualified to try such a case."

How many friends, real friends, do you have? That is, how many people are there that you know intimately and who know you intimately enough that you would trust them with your darkest secrets? Five or ten? If you think so — you are most unrealistic and you are decieving yourself.

Some people MAY possibly claim one or two, but the majority of our population don't have any! Not even their spouse! They are forced to stand alone. This is not good. Everyone should have at least one such friend to talk personal things over with.

Let's look at it this way. Does our society or let's bring it closer to home, does our university foster the building of solid sentiment bridges; that is, the formation of good deep trusting relationships?

Absolutely not!

In fact, there are only a half a dozen universities that do! The U.S. educational system is not designed to provide a good education for a few to produce the leaders and thinkers; it is set up to provide a mediocre education for the masses. This philosophy is Christian and democratic; but at the same time it is assinine, detrimental, and illogical. It is strictly middle class thinking.

We are not concerned in this writing with the rightness or wrongness of our educational system, not the lack of intellectual stimulation at UNC, nor the middle classness of America, nor the hypocrisy of the church goers.

We are, however, deeply concerned with those people that are suffering from ALONENESS. We are concerned about:

THOSE GIRLS who go home weekends to mommy and daddy because they don't have a date (the male ratio is still about 4 to 1)! These girls would never think of asking a boy out or just staying on campus to work. The girls are just as much to blame for this as are the boys.

THOSE BOYS who join a fraternity just so that they can belong to a group, and then will not participate in the groups affairs. For instance, among the 600 tickets sold to fraternity members for the German's dance, there were only 20 couples left at the dance two hours after it started.

THOSE GIRLS who are false pillars of modesty who decry anything with sexual overtones, yet are the same ones that are found with their date in the unused dark seminar rooms of the library.

THOSE BOYS who feel obligated to take a girl to the frat house, a movie, or to a drive-in in order to have a good time! and then keep asking her "Are you having a good time?" or "Are you enjoying yourself?" The art of conversation has been lost. What we want to know is what are the guys going to do when they are with a date and there is no outside entertainment — sit and stare at each other.

THOSE GIRLS who go to the frat house etc. and are bored to death with the situation or their date or both — but sit there all evening, feeling miserable, thinking themselves into a headache, but never once speaking up and suggesting something else or simply just asking their date to take them home. Is there a law that says that you can't end a date long before the closing hour? even if you're bored silly?

THOSE BOYS who have to have one drink at the beginning of a date, not to be sociable, but so that they can have the courage to try to "make" their date or even just to take a little kiss! These are men? These are immature boys!

THOSE GIRLS that are with the boys and excuse their date's crude and boorish manners as "it wasn't him, it was the alcohol!" Alcohol always gets the blame!!!

THOSE BOYS who feel that Carolina coeds are here just to get married. This is not true! In fact, the reverse is MORE true! Most of the girls are here to learn, enjoy themselves, and to FIND themselves. Unfortunately, their aren't enough mature men to aid them.

THOSE GIRLS who find themselves a little bit different than other girls, but instead of realizing that every human being is different and capitalizing on the difference, they overcome their feelings finadequacy, etc. by losing themselves in schoolwork (straight A's), their dating (a date a night), their trips home (every weekend), etc.

THOSE BOYS that are like the girls in the above paragraph. A strong and well-adjusted person would take pride in his difference, not be ashamed of it.

The list is endless and we must arbitrarily end it here. It is not our purpose to moralize or to say what is right and wrong; god knows — there are too many moralizers here now.

What really appalls us is not the immature actions stated above, but rather "why they are occurring!" They are not actions of well-adjusted people, they are actions of people trying to imitate non-existent ideals of masculinity and femininity!

They are not attempts to build interest bridges or sentiment bridges. They are attempts to get interest bridges where only sentiment bridges belong. In other words, they are trying to get the intangible services from other people without the accompanying sentiments of mutuality, love, respect and responsibility. They want to receive, but they refuse to give anything in return.

What are we trying to say?

We are saying that the male-female complex (among many other things) in this country and on this campus is deplorable. More than just being deplorable it has led many people into taking refuge among either their own sex or some other means of escape.

The fact remains that males and females no longer talk to each other as individuals. They feel that they must play a game of "virility" vs. "submissivity."

Man is still treating himself as a superior being and treats woman only as a sexual object . . . no more, no less.

This dichotomy is forcing young people to become social isolates because they don't feel that they can measure up to masculinity or the undefined concepts of feminity. It has lead us to mistrusting not only others, but ourselves as well.

Why can't people trust each other? Why can't people have the conviction and inner-strength to stand alone? Why do people feel that they need to go places all the time, get drunk on every Saturday night, have sex once a week, or just keep busy doing something?

(TO BE CONTINUED TOMORROW)

A Letter

Editor:

The School of Business Administration of The University of North Carolina is made up of illiterate instructors teaching the most boringly simple subject matter from textbooks that are a single mass of contradictory cliches. Let me quality that statement. There are some instructors in the School who do have a rudimentary knowledge of the arts, but for the majority, any concept that involves more cogitation than that involved in computing gross margin, is completely incomprensible.

Furthermore, most of the instrustiors in the Business School lack the perspective to admit necessity of other schools and departments, and, upon rare occasions when they do, their condesending attitude is repulsive. The University would be much benefited if the eminent instructors in the field of marketing would pack up their revoting line of balderdash and remove themselves to some used car lot in the outlying provinces where their audience would be much impressed and receive the glorious learning with reverence and awe.

Over the past few years everything from teeth-brushing to the study of peoples' customs has been called a science. The Business department, not to be outdone, has followed suit and labeled various activites carried on by the floor sweepers and stock-boys of the last century Marketing, Personnel Management, Statistics, and other high-sounding, meaningless names. England was at the height of her commercial glory during the eighteenth century, but no courses on the probability of nickles falling on heads or tails were taught at Cambridge or Oxford.

Frosh Cagers Ready To Go

By ELLIOTT COOPER

For almost a month Dean Smith and Joe Quigg have been looking over candidates for the freshman basketball team, and now, with less than three weeks remaining before the opening of the season, a squad of fifteen has been selected.

Smith said that he may not keep all fifteen for the entire season since he expects at least two more freshmen to come out for the team when they finish participating in fall sports.

The coach stated that he is looking for Ward Marslender and Louis Sullivan to start practicing soon, and there is a possibility that one or two other frosh footballers might come out.

15 Is Squad Limit

At the present time, however, Smith expects to go with the fifteen who have been working out since October 15. The starting team will be largely made up of players who are at Carolina on a basketball scholarship.

Smith added that there are a couple of players on his team who do not have scholarships here but turned down similar offers from other schools to come to Carolina.

A geographical breakdown of the roster shows that nine of the fifteen are native North Carolinians,, with three from New York, and one each from New Jersey, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania.

The Carolina Contingent is led by Yogi Poteet from Hendersonville. In addition to Poteet the others are: Wayne Fouchee, John Laws, John Caldwell, Tom Butler, Jim Wicker, Lew Phillips, Fred Engle, and Bill Hubbard.

Don Walsh, Ken McComb, and Hubert Callahan are the three New Yorkers playing for the frosh. The remaining squad members are Tom Anderson from Bristol, Conn., Denny Clark from Short Hills, N.J., and Jim Hudock from Tunkhannock, Pa.

Hudock Tallest At 6-7

Hudock and McComb are the team's two big men at 6-7 and 6-6 respectively while Foushee at 5-8 is the shortest player on the squad.

The frosh schedule has been completed with the exception of one date which is in the process of being filled. December 19 is the date in question, and it is expected that either Navy or Maryland will furnish the opposition for the game which will be played in Annapolis or College Park.

The other Big Four schools are scheduled to furnish most of the opposition for the frosh as they meet Wake Forest three times and Duke twice.

The Schedule

December 3- Hargrave Military (home); 8- High Point J.V. home) 13- Wake Forest (Burlington); 15- Campbell College (Lillington); 19- Pending.

January 8- Wake Forrest (home); 14- N.C. State (Raleigh);

Booters Into Home Stretch

By JIM PURKS

Carolina's varsity soccer team is coming into the home stretch, with two big conference games to go after Friday's contest with Davidson in Chapel Hill.

For several players on the squad, the next three games will be the last they will play for a Tar Heel team—and these seniors would like nothing better than for the team to end undefeated in the conference.

Four years ago many of these seniors were on a fabulous freshman team, which Coach Allen has stated was the best freshman team Carolina has ever had.

This team started its season with a 7-2 trouncing of the N.C. State freshmen in Chapel Hill, then repeated the performance later in Raligh.

The Duke freshmen scored three goals within four minutes in the last quarter to tie the Tar Babies, 3-3 in the next game.

Anxious for revenge, the freshman team defeated Duke, 3-2, in Durham. In a final game, the Tar Babies played Davidson's newly formed varsity squad and won, 4-0, finishing the season undefeated and with one tie.

Playing on the undefeated team four years ago, for instance, were Coleman Barks and Rick Grausman. Barks, now a standout at right wing, played one of the forward positions then. Grausman, now at left wing, played right wing for the freshman team.

Also on the forward line, and still playing for Coach Allen was hustling Tom Rand, who currently is on the injured list and may not see much action for the remainder of the season.

On defense, only fullback stalwart Dave Corkey and halfback Bab Borden remain from the freshman team. Both have been playing regularly for the varsity since their sophomore pear.

Clement Soph Of Week

Raliegh (AP)— "He certainly deserves the nomination... he's a tremendous competitor.

This was the comment of Carolina coach Jim Tatum after hearing that his quarterback, Henry Clement, had been named by the Associated Press as the Atlantic Coast Conference Sophomore of the Week.

Juror Bill Killed By Unanimous Vote

After lenghty debate last night the Student legislature, in the last meeting of the 25th session, unanimously defeated a bill concerning the selection of the jurors (Gary Greer-SP) and its six proposed ammendments.

The body did not contest Student Body President Don Furtado's veto to the bill passed last week asking for a definite policy toward the publishing of the Yackety Cack (John Brooks-SP).

The proposed jury selection changes would have, among other things, opened the entire campus to selection for jury duty and the attorney general's staff would select the jurors.

Under Art. III, the jurors would have to be notified two weeks in advance of impending duty. If they failed to appear at the stipulated time, unless excused by the attorney general, their right to vote or hold office in student government would be denied.

Also the defendent and counsel at the trial ould have the privilege of freely questioning, accepting or refusing any or all of the jurors.

Norman Smith(Ind.) in presenting the proposed changes introduced by John Brooks and himself, stated that students receive many privileges and so should "be willing to do something in return," such as the jury duty. He called this a "long needed change."

Weaver Rules Out Local Telecast Of UNC-Notre Dame Football Game; Cites ACC's Agreement As Reason

'Great Injustice' Done To University Officials

Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner James Weaver yesterday shut out any possibility of televising the University of North Carolina-Notre Dame football game to people in this area Saturday.

"A telecast of the game would be a violation of the Atlantic Coast Conference Television Agreement," said Weaver.

Commenting on earlier reports that UNC officials would not ask for the telecast, Weaver said, "Those reports are a great injustice to the officials of the University and are just not true."

He added that it was his responsibility to interpret the rulings of the ACC and not the officials in Chapel Hill.

Weaver gave two reasons for not televising the game in this area. Other than being a violation of the agreement, the commissioner said the telecast would be against the Television Committee's policy of only sponsoring games between conference members.

Movies of the Carolina-Notre Dame game will be shown in Carroll Hall Tuesday night at 7:30. The free movies will be sponsored by the Current Affairs Committee of GMAB.

"The ACC has sold the rights to a sponsor, and if any other game were televised, it would not be fair to the sponsor," said Weaver. "I would never sanction such a game under those conditions," he added.

Carrboro Not In Its 'Death Throes,' Things Are 'Pretty Bright,' Todd Says

Carrboro, Chapel Hill's longtime neighbor to the west, is not in its "death throes," the town's mayor said today.

"As far as I can tell," Mayor R. B. Todd said, "Carrboro's business is good and things are pretty bright."

Todd, an official at a firm which has its offices in Chapel Hill, was commenting on an article carried by The Daily Tar Heel recently which pictured the town as "ringing its death knell." It also predicted "unconditional capitulation to urbanized Chapel Hill."

"I read that story," Todd said. "Carrboro is by no means dying."

Todd said that the virtual closing of Burlington Mills' plant here has 'hurt" the town but has not killed it.

"About 40 per cent of the people who were working at the mill were from out of town," he said. "And most of the others have been successful in getting other employment."

At its peak, the mill employed about 400 persons. Now, about 50 remain, working in a cloth room. A tax counsel for the firm recently said that he doubted if the plant would ever be used again for textile manufacturing.

According to Todd, Burlington is now offering to sell the 35-acre, two-unit plant for $750,000 or lease it. And he is confident that "someone" will move into the facility soon, and "lift us up."

Todd said he had seen some bank figures showing Carrboro business "about as high as it's ever been." And he said he believed the volume of busines is a little better than ever before.

He said a good indication of Carboro's "bright" picture is the fact that there have been no business closings. Also, he said, collections by the Town of Carrboro have been good and show no indication of declining.

The mayor scoffed at the mention of consolidation between Chapel Hill and Carrboro, a familiar subject around here which usualy gets negative comment from residents of either town.

"Sure, I can see some advantages to consolidation," he said. "but there is a 'place' for both towns. On one hand you have the University town and on the other a business community. Residents of both places have their own responsibilities."

MAYOR TODD

Chapel Hill may unwittingly be able to help promote Carrboro business from now on, Todd said, since they have just installed parking meters.

"The meters could help Carrboro business," Todd said. "We have three free parking lots right in the center of town and our merchants can sell almost anything you want to buy." "I see no reason to lose faith in Carrboro," the mayor said.

Fifteen Named On Committee For Chancellor

RALEIGH—(AP)—Fifteen prominent North Carolinians were selected Thursday to screen the field and recommend three possible succesors to North Carolina State College Chancellor Carey H. Bostian.

President William C. Friday of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, who appointed the committe, said it would begin its work in the immediate future.

After the group selects three possibilities, Friday will choose one of the three and recommend him to the Board of Trustees for final action.

Bostian said recently he would quit as chancellor next July 1 and return to what he referred to as his first love, classroom teaching. He is a professor of genetics in North Carolina State College's School of Agriculture.

Committee membership was equally divided among trustees, alumni and faculty representatives.

The trustees named were J. Spencer Love, Greensboro textile executive; R;udolph I. Mintz of Wilmington, former president of the Alumni Assn.; Sam L. Whitehurst, state representative of New Bern; Thomas J. Pearsall of Rocky Mount, former speaker of the state House of Representatives and former president of the State College Agriculture Foundation; and Dick Noble, Trenton farmer.

Alumni were Mose Kiser of Greensboro, president of the State College Alumni Assn.; Lesley N. Boney Jr., Wilmington, chairman of the Alumni Association's board of directors; C. W. Tilson of Durham, general manager of the Central Carolina Farmers Exchange; Percy B. Ferebee, Andrews, former member of the General Assembly and former trustee of the Consolidated University; and Ernest B. Hunter, assistant to the publisher of The Charlotte Observer.

India Slipping Into Red Hands? No, Says Grad Student Narasiah

By ED GOODMAN

Many analysts of international affairs say that India is among several Asian nations slowly slipping from Western influence and into the grasp of Russia.

These claims are refuted by an Indian graduate student at Carolina, K. Narasiah, of Mysore.

Narasiah, an instructor at the University of Mysore, who is studying toward a Ph.D. in American history, says that the Indian people still favor this country and distrust Russia.

AMERICA DEPENDABLE

"There is no other country, at present," he says, "to which India looks more for ideals and material help. They know America is the country they can depend on most."

Narasiah claims the Russians have made little headway with their propaganda program and offers of economic aid because "the Indian people recognize them for what they are."

"There is an amount of fear associated with the name 'Russia'," he says, "while joy is associated with the United States."

AID PROGRAM HELP

What impresses Indians most about the United states, he says, is its "economy and efficiency." Since India is an underveloped nation with a low standard of living, economic considerations are of prime importance to everyone.

Thus Narasiah claimes, American economic and cultural aid programs have greately swayed Indian openion in this country's direction.

Among the other factors favorably influencing their attitudes toward America is the early aquaintance of Indian children with their culture and ideals, he says. Such courses as American history are taught grammar school children there.

But, most Indian pupils do not study primarily to get a general education as they do in America.

The governing reason for study in India is the economic advancement, Narasiah says. "Here, it is the acquisition of knowlege."

Thus, a larger portion of Indian college students study technical fields, such as the sciences, medicine and engineering. India is attempting rapid social and industrial expansion, he explains; hence, it is easier to get jobs in these fields.

But this growth and improvment is being impeaded, he says, by what the Indian people believe to be an inferior educational system. At present, their schools are patterned after an English model, which was instituted in the latter part of the 19th Century.

Basically, the Indian system is similar to the American. Students must progress from elementary to high school. The senior year of high school is replaced by what Narasiah terms "pre-university." Unlike the American system, each Indian student must pass a series of examinations to climb from one rung of the scholastic ladder to the next.

The chief reason for this system's inadequacy, he says, is its slowness. "You cover in one semester what we cover in a year," he maintains.

However, he adds, Indian officals are now taking steps to correct this deficency.

Free Juke Box Music Tonight At 8 In GM

The Inter-Dormitory Council and Graham Memorial Activites Board will sponsor free juke box music in the Rendezvous Room tonight from 8 to 12 midnight. The dance will be for couples only.

Simular" Jubilee" dances will be held every other Friday night with free juke box music. On alternate Fridays, a combo will provide music for "Jamboree" dances, also free to couples.

Friday night's dance will be the second in a series of Friday night dances which will continue throughout the school year. The first was held Nov. 7.

'Piecemeal' Approach Said Danger

One of the major problems facing American schools, whose future is inevitably connected with American defense, is a piecemeal approach to education.

Dean Francis Keppel, Harvard University education dean, stressed this point Thursday while addressing the students and faculty of the UNC School of Education.

Keppel, here during the school's observance of American Education Week, emphasized the importance of balance in building an educational program to meet America's needs.

The Sputnik scare made it clear, he said, "to the people and to the legislators alike that there was a connection between American defense and education."

PIECEMEAL SERIES

Keppel noted that the result was a "piecemeal series of programs aimed at influencing specific parts of the American educational system," especially in the areas of science and mathematics.

"The federal government, of course, has long been influential in certain problems that affect the elementary and secondary schools: vocational education, the land-grant colleges, and the like," he continued.

"The question," he said, "is not whether there shall be federal influence but the form it shall take."

A reassessment of the balance between educational influences—including parents, the children themselves, local voters, the state, special interest groups, educators themselves, and the federal government—is needed, Dean Keppel suggested.

He noted that the educators fall into two categories, scholars and profesional educators, and suggested that "the influence of the scholars and learned societies on the curriculum of the schools should be increased."

UNITY ESSENTIAL

But Keppel also warned that "it is essential that the two parts of the educational world join hands in these matters rather than struggle with each other to the loss of the cause of education in he U. S. and to the weakening of the influence of the educators on public policy."

Federal influence should be increased following the pattern set in public health and agriculture, he suggested. "By support of research and development and the spreading of tested practices through local units, the federal government can support education at its very weakest point: research and training."

The Education Week meeting is sponsored annually by the School of Education, the Frank Porter Graham chapter of the Student Nafessional education, and the UNC unit of the North Carolina Education tional Education Asn., Phi Delta Kappa honorary fraternity in pro-Assn.

Wrong Author

The author of the Letter to the Editor in Thursday's paper is not the Jeff White listed in the student directory.

White told The Daily Tar Heel yesterday he had received some comment about the letter, and since he was the only White listed, he wanted to clear the matter up.

White, a freshman from Edison, said he was planning to enter the business school, and that the letter did not reflect any opinion of his.

New Borrowing Methods Made For Loan Fund

Changes in methods of borrowing money from the student loan fund here will become effective at the beginning of the spring semester.

Under the new arrangement announced Wednesday, a needy scholar over 21 years old may borrow more money without the necessity of getting people to endorse his note, and without collateral. Students under 21 must have endorsers.

Interest rates are set at 3 per cent, and no interest rates are to accumulate while a student is enrolled in the University on a full-time basis. Officals said the majority of students are unaffected by the interest change, except for the advantages of not paying interest while in school.

The change does not apply to loans now in effect, but only to new loans after next Feb. 1.

Under the new plan, entering freshmen may borrow provided they show evidence of a good to superior academic ability. Heretofore, most of the loans were made to students already enrolled in college who maintained good scholastic averages.

Loans are not to exceed the amount needed to pay college expenses or in any case not more than $1,000 in one calendar year of a total of $5,000. Loans must be paid back in 10 years.

For The Strong

Those who debated the jury trial revision bill last night and all those who believe in democracy have to realize that a democracy, whether here on the campus or in the nation is a government for the strong.

It is a government for all those who have faith in all men's potentiality to govern. It is for those who believe that each person in society is potentially responsible. It is for those who believe that men are rational.

It takes a great deal of courage to be an advocate of democracy. One must see a murderer, a rapist, a prostitute, a Faubus, even one's best friend being false, and still come up with the wellspring of faith that in each man the potentiality is there.

He must occasionally swallow what he believes the best thing to do at the moment in favor of the overiding principle that the people are most fit to govern, and that they have the possibility of doing so wisely.

It takes courage to believe these things, especially when one sees the democracy of some 160 years standing heading toward its own destruction.

Yet when one realizes that America has never been a true democracy and that it has still a long way to go before it is a true democracy one can feel easier about the present failure of the democratic process. Perhaps if men would commit themselves to the idea of a democracy the government of the people, for the people, by the people, in which the rights of each individual are protected—maybe, only maybe through time and education, the people of the United States would be truly free, and the oligarchy of the non-democrats from the people who slant news in the press to the people who would restrict one's right to serve on the jury by interest and interview will be no longer. The people are waiting.

States Rights

Those who use states' rights as an argument for the preservation of segregation seem to forget that the states also have some responsibilities to the Constitution. Without fulfilling their obligations to and under the Constitution, the states can hold little claim to rights.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and under the Constitution, segregation is unconstitutional. It is the obligation of the states to live up to their responsibility to the Constitution in complying with the 1954 Supreme Court decision. Yet in every state in the South, including North Carolina, the attitude has been how best to avoid that decision. It has been an attitude of closing the barn door after the horse has left, and maintaining with a good deal of vigor that the horse was still in. Thus, the South has been cast in the role of fool, and its leaders in the role of demagogue.

Even in North Carolina which has integrated on a small scale, there is no constructive plan of bringing about integration. In its stead there is only a plan that can bring a halt to the educational establishment if an integration crisis starts. This negative approach is surely not consistent with the state's responsibility to live up to the Constitution, and circumvention by token integration is even more insidious.

There needs to be a plan developed now whereby the state is tangibly moving toward integration with the goal in mind of having the state fully integrated by a certain year — that time most consistent with having the least amount of racial conflict.

The state has to its credit succeeded in avoiding the issue.

Dancing

One of the first of Graham Memorial Director Howard Henry's innovations with respect to Graham Memorial programming has been to have free music, combo or juke-box, every Friday night in the Rendezvous Room.

Dancing has been dead on the University campus for quite awhile, but it can be resurrected if not as a substitute for the parked car, at least as a compliment to it.

The idea is a good one, and perhaps soon dancing will again be in vogue.

SP—The Candidates Speak—UP

This is the third in a series of articles covering the Student Legislature campaign district-by-district. The Daily Tar Heel will interview each candidate for legislature, asking each candidate three questions on issues that have been important on this campus in the past and are important at the present time. In each district, all candidates will be asked the same three questions from a list of some 15 questions to be asked all candidates. In this way The Daily Tar Heel hopes that both the candidates point of view and the major issues will be brought into focus. The series is being compiled by Dee Daniels and Stan Fisher, and continues today with Men's Dormitory Districts V and VI.

Dorm Men's V

He was asked the following questions:

(1) How would you better student-faculty relationships?

(2) What do you think of class officers?

(3) Are you for deferred rush?

Jim Hartung

Hartung, a freshman from Chattanooga, Tenn., replied:

"It seems that through the years the relations between the students and faculty have drifted apart. The solution at the present is not known by anyone on the campus. The problem should be extensively studied in the future. Some possible solutions could be (1) faculty members inviting students to their homes as some do now and (2) a student-faculty basketball game, as the junior class is proposing, and other events that could bring a closer union. The fault lies in both the students and the facuty and a definite answer now would be impossible.

"I am for the trial period that class officers are going through this year. With a definite purpose they can serve in many ways. To do away with them could prove harmful to the campus.

"Deferred rush would have many disadvantages. It would put a strain on both the fraternity and the rushee. The temptations and unavoidable scenes of "dirty rush" would be uncontrollable. Also the new pledges help to balance the finances of the fraterntiy. Possibly a longer rush period would improve the situation."

Dorm Men's VI

Candidates on the UP slate from Dorm Men's VI are Billy Hubbard and Dave Rockwell, one year Legislature seats, and Bob Bilbro and Carl Matheson, six-months seats.

They were asked:

(1) What do you think about University owned utilities?

(2) Are you for mixed honor councils?

(3) Quiet in the dormitories, how should it be enforced?

Billy Hubbard

Billy Hubbard, 18, running for a year seat, a freshman from Raleigh, answered:

"As long as the University can administer to the students advantageously by offering the best utilities at the cheapest possible rate, this plan is best. Only if the University used its advantages to the disadvantage of the students would this plan be bad.

"Practically speaking I don't believe this would be a good idea. Plus the fact that the one council would be over worked, there might be a hesitancy to bring forth all the facts in a case before a mixed council.

"The best factor in gaining cooperation in the dorms is a strong, hard working dorm counselor. A thorough screening before the appointment of the dorm counselor, picking one who is willing to work sincerely and closely with the IDC, is the best way to gain good cooperation in the dorms."

Dave Rockwell

Rockwell, a freshman from Connecticut, says:

"Personally I think a mixed honor council would be a very good practice. I do not feel that the problems encountered by the men—and women students of Carolina are such that two councils are needed. A mixed honor council might well prove to be more than just one consisting of men trying men. A more unbiased opinion could be obtained by having both men and women work together.

"In the new dorms, I don't think that there is as great a noise problem as there is in the older dorms. The outside hallways and separate entrances, provide for a much quieter atmosphere. The older dorms are considerably noisier. This problem of excessive noise is a serious one. The majority of the students causing the noise are the ones who don't care enough to study. Eventually their grades will eliminate them. In the meantime I think that each floor should elect someone to maintain order and if necessary levy fines. This may all sound very juvenile, but if the individuals are juvenile enough to make noise, they must inturn be treated in a manner comparable to their actions."

Bob Bilbro

Running for the six months seat in this district, Bob Bilbro, 18, a freshman from Greenville, answered the questions, saying:

"I think University utilities are good so long as they are advantageous to the student; that is good service available at a cheaper rate than a private firm would offer. I hope this will always be the case, but should it become impossible for University utilities to undersell outsiders, then changes should be made.

"No, I do not favor mixed Honor Councils. Ideally the idea looks good, but from a practical standpoint there are numerous disadvantages. Women's cases have different backgrounds from those of men and there also might be hesitancy in presenting the complete case on either side. This would make a mixed council less efficient than the present system.

"Also one council would be overloaded with all cases. Each council now lingers into the wee hours of the morning and if all cases converged on one council the task would be tremendous."

"Quietness in the dorm is certainly desirable and possibly stronger enforcement would prove beneficial. I would favor channeling this effort through the IDC by strengthening and increasing the duties of the dorm counselors.

"Probably more consideration for one's dormmates would render better conditions, too."

Bob Thompson

Running for a six months seat is Bob Thompson, 20, a junior from Aurora. Thompson said.

"I feel that the University owned utilities should strive to give the best service at the lowest possible cost. I regret that I am not well enough informed about the operation of the University owned utilities to give a more definite statement at this time.

"At the present time I feel that it is best to maintain two Honor Councils. In view of the fact that several changes have been made in the Honor Council, I feel that it is best to make sure that these changes have been fully understood before making further changes. In my opinion further changes at this time could very easily lead to confusion and misunderstanding.

"The elimination of three-man rooms, and the establishment of study rooms in the dormitories would help make the dormitories quieter and a better place in which to study.

"With regards to the enforcement of quietness, I feel that the new system of dormitory courts within each dorm is the best solution to this problem."

Henry McPherson

"Running for the remaining six months seat in the district is Henry McPherson. McPherson, 21, is a senior from High Point.

In reply to the questions posed, McPherson answered:

"The purpose of a utility is to perform a public service in an efficient manner at a minimum cost. University owned utilities, with the exception of telephone service which is improving, provide adequate service. As long as they continue to do this there should be no obpection to them.

"I am opposed to mixed Honor Councils because I don't think they would be in the best interests of the student body. Separate Honor Councils would be more likely to get complete stories in many cases and would, therefore, be in a better position to make necessary decisions.

"Enforcement of quiet hours should be the duty of some group within each dorm which has been given the power to enforce its decisions. However, regardless of rules and groups for their enforcement, we will continue to have card games, bull sessions, jokes, and laughter which, even when kept within bounds, is distracting to persons trying to study. Perhaps provision of all night study rooms would help alleviate this problem."

Dorm Men's V

In Dorm Men's V a one seat is open in this district. Running for election to this seat on the Student Party ticket is Bill Porter, 21, a junior from Falls Church, Va. Porter is the incumbent for this district.

Porter was asked:

(1) How would you better student faculty relationships?

(2) What do you think of Class officers?

(3) Are you for deferred rush?

Bill Porter

Porter states, "(I) would try and inspire the faculty to improve the relationship by asking them (the students) to have the students to their homes for meals and general discussions."

"I am not in favor of class officers. In the past they have been unable to prove themselves basically for the following reasons: classes are too large to organize; only a minority graduate with class with which they enter; all of the students in the University have enough commitments to other groups without having to add another purposeless group to the ones already established; One of the stresses at Carolina is that students are not judged according to class. Class officers are strictly an honorary position and a farce at that.

"Let those capable people running for class officers run for an office in which they can apply their capabilities.

"I am for deferred rush. I feel that an entering freshman has enough problems ahead, in existence upon entering, and that student government should attempt to minimize these as much as possible."

Dorm Men's VI

Four seats — two one year, and two six months — are open in this newly formed district. Running from this district on the Student Party ticket are Bob Nobles, Dave Jones, Bob Thompson, and Henry McPherson.

Questions asked the candidates in this district are as folows:

(1) What do you think about University owned utilities?

(2) Are you for mixed Honor Councils?

(3) Quiet in the dormitories — How should it be enforced?

Dave Jones

Dave Jones, a junior from Fremont, candidate for a one year seat, answered:

"I am for the principle of University ownership, but I feel that too many of the employees and officials have 'found a hoe' and are not interested in doing the best job, because they are not interested in the principle that the University is for the students and not for them.

"Yes, and will vote for the again if given a chance. (On Honory Councils)

"A more vigorous IDC enforcement system with fines up to $5 allowable. Dormitory and student government officials should not ignore the noise because in so doing they ignore their responsibility."

Bob Nobles

Bob Nobles, 20, a freshman from Panama City, Fla., and running for the other one year seat, said,

"There are several University owned utilities which are not functioning, in my opinion, to the interests of the student as much as it is possible for them to do so. This invites further investigation."

On Honor Council combination, he answered that he was for mixed Honor Councils, "Only insofar as mixed Honor Councils are not prejudical to the upholding of justice and fair dealing. The greatest problem in this issue is the tremendous amount of misunderstanding. It is evident to me that many people do not understand by actions i have observed concerning questions on this subject. People do not understand and they condemn that which they do not understand. I see in this proposal the seeds of corruption. I am perfectly willing and even eager to see as many violators as possible tried by one Honor Council. Yet, do not let us forget that coeds live under different rules than men at UNC.

"These rules which apply only to coeds, their violators should be tried only by coeds. The principle behind this argument for a single Honor Council has merit. Yet I see in it the possibility of a biased council trying violators of the Campus and Honor Codes. As long as there is this possibility, let us shun mixed Honor Councils to such an extent. I am not willing to sacrifice the guarantee of a trial by one's fellow citizens who live under the same rules for the mere sake of expediency. Let us take much time for thought on this question, for it is a vitally important one!

"The only practical way that quiet can be enforced in the dormitories is by mutual cooperation and consideration on the part of all the residents in that dorm. As this is not feasible with so many irresponsible students as we have today, the next best thing would be for each dorm to establish a set of rules and punishments concerning the quiet in the dorm, the violators of such rules to be tried by the Dormitory Council Court. How the DCC acts in this situation will determine the success of these rules. There is in most dorms, yet not all, a need for such action."

Carl Matheson

Matheson is a candidate for the other six months seat in Dorm Men's VI. He is a senior from Taylorsville.

Concerning University owned utilities, Matheson said:

"The University controls the heat, water, electricity and telephones that we use daily. I think that, even though there is room for improvement, this is the best plan to follow. True, the interests of private enterprise are neglected, but economically we can't readily afford to do otherwise since the University owned utilities are tax free and University regulated.

He continued, "I am opposed to mixed honor councils largely because I feel that that would be less effective than the two separate bodies we have today. The presence of both sexes on an honor council would inhibit the testimony given before it for obvious reasons. Also I, feel that a man can never cope with the problems of a woman as well as another woman and vice versa. Our honor councils function efficiently and effectively as they are. Consequently I would oppose a change.

"Quiet hours are one of the major problems in our dorms all over campus. It is impossible for the IDC representative or the dorm officers to strictly enforce quiet hours as individuals, since they have scholastic obligations to themselves and social obligations to their fellow dorm residents that prevent them from acting as policemen.

"I think that the system of dormitory courts is the most logical way to combat the problem in the dorms that have the single, long hall. In the three new dorms I think that understanding and cooperation between the residents of each section, coupled with a practice fo reporting chronic offenders to the IDC, is the most plausible solution."

What is happening on this campus is not unique. It is happening all over, from San Francisco, to Bangor to Miami.

People from all walks of life are coming to college (for instance) and are trying to gain recognition and response from students, faculty members and other informal groups. But instead of getting what they are seeking, they meet strong opposition and their desires are thwarted; because of their inadequate means of building bridges, sentiment bridges!

When a person is denied recognition from these groups he has four alternatives: (1) withdrawing to his pre-college group (which entails going home weekends), (2) creating a new on-campus group of his own, (3) withdrawing into himself, and (4) simply growing up.

Those in categories two and four are strictly in the minority and are getting less and less each year.

This leaves two groups or alternatives: conformity (a group joiner, Ivy leaguer, etc.) or withdrawal (the isolate). Neither of these two lead to emotional security. To be sure, some of the conformers get security in their conformity, but these people are not really mature. They are merely deluding themselves, for they cannot stand by themselves.

What is the answer to this problem?

We feel the only logical and acceptable answer lies in growing up. We also feel that the best way to mature lies in three processes: RE-EVALUATION, INTROSPECTION, and RAPPORT. Three very difficult things to subscribe to, but pre-requisites to maturity.

"If we are to survive," Arthur Schlesinger Jr. says, "We must have ideas, vision and courage. These things are rarely produced by committees. Everything that matters in our inteilectual and moral life begins with an individual confronting his own mind and conscience in a room by himself."

The first step is a Re-evaluation, a re-evaluation of those things that we have been taught at home, in high school, in our church, and in our college. It is high time for us to review the ideas/mores/folkways that have been impressed upon us and to think for ourselves.

We must take an objective viewpoint of religion, moral codes, norms of behavior, and prejudices and then decide for ourselves what is right and what is good. At the same time, we should respect other's opinions. We should learn not to condemn others for having a different viewpoint but rather discuss the situation with them so that both of you may be able to understand the other side of the story as well.

The teachings we have had imposed upon us until we reached maturity were not put there as irrevocable truths, but rather as guides until we were mature enough to make our own decisions. That is, to make decisions based on our intellect and not on our emotions.

For instance, we are taught to love our parents at all times. This is a good thing when we are dependent upon them, but in order to grow up we must cut the apron strings. We must learn to be much more self-reliant. The Bible tells us that we must honor our parents, not love them. They are two different concepts. It is not necessary to love something just because you feel obligated to it. Honor and respect is adequate.

The important thing to do is to sit down and figure out what you believe in, what moral precepts you are going to follow, and why you feel this is right or this is wrong. We must view life not lethargically but rather as a positive dynamic force which demands our full participation as individuals.

A second factor leading to maturity is Introspection. We must look deeply inside of ourselves. We must find out what is there, what our capabilities are, what our limitations are, and what our behavioral deviations are. We must know ourselves then and only then can we trust ourselves and have confidence in ourselves.

Only until we have faith and confidence in ourselves, confidence based on experience gained from sound emotional and intellectual activity, are we capable of love, of faith in others, of gaining a sense of inner security and maturity.

Interrelated to both "re-evaluation" and "introspection" is the third and most important factor—the establishment of "rapport."

By rapport we mean a harmony of mutual feeling of friendliness, understanding, and trust between two people which is a direct outgrowth of an exchange of ideas above and beyond the dictates of social norms.

It almost seems to be an impossibility for people of opposite sexes to establish this type of mature relationship. The major reason for this lies in the mistrust each one has for the other. This sort of thing is disgraceful.

It is because people haven't been able to establish rapport that there are so many lonely people in this country. We use the term rapport to signify the optimum point or degree of sentiment bridges.

An example of the failure to establish rapport is shown by the phenomenon called the "mating gradient." The MG is the tendency for men to marry below their own level and for women to marry above. This sort of thing works out rather well for most people, but it leaves two groups socialy isolated. The college educated woman and the non-educated man.

Where can a college educated woman turn to meet a man of a higher level (the level being one that is higher educationally, economically, and/or socially) if she hasn't already by the time she graduates? To be sure, there are some men of this catgory, but not nearly enough for the growing number of college educated women.

The lack of acceptable companionship at this level has led many of these wofen into a lonely existence. So lonely that eventually, they look for and find a means of escape. The types of escapes are several; among them lonely women can (and do) turn to the arts, to other women, to prostitution, to compromise marriages, to religious fanaticism, to suicide, and to maturity as an individual.

We feel, however, that very few of these women are adequately prepared to face up to this type of situation. For a girl to remain single after she is 21 (for instance) exposes her to the coldness of the world, and the pressures to marry from within her family group and among her friends.

We feel that if these women would establish rapport with the opposite sex, thereby building solid sentiment bridges, they would not only become more independent, they would also learn that living alone has many assets that another arrangement would not have. And, furthermore, they would find that with confidence in themselves they no longer have a need to escape.

Loneliness can be conquered. But it cannot be done alone. It can be conquered by the establishment of rapport and other sentiment bridges. In establishing these solid relationships people will be able to gain a happiness and a security that is so powerful and binding that they will NEVER have to violate their own integrity.

Letters To The Editor

Saturday morning before I left for Charlottesville I picked up a big bundle of Daily Tar Heels to give out at the game.

They went like hotcakes.

Fortunately for the day, a goodly number of students took advantage of the opportunity to see an away game and have a lot of fun at the same time.

While the situation was not as critical Saturday for the Tar Heels as it had been two years previously, I feel, and I am sure that "North Carolina's highest paid public servant" will back me up, that the cheering and moral support given by Tar Heel fans was a contributing factor to victory.

In his letter, released through the University Club and submitted by me to the Daily Tar Heel, Mr. Tatum clearly stated that he wanted those students who had no classes on Saturday or who could make arrangements with their professors under the new cut system to attend the game.

Copies of this letter were distributed by the members of the University Club to their organizations. Only half a sentence was quoted in the Daily Tar Heel. If anyone is guilty of creating an impression that it is a good thing to cut all classes indiscriminately, it is not Coach Tatum.

I took movies of the crowd, the cheerleaders, parts of the game . . . including that first TD and its replay . . . and halftime show. I intend to show these pictures to the Calender Committee, or to as many members of it as will watch, and beg them to restore Carolina's Football Holiday.

The basis of my argument will be the fact that even in this "beat" day and age UNC students still participate in large numbers in old fashioned things like cheering at football games.

FIRST ARTICLE

The first article in the November issue of The Classical Bulletin published at St. Louis University is by Walter Allen Jr., UNC professor of Latin.

He explained

Dr. Allen's topic is "Imperial Mementoes in Suetonius."

He explained that Suetonius, the ancient Roman biographer of the Caesars, mentioned the many local attractions for the tourist of his own day including the birthplaces of some emperors converted into shrines and Nero's gaudy tomb.

"Antiquity had its own antiquity, and Roman Italy was as dotted with historical landmarks as is modern Italy," Dr. Allen stated.

DRUG CLUB MEETING

The monthly meeting of the Durham-Orange County Drug Club will be held Monday at 7 p.m. at the Institute of Pharmacy.

Following the 7 p.m. dinner, executive secretary of the National Pharmaceutical Council.

RESEARCH WORKSHOP

Some 35 physicians, statisticians and social scientists will meet here Saturday and Sunday for an Outpatient Department Research Workshop .

The Department of Medicine and the Department of Preventive Medicine of the UNC School of Medicine will be host to the group. Matters to be discussed will concern the improvement of medical care to ambulant (non-hospitalized) patients. This will be the second meeting of the group, a previous meeting was held in New York City last year.

NEWMAN CLUB

The Newman Club will hold a buffet supper Sunday at 5:30 p.m. The supper will be followed by "An Open Forum on the Bible."

The first Shirt Satellite is finally a reality! Just yesterday, during their lunch hour, Van Heusen scientists launched a Van Heusen Century Shirt into the stratosphere. It's now circling the earth 180,000 miles up, in an orbit so large that a grown man couldn't walk it, even in a whole day! Traveling at the legal 35 miles per hour, it is expected that the Van Heusen Century Shirt Satellite will remain up there in the blue beyond for at least 1200 years. And, with luck, maybe 1201.

"But," you will ask, "what value will the Shirt Satellite have for science?" Just this, friend! It will further prove the immutable law that the soft collar on Van Heusen Century Shirts won't wrinkle . . . ever! You see, the slick Van Heusen physicists have attached an electronic Wrinkle-ricter to the collar of the Van Heusen Century Shirt. This clever device will constantly send back electronic reports on the condition of the collar, so, for 1200 years, we earthlings will have absolute proof that the soft collar on Van Heusen Shirts won't wrinkle . . . ever. Should you ever have any doubts, just drop in to the Van Heusen office, and listen to the reports coming back from the Shirt Satellite.

One more thing—the Van Heusen Century Shirt Satellite will drop back to the earth in the spring of 3157 (possibly 3158) and you're all invited to the return party! If, in the meantime, you want to see the Van Heusen Century Shirt, you can at your campus haberdashery. He has them in 5 collar styles, in white, stripes and colors. $4 & $5. At better stores everywhere or write: Phillips-Van Heusen Corporation, 417 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

Patterson Rejects Selection Proposal

Hugh Patterson, chairman of Men's Honor Council, called the proposed amendments perfect in the idealistic sense, but certainly not pratical.

He urged the legislators to consider its feasibility. It would consume more time than the Honor Council has to devote. It would take interest and cooperation on the part of the jurors. Perhaps 30, 40 or 50 prospective jurors would be necessary before the jury could be selected by the involved persons. Consequently, much time would be wasted.

The whole thing would become too much of a legal process and would be too cumbersome for any one person to handle.

Patterson stated, "The honor system is not a plaything. I've got to be shown this will work."

Gary Greer (SP), in defense of the proposal, said the question of the whole matter is, "Will the students of UNC accept the responsibility given them?"

He claimed the present system doesn't solve any better the question of jurors for trials after school is out in the spring and between semesters, than the proposed one would.

Greer said the new system might be legalistic, but it is worse if a person is questioned until five in the morning as often happens presently.

Of the six proposed articles only one, which stipulates there shall be nine jury members, each juror may serve for one session during academic year and each member shall have one vote, was passed.

The whole bill was then defeated.

The body voted to place the Carolina Forum and the State Student Legislature under the deligation of the Forensic Council, in a bill introduced by Roger Foushee (SP).

Game Telecast

Charles P. Erickson stated that when the question first arose concerning televising the game, he presented it to Commissioner Weaver.

"Since the Uniesrvity of North Carolina does not wish to violate any conference agreement," he said, "This decision by the conference commissioner closed the matter."

Erickson said the University appreciated the desire of the commercial TV stations in the area to televise the game. He added, "We would like very much for our students, faculty, alumni and friends to see the Notre Dame-UNC game on television."

Durham television station WTVD had attempted to gain permission for the showing but announced Wednesday night that their plans had fallen through. WTVD will carry the North Carolina State-Clemson game.

WRAL-TV in Raleigh has also been trying to schedule the game and according to Fred Fletcher, vice president and general manager, the station will continue to try to obtain the necessary permission.

Fletcher's point was that the question was not one of breaking any stiff agreement because the requirements were not that tight.

"All it is is an agreement between the Secretary-Treasurer of the ACC and the commercial enterprise which will sponsor the State-Clemson game," stated Fletcher.

Fletcher said he could not get UNC officials to feed the program or request the NCAA to clear its carrying down to this area. He added that NCAA Commissioner Asa Bushnell said he would clear the game if asked.

Fletcher claimed that the ACC had a monopoly control on non-NBC games in this area.

"The circuits are ready and the game can be fed if someone from UNC will request it," he concluded. WRAL-TV continued to carry news broadcasts saying that there was still a possibility, though the commissioner had ruled against the telecast.

Seated at the cello is Miss Mary Gray Clarke.

Fourth Concert To Be Tuesday

The University String Quartet will present the fourth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Quartet members Edgar and Dorothy Alden, Jean Heard and Mary Gray Clarke, in their eight years together as a chamber ensemble, will perform Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 132; Boccherini's Quartet, Op. 32, No. 4; and Debussy's Quartet, Op. 10.

Dr. Alden, first violinist, teaches violin, theory and graduate courses in musicology in the UNC Music Department. Former concert master of the N.C. Symphony and the Mozart Festivel Orchestra in Ashville, he has appeared as soloist with these groups.

The Aldens have performed throughout North Carolina as soloists and in various chamber groups. Mrs. Alden, violist and teacher of strings in Chapel Hill, has also held first chair position in the N.C. Symphony and the University symphony.

Mrs. Heard, second violinist, studied violin with the late Ottorkar Cadek of the University of Alabama and with Mischa Mischakoff at the Juilliard School of music in New York.

A graduate assistant in the Music Department, Miss Clarke is first 'cellist' with the University Symphony. She holds a master's degree from the Manhattan School of Music

Booters Meet Davidson In Last Home Contest

By JIM PURKS

Carolina's varsity soccer team will play its final home game of the season today when it faces Davidson College at 3p.m. on Fetzer Field.

The Tar Heels wil be after their seventh win, having won four games in a row since a 3-2 defeat at the hands of Washington & Lee in Lexington on Oct. 22.

Last year the Tar Heels defeated Davidson by a 2-0 count. Davidson's teams have shown a steady improvement since the school adopted soccer four years ago.

Today's contest will mark the final home appearance for several of Coach Marvin Allen's players.

On the forward wall will be seniors Rick Grausman, left wing, and Coleman Barks, right wing. Tom Rand, injured since halfway in the season will probably see limited action.

Both Grausman and Barks are enjoying their best year under Coach Allen. The two wings have been instrumental in setting up numerous goals. Barks alone scored two vital goals in Carolina's 3-1 defeat of Roanoke College.

On defense, Goalie Jim Rattay, the team captain, is a senior, along with fullback Dave Corkey and halfback Bob Borden. Senior Nick Zlotnicki, who played goalie last year after Rattay was injured in a game against Virginia, is out for the season due to an arm injury.

LAST HOME GAME—Coleman Barks, a senior booter from Chatanooga gets his last chance to play before the home fans today when Carolina goes against Davidson on Fetzer Field at 3:00.

Last Non-Conference Foe

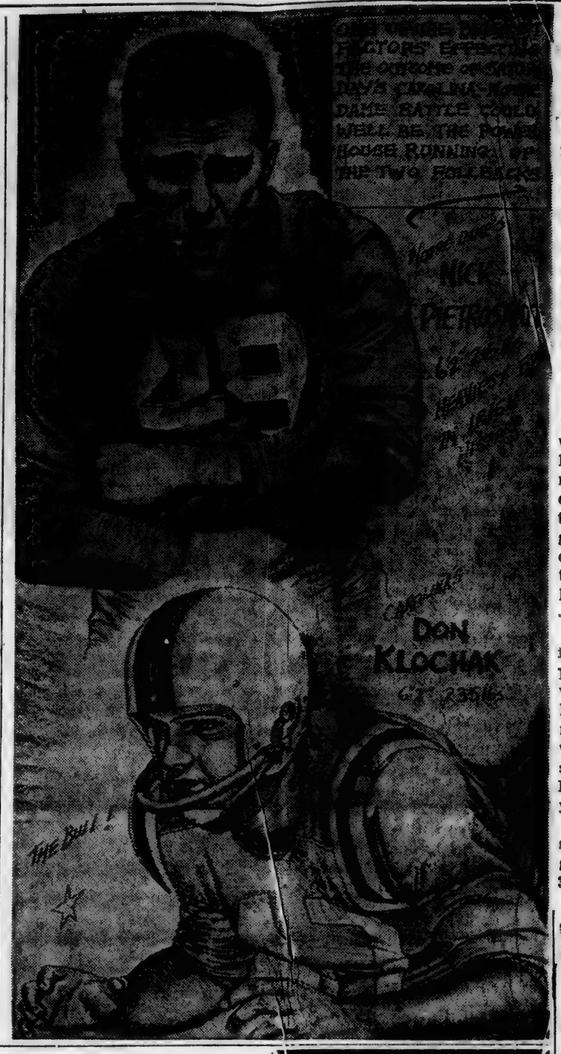
Davidson will be the Tar Heels' last non-conference opponent. Carolina so far has won four of its five games with non-conference foes.

Following the Davidson game, Carolina will have a day's rest before traveling to College Park for the much-awaited clash with the Maryland Terps on Monday afternoon.

Then Carolina will wind up the season by playing Duke in Durham on Nov. 21.

APPROCHES RECORDS

CHAPEL HILL—Tar Heel quarterback Jack Cummings needs only 17 pass completions and 81 yards through the air is the next two games to break UNC single season school records, held by All-American Charlie Justice. Cummings has completed 52 for 831 yards this season.



Fans Want More Klochak

By DICK BARKLEY

With their gridiron heroes mowing down one foe after another, Carolina loyalists should be walking on air. But many are not. Why? A tour through this football-minded community with open-ear supports this startling fact.

Tar Heel fans, it seems, want more than victory. They want to see "The Bull," "The Tank," or more presentable — fullback Don Klochak. And they claim they are not seeing him. Or at least not enough of him. Many students are on the verge of becoming furious. And not without cause.

Klochak missed the first four games of the season because he was simply not in shape to play. He had just been released from military service and had not played a football game since 1954. So, that he did not play until the fifth game was understandable—and acceptable. But when Don finally was thrown into combat against Maryland, everyone knew—or thought—that "Big Klo" had returned.

On his first running attempt, fans stood, writers gasped the opponents shuddered. He blasted his way for 14 yards. Then he circled left end for 12, but the play was nullified by a penalty. Spectators went wild. But their hysteria was short-lived, for out came Klochak. He had run only three times for 20 yards.

The following Saturday, Don saw more action. In fact, he was given the ball five times, gaining 30 yards. Still, out he came.

Tennessee was next, and "Big Klo" was finally placed behind the Tar Heel first team line. He bulled, blasted, shoved, pushed, stiff-armed his way for six, then 13, then five, and finaly for 18 for a touchdown. In his scoring run he ran right over an aspiring tackler rather than take the trouble to try to run around him.

The next time Carolina got the ball, big Don began to roll once more. He started the second scoring march with a 15 yard dash through the middle, carrying three Volunteers for half that distance. Four plays later, he tore off tackle for a ten-yard gain. Tennessee fans were agast at this "armored tank." Before the final gun, Klochak had gained 92 yards in 15 attempts.

Swearingen Glad That He Came To Carolina

(Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of articles on Carolina's graduating senior football players. The first in the series is Fred Swearingen.)

By STEWART PHINIZY

"I remember well the first time I visited Carolina. What really impressed me was the friendliness on the campus. I decided that this was the school for me and I'm mighty happy that I chose Carolina," said Fred Swearingen.

Jim Tatum is too.

Fred Swearingen, a 6-2 203 pound senior from Petersburg, Virginia, anchors down the left guard position in the tough Carolina line, which Tatum by his own admission says is probably the fastest and most agile line he has ever had.

Fred Switches Positions

Swearingen is a quick, aggressive guard who has almost been a utility man during his four years at Carolina, having been switched so often from one position to another. But it's a safe bet Coach Tatum wishes he had a dozen Fred Swearingen's.

George Williams. On display at the Intimate Bookshop.

Fred captured All-American honors in high school at Petersburg as a center. However when he enrolled at Carolina he found himself at the rugged tackle position. Then when the call went out for more depth at center, there was Fred. This was during his sophomore year.

It was in his junior year that the husky Swearingen began to make his mark at guard. How does Fred feel about moving around so much. He says simply, "I don't care where I play as long as I'm out there playing."

Fred is hesitant to talk about himself but he will quickly tell you that it's just great being a part of the football team. "They are a terrific bunch of boys," says Swearingen.

What does he plan to do after he graduates in June? "I don't know just yet, I might come back next year and go to law school," says Swearingen.

Do You Agree?

"It is notorious that the colleges did not recognize the abilities, elicit the best work, or inspire the interest of this century's two greatest men — Winston Churchill and Franklin Roosevelt."

Kin, Showpeople Will Honor Wolfe

Homage will be paid Thomas Wolfe by his contemporaries and theatrical personalities at a dinner preceeding the first off-Broadway production of "Look Homeward Angel," Dec. 5.

The play, based on Wolfe's famous novel of the same name and written for the stage by Mrs. Ketti Frings, will be presented by the Carolina Playmakers Dec. 5 and 6.

Invitations have been sent to motion picture star and Wolfe admirer Charles Laughton, playwright Clifford Odets, producer Kermit Bloomgarden, director Abbott Von Norstand, and Mrs. Frings.

Others expected for the informal affair are three members of the Wolfe family, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wolfe of Spartanburg, S. C., and Miss Mary Louise Wolfe, a cousin.

Paul Green, Ben Cone, Albert Coates, Corydon P. Spruill, Jonathan Daniels, Legette Blythe, and Victor Bryant, all Wolfe contemporaries, also were invited.

There will be no formal program, but plans have been made for the conversations and discussions at the dinner to be recorded for possible broadcast.

Mrs. Frings gave special permission to the Playmakers to present the prize-winning play which is still running in New York.

Wolfe, a native of Asheville, attended the University at Chapel Hill. He was a member of the Carolina Playmakers during his student days.

Option Asked In Atlanta On Integration

ATLANTA — (AP — Atlanta's Mayor William B. Hartsfield yesterday demanded that the state of Georgia "let the people of Atlanta be the jury to decide the fate of her own schools."

The mayor's statement came shortly after the city's four-man legislative delegation pledged itself to keep the public schools operating if there is any way to do it.

It has been widely forecast that Atlanta schools will have to close next September if negroes are ordered admitted and state laws aimed at blocking racial integration in classrooms are invoked.

As the prospect of school closings has become stronger there has been increasing demand from Atlantans that the city keep its schools operating even if it means acceptance of some integration.

Under present state law, this could not be done and Hartsfield called for modification of state law to put the decision in the city's hands.

At a citizens' meeting Thursday, there was strong demand that the schools be kept in operation even if this meant integration. The lawmakers joined in the feeling that the schools should not be closed but warned that keeping them open would be extremely difficult.

Rep. Ralph McClelland said he had found 95 per cent of the children want to keep the schools open, regardless, and Mrs. Edmund Phillips, mother of two children, said she and "many, many more parents" desire the same thing "above all else."

U.S. Money Power-Loss Planned By Soviet Union

By THOMAS P. WHITNEY
AP Foreign News Analyst

Nikita Khrushchev has taken the wraps off his economic timetable for licking the United States.

The Soviet premier and Communist Party chieftain, in presenting his theses for the 21st Communist Party Congres in Moscow in January set 1970 as the year for Soviet eclipse of the United States as the world's No. 1 industrial power.

And it follows, from the Soviet way of thinking, that on this basis the Soviet Union will have taken over world political leadership by then as well.

The Khrushchev plans make up a document testifying to the very real possibilities and potentialities of the Soviet Union in economic development.

They advance a new seven-year plan for Soviet economic development from 1959 through 1965 which would, if realized, put the U.S.S.R. within striking distance of overtaking the United States in economic might in five additional years.

Experience since the end of World War II indicates that even if there are failures in some particular areas, the over-all development plan announced by Khrushchev will be fulfilled.

American economic experience indicates that though the United States perhaps will make some progress between now and 1965 in increasing industrial and other output, such progress will be slow and characterized by ups and downs. The Russians aim to increase their production at a much more rapid rate.

If the Soviet Union, by 1970, succeeds in this aim here are some of the things it can and no doubt will do:

1. It will be able to buy more weapons, equip more armies, build larger fleets on the ocean and in the air, construct more and bigger missiles, provide more arms to allies and spend more money on military-scientific research than the United States.

2. It will be able to furnish more economic aid to underdeveloped nations, to spend more money on subversion of foreign politicians and organs of the press, to finance more espionage and subversive activity in non-Communist lands, to use its might in foreign trade to disrupt western channels of foreign trade. In short, it will be able to convert its economic power into political power abroad.

3. It will be able to devote far more capital than it can at the present time to the economic build-up of Communist China and other Communist countries. By this means it will add their increasing economic might to that of the Soviet Union in the world power struggle.

Vice President Is Conducting Job Interviews

Student Body Vice President Ralph Cummings will conduct interviews Monday and Tuesday with students applying for membership on three committees.

A total off eight vacancies must be filled on the following committees: Committee to Student the Fraternity Parking Problem, Student Dining Hall Committee and Study Area Committee.

Three appointments will be made to the committee studying fraternity parking. The two other members of this committee are the Inter-Fraternity Council president and the Traffic Board chairman.

The chairman and one member to the Student Dining Hall Committee will be appointed. This committee functions as a liason between students and the administration of Lenoir Hall. Other members of the committee are representatives from Legislature, the Carolina Women's Council and the Inter-Dormitory Council.

Vacancies on the Study Area Committee include the chairman and two members. This committee investigates the problem and makes recommendations for providing additional study areas on campus.

Interviews will be held by Cummings from 2 to 5 p.m. Monday and Tuesday in the student government office.

Police Dept. Investigating Complaints

Theft, hit and run and vandalism complaints were reported to the Chapel Hill Police Department Thursday.

Archie Glenn Jr. reported a pair of black fender skirts were stolen from his car the night of November 12. The car was parked behind Cobb Dorm when the theft occurred. The fender skirts were valued at $40.

Police Lieutenant Jack Merritt, Officers Lindy Pendergrass and Skip Etheridge are investigating a hit and run report. A car belonging to Roscoe McMillan was reported hit by a '49 Buick. McMillan's car was parked behind Cobb Dorm when hit.

Ronald Cabot, Cobb Dorm, reported the radio antenna and rear view mirror was broken and the gas cap stolen from his convertible parked on the Country Club Road.

Memorial Hall Will Be Scene Of Talent Show

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Memorial Hall will rock, roll and roar Tuesday night when the third annual Carolina Cavalcade of Talent gets under way at 8 o'clock.

Entertaining the students will be some of the best talent on the UNC campus, sponsored by the Y and Graham Memorial. The show is under the direction of Jim Talley, Ess Bruner and Wally Kuralt.

Acts ranging from Elvis Presley impersonater David Barringer to a classical pianist, Henry McInnis will appear on the stage. Between these two extremes are 20 other acts, including dixieland, jazz and rock 'n' roll bands, vocalists, dancers and even an acrobat—Ann Summers.

Approximately eight groups are returning to the talent show for the second time. These include Les Sutorious playing Dixieland; Nick Kearns' rock 'n' roll combo, vocalist Kack Anthony, "The Shades," a singing group under the direction of Jim Talley; the Chi Omega "Circle 9," guitarist Shields Flynn; and Ed Crow and Joe Alexander in a "drum battle."

The rest of the show will consist of a variety of new "discoveries" on campus. Some of these are Bob Williams and Belle Harkrader, a dance duo who will perform to "The Night They Invented Champagne,' Tim Longley and Louise McGee in a song and dance routine and Wendell Manuel, the comedy hit of the Freshman Camp Show.

Vocalists are Jimmy Gibbs, Ralph Harrington, the Sigma Chi Singers under the direction of Charlie Clement and two singing groups from the Men's Glee Club, a quartet and "The Comrades," a quintet.

Drivers' Confessions Have To Be In Today

Any student who has registered a car in his own name for another student who does not have car privileges will be tried by the appropriate Honor Court unless this student presents himself with the owner of the car to Ray Jefferies today.

Both the student who registered the car and the student whose car was registered are subject to trial by the Honor Council unless the previously stated action is taken prior to Saturday, according to Hugh Patterson, chairman of the Men's Honor Council.

Carolina Men Fighting Irish For Number 7

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special to The Daily Tar Heel

SOUTH BEND, IND. — Carolina's streaking Tar Heels lay a six-game winning skein on the line here today when they take on the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame with a possible bowl bid hanging in the balance.

Despite the fact that Carolina was ranked 11th by the AP and Notre Dame only 18th, the Irish will be favored by most of the experts on their home field.

Carolina enters today's battle with a fine 6-2 record, compiled after loosing their first two games. Notre Dame has only a 4-3 slate, but have lost to the top teams in the nations such as Army, Purdue, and Pitt.

The probable starting line-ups:

Pos.	Carolina	Notre Dame
LE	Don Kemper	Monty Stickles
LT	Phil Blazer	Frank Germia
LG	F. Swearingen	Dick Shulsen
C	Ronnie Koes	Myron Pottios
RG	Fred Mueller	Al Ecuyer
RT	Don Redding	Chuck Puntillo
RE	Al Goldstein	Bob Wetoska
QB	Jack Cummings	George Izo
LHB	Wade Smith	Bill Mack
RHB	Emil DeCantis	Jim Crotty
FB	Don Klochak	N. Pietrosante

Carolina will sorely miss today sophomore end John Schroeder who was injured in the Virginia game. Tackle Don Stallings, however, has recovered from a practice injury and should be ready to go today. Don Kemper will start in Schroeder's place, and other than Schroeder the Tar Heels are in top shape.

Notre Dame absorbed a 29-26 beating last week against Pitt, and many injuries resulted from the hard-fought contest. Myron Pottios, Bob Williams, Don Toth, Chuck Puntillo, and Dan Griffth all got banged up in the Pitt game but most of them will play. Guard Jim Schaff and Tackle Bronko Nagurski are out for this game, however.

In addition to the great team warfare, several individual battles will be waging on the field today. Carolina's recent find, fullback Don Klochak, will be pitting his bulling type of play against the equally tough Nick Pietrosante. The great lines of each team clash here today being recognized as two of the finest in the country. Quarterback Jack Cummings will have his play-calling and passing skill compared to that of Irish sophomore flash George Izo.

Carolina is now the number 10 team in the country on total defense, and the Irish are number 5 in total offense.

The Tar Heels will run from variations of a split-T, using flankers, slot backs, and lonesome ends. The Irish, who were a strictly ground team before the coming of Izo, will probably do much the same.

A crowd of better that 56,000 is expected for the game today, and at last count only a few tickets remained with the prospects of a sell-out getting better each minute.

Carolina today will be trying to do something no Tar Heel team has ever done—beat Notre Dame. In the series, the Irish have swept 8 straight.

Notre Dame will have to guard against the thing that has plagued them thus far this year or they'll have a rough go of it. The Irish have fumbled the ball consistently and with Carolina's cat-like ball hawk linemen on the loose, Notre Dame will have to be on the ball.

Fletcher Says ACC Contract Not Violated

By CHUCK FLINNER

Fred Fletcher, general manager of WRA-TV in Raleigh, yesterday charged that the UNC-Notre Dame game could be televised without a violation of any contract between the ACC and the New York promoters.

James Weaver, ACC commissioner, said yesterday that televising the game in this area would be a violation of the ACC television agreement.

In a wire to The Daily Tar Heel Fletcher stated, "We were advised by Mr. Cornwell (O. K. Cornwell, secretary-treasurer of the ACC) that no such provision was contained in that contract."

Cornwell was not available for comment. Cornwell and Weaver were both in Raleigh for a meeting of the Executive Committee of the ACC yesterday. Cornwell's office revealed that there were no legal grounds for prohibiting the telcvising of the game but on moral grounds it would unfair to the sponsors.

In Weaver's statement Thursday which freed the University of any responsibility in the television decision, he said the telecast would be against the Television Committee's policy of only sponsoring games between conference members as well as a violation of the agreement.

"The ACC has sold the rights to a sponsor, and if any other games were televised, it would not be fair to the sponsor," Weaver said Thursday.

WRAL-TV could get clearance for televising the game if Weaver consented. No legal provision prevents the telecast and Charles Erickson stated Thursday the University would like to have the game televised.

Stassen

If Harold Stassen continues to charge Vice-president Nixon with all sorts of heinous crimes against the Republican Party, he may well make Nixon the probable Republican candidate in 1960, a thing that neither Mr. Stassen nor most thinking Americans want.

Mr. Stassen, coming out of political defeat and exile into the national focus via his accusations of Mr. Nixon, is succeeding in putting the spotlight both upon himself and Nixon. After the resounding Democratic victory this fall, Mr. Nixon was sent partially into oblivion in favor of Nelson Rockefeller.

It may well be that Mr. Stassen does not like Mr. Rockefeller, but it sure that he thinks Rockefeller a better choice than Nixon. If this be the case, then the best thing for Stassen to do is to let Mr. Nixon nurse his wounds in peace and solitude, and Mr.Nixon will fade into oblivion as his wing of the Republican Party did in the election.

Democrats

If the Democratic Party does not watch out, it will turn this year's landslide victory into defeat in 1960. This can be done easily.

Nelson Rockefeller will almost certainly be the Republican candidate, and he will almost certainly win on the same things that elected Dwight Eisenhower in 1952. He will win on a charming personality, on respectable public stature, on the ability to dissociate himself from partisan politics and the debacle that is the Eisenhower Administration, on physical vigor, and dissimiliar to Eisenhower, on intelligence. As things stand now, he would have strong liberal Republican support independent support, moderate Democratic support, and if a person like Jack Kennedy were the nominee, a great deal of liberal Democratic support. All this he can do personally, with the Rockefeller image, which is much the same as the Eisenhower image of six years back.

It then behooves the Democratic Party not to rest on its laurels, but to set up throughout the United States what it had this year in California, an active organization of small groups democratically oriented. Secondly, the Democrats must line up behind a candidate more liberal than Kennedy, for without this line-up the Democrats will be without issue material and will be forced to campaign a campaign of personalities in which they would surely lose.

The Democrats need to have the leadership, but it must be politically oriented toward the liberal camp if the Democrats expect to win in 1960, and a great deal of the future depends on the victory of the liberals in 1960.

Germany

For the first time in many years the Soviet timing and location has been poor. They picked the wrong place and issue when they chose the Berlin fight.

There is no question that they have a portion of right on their side when they want to give Germany back to the Geman Communists, although this would only classify East Germany as a satellite nation: however, with regard to the administration of Berlin, the abrogation of a treaty will put the Soviets in as bad a light as the idea of Western colonialism in the administration of the Western sector of Berlin.

The Soviet Union could have done better, and the United States still can. The United States can use negotiation for an independent East and West Berlin as a selling point throughout the world, and undercut the Russian drive.

In the meantime, the Soviet Union had better re-examine their strategy in light on the fact that the most likely place for future Communist advances now is in Southeast Asia. Perhaps, however, the Soviet Union is beginning to fear Communist China.

UP—The Candidates Speak—SP

This is the third in a series of articles covering the Student Legislature campaign district-by-district. The Daily Tar Heel will interview each candidate for legislature, asking each candidate three questions on issues that have been important on this campus in the past and are important at the present time. In each district, all candidates will be asked the same three questions from a list of some 15 questions to be asked all candidates. In this way The Daily Tar Heel hopes that both the candidates point of view and the major issues will be brought into focus. The series is being compiled by Dee Daniels and Stan Fisher, and continues today with Women's Dormitory Districts I and II.

Dorm Women's I

Three women are running from Dorm Women's I on the University Party ticket for the three legislature seats open in that district Belinda Foy and Sue Wood are UP candidates for the one-year seats and Ann Hassinger is running for the six-months seat.

These coeds were presented the following queries:

1) What do you think of the social codes now in effect (bermuda shorts, etc)?
2) Are you for mixed honor councils?
3) How do you feel about deferred rush?

Belinda, a junior from Bradenton, Fla., said:

Belinda Foy

"The social codes now in efefct at UNC are inclusive in our Campus Code. In this code, we are reminded of our obligations of good behavior, which serve as reflections upon ourselves and our University. I feel that as the more clearly defined rules of apparel, smoking, drinking, etc., are developments from the above, we as UNC students are pledged to obey them. I favor the proposal of the Women's Honor Council chairman for the formation of a Women's Social Standards Committee to act as a consultive group to the women's councils.

Having limited experience with the honor council at UNC at the present time, I feel rather negatively toward the proposal of a mixed honor council. I feel that in a case in which a Carolina 'lady' or 'gentleman' has committed a major violation, he or she should be tried before a council of his or her own sex. Separate councils would provide an atmosphere more conducive to serious and frank discussion of the case. Moreover, particular details should often be revealed and explained only in the presence of members of the same sex.

"Although I do not favor deferred rush, it would be beneficial for a freshman's adjustment to college academic life, which is the primary concern of these new students. Moreover, it would encourage a better appraisal of the fraternities by the students. However, I am not presently in favor of it since the economic status of a fraternity would be endangered; there would be a strong possibility of 'dirty rushing,' and the social life of freshmen would be lessened."

Sue Wood

Sue also a junior, is from Smithfield. Her views on the same questions were:

"We, as Carolina students, are extremely fortunate in being able to express our individuality by living under a social code that allows individual interpretation. This code expresses qualities which I believe inherent in every person. This code is and should be interpreted as a guidepost to direct and not to restrict. Certainly, this opportunity to grow under guidance should be appreciated and respected by all.

"In view of the fact that there has recently been one radical change made in our institution, the jury system, I think that this particular area should be improved and perfected before another issue is brought up. This change is definitely one for the better, because it offers a wider opportunity for student participation. I do think that a mixed honor council is a subject of interest and one that should be brought before the people on campus. It is an area with many advantages as well as disadvantages and both sides need to be known. Since no concrete plan has been stated. I don't feel that I can comment further at this time.

"In considering the question of deferred rush, I feel that this might be a better plan for the individual rushee, but there are other important factors which need to be considered. Deferred rush would give the individual more time to become adjusted, but the financial problem of the fraternity is its greatest disadvantage. The fraternities could not exist if this plan prevailed. It would tend to create a greater strain on the rushee and it could be a source for violation of the rush rules. As it can be seen, such a problem will take much study and consideration, yet I feel that a plan could be worked out that would be agreeable and acceptable for all concerned."

Ann Hassinger

Candidate for the six months seat is Ann Hassinger, who is a junior and hails from Bristol, Va.

Her opinions on the questions were:

"The social code involves something that is intangible—something that is inherent in every person. Some may argue that it does not actually need to be stated and yet, I think we are very fortunate to have it written in black and white. The social code stands for a goal—a goal which each individual can reach in his own way. Perhaps the fact that one is still able to express individuality is the most important aspect of the social code. The purpose of the social code, therefore, is to guide rather than to restrict. I do not feel that the social code should be defined any further, for to do so would restrict the individual.

"At the present time there has just been a radican change in the honor system. This change is the jury system. I feel that this will prove to be a change for the better, for it provides for more student participation. There are, however, many improvements which need to be made, for I do not feel that the system is working as smoothly as it possibly could. I would like to work toward seeing this perfected. Some of the areas in which work must be done are: jury selection, secrecy involving the trials and permanent jurors. With such problems still unsolved. I do not feel that at the present time we are able to have another such radical change, which a mixed honor council clearly would be. I think we should work on what we have now and perfect it before we begin work on a new thing. I think that in the near future the question of whether or not we will have a mixed honor council will definitely need to be solved. I cannot comment further, however, on the question, as stated, for no concrete plan has been presented.

"Deferred rush has both its advantages and disadvantages. Perhaps for the individual involved it would be better to have deferred rush, for not only would it give him more time in which he could make a decision, but also it would give him more time in which to adjust himself to college life. At the present time, however, it would, as I understand it, be impossible for the fraternities to exist if rush were deferred. I do not think that I am in any position to say whether it would be best or not for I do not feel that enough investigation has been made."

Dorm Women's I

Dorm Women's I—Three seats—two one year and a six months—are open in this district. Sandy Davidson, Pappy Churchill, and Janie Walters are running for the seats on the Student Party ticket.

Questions asked in this district were as follows:

1) What do you think of the social codes now in effect? (bermuda shorts, etc.)
2) Are you for mixed Honor Councils?
3) How do you feel about deferred rush?

Janie Walters

Janie Walters, 20, a junior from Greensboro, seeking election to a year seat, answered:

"The social codes so far as clothing goes seem to be a matter of social etiquette, personal pride and respect for others. We try to eat quietly, sit and stand straight, and dress properly.

"Two Honor Councils—a Men' Honor Council and a Women's Honor Council—would seem to be more democratic because each case would be tried by students who are living under the same rules as the accused.

"Deferred rush at first glance might appear to be advantageous to a boy adjusting to a new set of friends, and to buckling down to a lot of studying. However, it would seem better to designate a committee to make a study and a factual report concerning freshman pledges and non pledges before making assumptions concerning the assets or liabilities of a deferred rush."

Dorm Women's II

The two UP candidates for one year Legislature seats from Dorm Women's II are Mary Gregory and Mary Lee Wetzel.

They replied to the following questions:

1) Would you enforce more rigidly or do away with the drinking regulations at UNC?
2) How do you feel about discriminatory clauses?
3 What would be the best type of cut system?

Mary Gregory

Mary is a junior from Galveston, Tex. She said:

"The administration of the University has, in the past, issued drinking regulations that are not enforced or adhered to on this campus. This is degrading to the University. Since the University cannot and does not do anything about this rule and since drinking is prevalent at UNC—the whole situation is farcical. I feel it is proper that the administration issue a statement saying that they do not condone drinking, but the regulations should be abolished. The Campus Code should suffice in handling this matter.

About discriminatory clauses, Mary continued, "Discriminatory clauses, as they exist in the by-laws or constitutions of organizations of this campus are beyond the reach and jurisdiction of the student body as a whole. These clauses have been set up by national charters and because of this fact there is little to get all worked up about. All through life, people choose their friends in virtue of this fact. I feel organizations have the right to select whom they want as members.

I feel that an unlimited cut system should exist here at Carolina, with one stipulation. I think that freshmen should be placed on a limited cut system, being allowed three cuts a semester in each course until they have established a satisfactory academic record. All other students should have unlimited cuts, for if a student does not feel that it is necessary to attend classes, that is his business; it is the individual student's education at stake. I feel that this situation pertains to the saying, 'sink or swim'."

Mary Lee Wetzel

Mary Lee is a UNC junior from St. Louis, Mo.

Her views on the preceding questions were:

"As long as drinking is kept to a minimum and there is no violence caused by over-use, I see no reason to extend regulations. At present the regulations seem to be satisfactory but in cases of extreme violations I believe that new laws must be decided upon by the students through Student Legislature. To withdraw all regulations would not appeal to the standards of some because it might cause a situation beyond the control of the students. Yet if we have regulations they should be working ones, not just words.

"To have discriminatory clauses does seem an infraction against our American way of life, but in a college situation these 'discriminatory clauses' seem almost impossible to do without. Academically they are not necessary; but socially, they have been found to be important. If there were some way to make all peoples happy by a decision to do away with all discriminatory clauses I would be very much for it.

"At present, the cut system is very confusing and terribly ambiguous. I believe that the professors should agree on a unified system covering all classes. By the time a student comes to college he should have acquired enough responsibility to realize the importance of his attendance in class. It is very hard to discontinue a cut system entirely but there should be a uniform allowance;; such as, a student must attend 75 per cent of his classes in each subject. This is a very hard question to make a cut and dried answer to, and will take thought and consideration in Student Legislature."

Sandy Davidson

Sandy Davidson, 19, a junior from Lenoir, candidate for the six months seat, said, "I think that the majority of the coeds will agree with me that the social codes of the UNC campus are very reasonable. A state school must be sensitive to the outsider's opinion of its standards and appearance. A line of demarcation must be drawn and Carolina, as a state-supported school, has drawn it very wisely.

"No, I am not for a mixed Honor Council. Although both sexes abide by the Honor Code, society has placed additional regulations on women. Therefore, I do not feel that men could judge women offenders due to a lack of understanding.

"The question of deferred rush is such an involved one that I do not feel it sensible to take a stand on it. A thorough investigation of rush and the possibilities of its deferment should be made."

Pappy Churchill

Pappy Churchill, 20, a junior from Durham, seeks election to the remaining one year seat. Miss Churchill said,

"All codes are good if followed. if not then it is time to have a change. The present social code is to be commended, but also to be remembered. Remembered — in as far as conduct at football games, campus courtesy, and in realizing that what one does naturally will affect or influence another individual. Any ideal such as a code will certainly have its fallacies, but if lived 'up to' rather than 'down to' it is serving its purpose. I think it is important to at times analyze not only the social code, but honor code—and student government.

"I am not for mixed Honor Councils! It is agreed that lying is lying, cheating is cheating—but I maintain that just as cases are individual so are these offenses individual to women, and to men. Whether we acknowledge the fact or not . . . women and men are guided by different standards. Honor Council must be conducted realistically with those ideals of honor in mind to guide and direct. To have a mixed Honor Council would at times discourage truth and sincerity in a case or situation, not because we are human.

"One of the most important transitions in one's life is that of leaving the dependent mode and entering that of independency. It must be recognized that adjustment to new standards, ideas and ways of living at first present a problem to the incoming college student. It is more important to adjust academically, socially, and personally than to strive in adjusting to a particular group. Deferred rush is more a problem to the fraternities than the sororities due to the fact of the freshmen, while the sororities pledge primarily junior girls who have or should have made some adjustment by the time they have reached their third year of college."

Dorm Women's II

Dorm Women's II—Two one year seats are open in this district. Running for the seats are Anne Lucas and Anne Eckerson.

Questions asked the candidates were as follows:

1) Would you enforce more rigidly or do away wtih the drinking rules at UNC?

2) How do you feel about discriminatory clauses?

3) What would be the best type of cut system?

Anne Lucas

Anne Lucas, 20, a junior from Louisville, Ky., answered:

"I would neither enforce the present drinking rule, nor do away with it. I believe there should be a definite rule advocating drinking on campus, for we must be realistic about this. However, this rule must include strong measures against drunkenness in any form!

"I advocate elimination of the discriminatory clause on the basis of race, creed, and color, for I believe any discrimination is harmful. But I also strongly believe it is the right of any organization to include this clause in its constitution, and, therefore, I feel that denying recognition to any organization that has this in its charter is wrong.

"I feel that there should at least be a definite policy regarding cuts. The present one has many evident inadequacies such as cuts varying from professor to professor, However I am against the old system of three cuts per class, as this seems rather high schoolish for college. I am rather for a clear cut policy which probably entail unlimited cuts for juniors and seniors and a reasonable number for freshmen and sophomores. These would, however, be governed to a certain extent by the professors themselves and the grades of the students."

Anne Eckerson

Anne Eckerson, 21, a senior from Troy, candidate for the remaining seat said,

"The drinking rules as they stand are impractical, therefore not effective. I think the problem should be studied, the rules made uniform and reasonable, then srtictly enforced.

I do not think any organization should have discriminatory clauses in its charter or constitution, but this does not deny the right of personal opinion to any individual or group.

"I think there should be a cut limit for freshmen, at least their first semester, and after this it should be left to each individual's own discretion."

Neither Black Nor White . . . . . Mostly Shades Of Gray

Norman Smith

Yesterday I was reading, lying on my bed. The sun reflected on the phonograph turntable and drew strange pictures on the wall. There was a troupe of hooded dancers whirling, gyrating through some bizarre arabesque. Those devilish dervishes would hold hands and crowd into a huddled group, then dash madly outward to the very limits of their floor. They were fat and then thin, short and then tall. And as suddenly as they had come they vanished.

A writhing, wriggling tapeworm took their place. His segmented body convulsed with rapid movement. He must have been driven by some insane hunger for he would chase his tail, snapping hungry jaws as still he increased his pace.

Then the sun in its unrelenting transit of the sky passed my window sill, leaving only darkness on the wall.

There were changes of everything in my room that moment and in all the cosmos. There ever have been changes and there always will be. A change has not time to become fixed and accepted as a feature of the surroundings before it departs and something else comes to replace it.

This omnipresent force of change creates a subtle difference in two snowflakes that fall but a hair's breadth apart from each other in space and in time. On the beach one could sit for an eternity and never see two waves come frolicking into shore that were alike in size and speed. Even man in his pell-mell quest for conformity cannot make his automaton machines and automaton workers create two Fords that are the same in all (or, for that matter, any) respects. This force thrusts new sensations before our senses during every indefinite increment of time so that our minds are minutely changed and the thoughts of one moment can never be reproduced in the next.

Some features of creation which have been endowed with grandeur, with might, and with long life must surely begin to think themselves absolute and challenge all existence to dislodge them. Yet from their birth, and even before, methodical, imperceptible changes are taking place. Thus it falls the facts of some humble pebble swept along by the St. Lawrence to strike the final blow that throws tons of the embankment over which Niagara flows into the basin below. An insignificant nail forgotten in a smithy's shop causes the horse to lose its shoe and be put out of action; so Richard III loses the battle for want of a horse and the entire history of England is altered. Even matter, once thought the ultimate in stability, has been discovered transforming shamefully some of its particles into energy.

Yet men, who are surrounded and embodied in this constant flux, whose own very bodies are completely replaced molecule by molecule every seven years or so, have the sheer audacity to say that they are capable of determining the existence of and, what's more, of defining transcending, eternal absolutes! They put their beliefs in these pat solutions; thereby they discard the beliefs of others; thereby they become self-righteous; thereby they unite with some people who hold similar absolutes; thereby they collectively decide the greatest service they can perform for all time is to destroy the beliefs of others which contradict their own.

The unsure and the ones lacking in ultimate sincerity try only to use intellectual persuasion in eradicating the conflicting beliefs of others, and if they fail, they shrug their shoulders and go on. But those who are truly devoted, truly zealous, sincere followers of the true cause are willing to go to the extent of eradicating the people themselves who will not surrender to the real truth.

So they have Inquisitions, Holy Wars, death camps at Daschau, destruction of the Amalekites, electric chairs for the Rosenburgs, and barrages of small arms fire from the balcony of Congress.

Right now I am going to end this column because it is time to go out of St. Joseph's Methodist Church to hear a talk by Gwendolyn Baily, a Negro student who is attending formerly all-white Reynolds High School in Winston-Salem. I hope that my feelings will change a little during this experience. For I welcome change; I know that it is inevitable. There are no absolutes!

Now for the paradox: I have used some two and a third pages of paper, several hundred impressions from a frayed typewriter ribbon, almost two hours of time, and a few inadequate expressions of my convcitions to say that absolutes cannot exist—that everything is subject to change. Yet I made my final statement in the very absolute terms which I have scorned!

Liberal Candidates Need

Frank E. Karelson III

(The following was printed as a letter to the editor of the New York Times)

The New York State election showed the tremendous personal power of Nelson Rockefeller. The following would appear to be the ingredients of the Rockefeller victory: His name and personality; his "liberally mouthed" campaign (even if he can't carry out his pledges); and his use of "bossism" and the Buffalo convention.

As to the Buffalo convention, this, unfortunately, did not benefit the Democrats. Had they nominated Thomas K. Finletter, this might have given the state ticket a national and even international significance, due to Mr. Finletter's prominence in world affairs. And, in addition, the "bossism" issue could have been eliminated from the campaign if Messrs. Harriman and De Sapio had agreed, prior to Buffalo, on Mr. Finletter or, for that matter, Mr. Hogan.

Very significant, too, was Arthur Levitt's race and Sam Stratton's Congressional victory in Schenectady, where for the first time in forty-two years a Democrat won the Congressional seat.

Elsewhere in the nation liberal Democrats showed tremendous strength and won all over, such as Senators McCarthy in Minnesota and Proxmire in Wisconsin. The defeat of Senators Bricker and Malone and the Democratic victory in Indiana proved this also. Outstanding was the 10,000-vote Congressional victory of Chester Bowles in Connecticut. It is important to note that in virtually every area where President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon campaigned (and used intemperate language) the Republicans lost heavily.

The course of the Democratic party in the future is clear. To win elections it must nominate candidates with stature, backbone and liberal points of view in order to capitalize on the imagination and forward-looking thinking of the American public.

Contest Entry Deadline Approaching For Maid

The deadline for entries in the Maid of Cotton contest, Dec. 1, is fast approaching with apparently no Carolina coed trying out for the title.

The search for the girl who will travel around the world as the 1958 Maid of Cotton began Sept. 1.

Hundreds of applications have been sent to girls, according to the National Cotton Council. These application, with two recent photographs, must be returned to the Council postmarked no later than midnight Monday, Dec. 1.

The twenty girls selected as finalists will go to Memphis late in December for the final judging.

The lucky girl winning the title will embark in late January upon an international tour climaxed by an around-the-world journey next summer. She will also travel to Nassau, Bermuda, and 30 major cities in the United States and Canada.

As Maid of Cotton, she will be presented with an all-cotton wardrobe created for her by 42 outstanding American designers, and a new Ford will be waiting for her at the end of her travels.

To be eligible for the title, a girl must have been born in a cotton-producing state. She must be between the ages of 19 and 25, at least five feet, five inches tall and must never have been married.

Applications may be obtained from the National Cotton Council, Box 9905, Memphis 12, Tenn.

Travel Magazine Features Planetarium

Space-conscious Americans and their visits to planetaria—including the Morehead Planetarium here—are discussed in Travel Magazine's November issue, in an article by Sando Bologna.

"Any traveler can have stars in his eyes by visiting such planetaria as Morehead at Chapel Hill," says the caption for a full-page photograph of the UNC Zeiss projection device.

The author comments that "Americans were never as space-conscious as they are today. . . and this fascination for astronomy is influencing the travel plans of countless famimlies."

He relates a recent incident at the Morehead Planetarium when the audience was taken on an imaginary trip by rocket ship to Venus, and describes the Copernican library room in the UNC facility.

In addition to listing and description of Morehead and the other five major planetaria, Bologna discusses and lists important observatories for solar research and viewing.

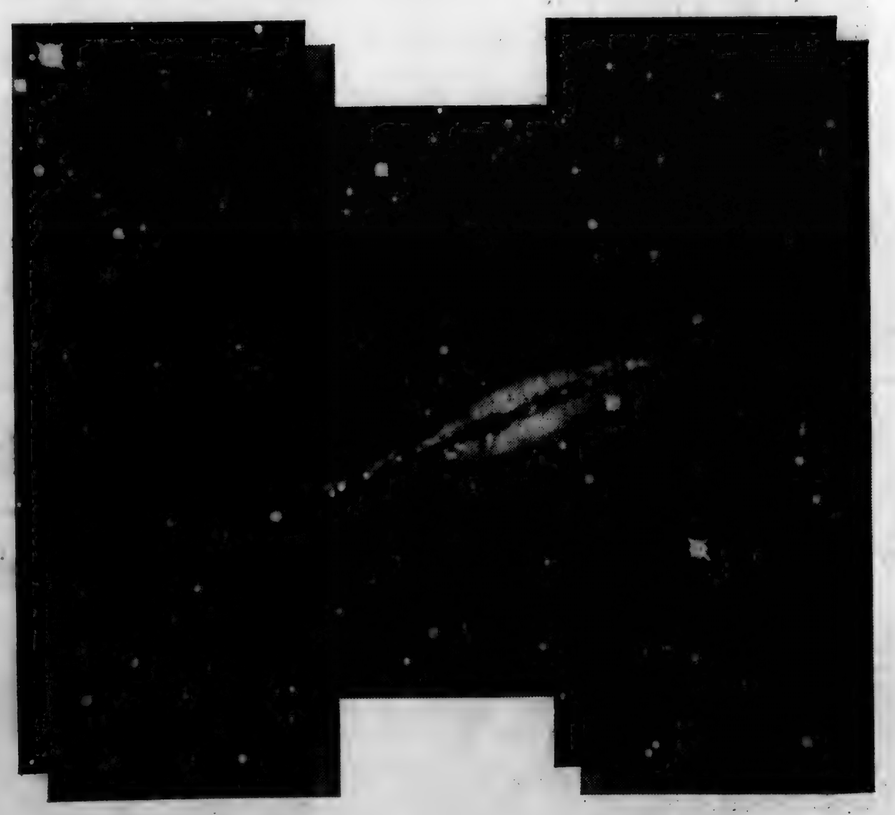
GROOMING ELECTRONICS FOR THE SPACE AGE

Systems in the Air



The march of electronics into the Space Age is being quickened as a result of Hughes work in airborne electronics systems.

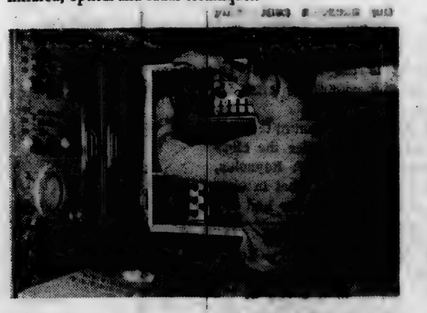
One such development is the Hughes Electronic Armament System, which pilots high-speed jet interceptors to enemy targets, launching Hughes air-to-air guided missiles, and flies the plane home. Even more sophisticated Electronic Armament Systems completely outstrip those presently released for publication.

Working on space satellites, Hughes engineers are active in the preliminary design of guidance and control systems, communication and telemetry systems, sensing devices using infrared, optical and radar techniques.

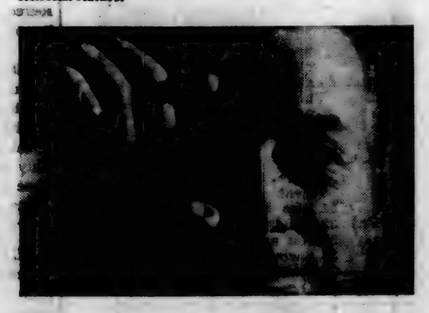
Information resulting from Hughes study in the fields of air-to-air and ballistic guided missiles is presently paying dividends into the fund of space knowledge.

Hughes engineers have developed space hardware using high-reliability wire wrapping to replace soldered connections and miniaturized "cordwood" circuit modules to allow high component density.

The advanced nature of Hughes electronic systems—in the air, on the ground, and for industry—provides an ideal growth environment for the graduating or experienced engineer interested in building rewarding, long-range professional stature.



Data Processors, which monitor hundreds of aircraft and store the information for high-speed assignment of defense weapons, comprise one part of an advanced Hughes ground defense system.



Capacitors which provide for electrical, rather than mechanical tuning of circuits, are being produced by Hughes Products, the commercial activity of Hughes.

Booters Win Fifth Straight By Beating Davidson, 4-1

By JIM PURKS

Carolina's varsity soccer squad chalked up its fifth straight win yesterday with a 4-1 victory over a hustling Davidson team, which threw a scare into the Tar Heels in the first half.

Playing rather slowly, the Tar Heels were caught by surprise early in the first quarter when a fast charge by Davidson's forward line netted the Wildcats a goal as forward Don Irvin punched the ball past Carolina goalie Marvin Blount.

Tar Heels Only Get 4 Shots

The goal seemed to give Davidson extra courage and the Wildcats continuously be at the Tar Heels to the ball, allowing them only four shots on goal in the first quarter.

Davidson dominated play in most of the second quarter, also, until Scott Weldon, playing for first-string left wing Rick Grausman, booted in Carolina's first score.

Aroused by Weldon's goal, the Tar Heels then outhustled Davidson for the remainder of the quarter, being rewarded with a goal by Coleman Barks who scored following a frantic scramble in the mouth of the Davidson goal.

The goals, which were scored in the last five minutes of the second quarter, gave the Tar Heels a 2-1 lead at halftime.

Two Goals In Third Quarter

In the second half, Carolina roared to a three goal lead when Joe Perkins and John Ghanim scored for the Tar Heels in the third quarter.

Both goals were beautifully set up. Perkins goal was a hard liner which Davidson goalie Claude Finney was unable to stop although he touched the ball. Ghanim's goal went into the upper right corner of the Davidson goal from about 20 yards out, Ghanim, who plays center forward, has now scored in five straight games for the Tar Heels.

Davidson never threatened Carolina's lead, and Coach Marvin Allen played his second string for the remainder of the game.

Maryland Next

Yesterday's game marked the final home contest for the Tar Heels, who now must get ready for their biggest test of the season: Maryland.

Maryland has been the perennial soccer champion of the conference, and Maryland's soccer teams have never been beaten nor tied by a conference opponent. Last year the Tar Heels came close before losing to the Terps in Chapel Hill, 4-2.

Speaking of yesterday's game with Davidson, Coach Allen said that Carolina's passing attack was not nearly as good as in previous games, and that the first string only had five "real good" minutes of play. However, Allen said, the team will be ready for the Maryland contest.

RETURNS TO ACTION—Junior tackle Don Stallings returns to action after being on the injured list and is expected to play against the Irish this afternoon.

Clemson Shoots For ACC Title

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Clemson can sew up the Atantic Coast Conference football championship today at Raleigh if it beats North Carolina State, the team that took the title last year.

Their game is one of three conference contests. The others have Duke playing Wake Forest at Winston-Salem and South Carolina meeting Virginia at Columbia.

North Carolina, riding a six-game winning streak and 11th nationally, plays at Notre Dame.

Clemson, which has slumped recently after winning its first four games, enters its last conference test with a 4-1 league record.

Impossible For Carolina To Win

A Clemson victory would make it impossible for North Carolina to catch Clemson even if the Tar Heels close out by beating arch rival Duke next week.

State will be closing its home season against Clemson in the regionally televised game.

Clemson will match the circuit's best rushing game, 277.7 yards per game, against State's second best rushing defense, 150.4 yards per game.

Wake Forest also closes its home season as it seeks to break a string of six successive losses to Duke. This game matches Duke's best pass defense in the ACC, 98.8 yards allowed per game, against the top passing game, Wake Forest's 153 yards a contest through the air.

Duke has a 3-5 record and if beaten will be the first Blue Devil team to lose six games since 1929.

Much depends on three ankles. Guard Mike McGee and fullback Bobby Cruikshank of Duke and soph halfback Winston Futch of Wake Forest have been hobbled by ankle injuries and their playing status will remain in doubt until game time.

Eligibility Of State's Dick Reynolds Upheld By Weaver

ACC Commissioner James Weaver of Greensboro said a question concerning Reynolds' eligibility arose over an agreement Reynolds made while in the Marine Corps that he would play pro football with Baltimore if he did not go to college.

Weaver said nothing ever developed from the agreement, which was never upehld by the Commissioner of Pro Football. Therefore, it was not valid, he added.

Reynolds, a 260-pound second stringer from College Park, Md., had disclosed the circumstances of the agreement to State Coach Earle Edwards before he entered college, Weaver said.

Edwards in turn had contacted Weaver and outlined the facts to him. The ACC Commissioner had ruled that the boy was eligible to play.

When the current question arose concerning the eligibility, Weaver decided to put it before the three-member ACC Committee.

If Reynolds had been declared ineligible, State would have had to forfeit the only two games it has won this season, over North Carolina and Virginia.

Two regular members of the Executive Committee, Dr. Mortimer Caplin of Virginia and Robert Ritchie of Clemson, Conference President, excused themselves from the case.

Ritchie said he did so because Clemson plays State Saturday in an important game. If Clemson wins, the Tigers will take their second ACC crown in three years. Caplin did not sit in on the discussions apparently because if this team lost to State, a ruling against Reynolds would have forfeited State's victory.

The three members who comprised the committee which met here were Dr. Geary Epply of Maryland, a regular member, and Forrest Cleets of Wake Forest and Dr. Charles Jordan of Duke.

Weaver declined to disclose the source of the question concerning Reynolds' eligibility, saying "we have to treat that in confidence."

Following is the statement released by the committee after its meeting:

"The Executive Committee, in called session to consider the eligibility case of Richard F. Reynolds, came to the conclusion that in view of the fact that this party had disclosed the circumstances that caused his eligibility to be questioned to Coach Earle Edwards of North Carolina State College and that Earle Edwards in turn had disclosed, before he entered college, the circumstances to Commissioner Weaver and Mr. Reynolds had been assured from other sources that he was eligible to participate in collegiate athletics, the Executive Committee declared that both the young man and his institution had made an honest effort to comply with the rules of the Atlantic Coast Conference on the subject of professionalism. The Executive Committee, on motion, therefore upholds the eligibility of Richard F. Reynolds."

Irish Win 9th Straight Game From Tar Heels

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special To The Daily Tar Heel

Notre Dame, Ind. — Notre Dame's rugged Fighting Irish brought an abrupt halt to Carolina's six-game winning streak here yesterday as they bested Jim Tatum's Tar Heels 34-24 before a packed house of 56,000 fans.

Although the Tar Heels moved the ball well all afternoon, their vaunted defense just wasn't in evidence as the Irish rolled up and down the field almost at will.

The issue was still in doubt up until 5 minutes before the end of the game when Notre Dame scored their 5th touchdown to sew up the contest.

CAROLINA GETS EARLY LEAD

Carolina jumped off to an early lead, going for a touchdown the first time they got the ball for the third straight game. Ronnie Koes recovered a loose fumble at the Notre Dame 45, and after grinding down to the 4, Jack Cummings hit Don Kemper in the left corner of the end zone after running far to the right. The two-point try failed but Carolina led 6-0.

Notre Dame's George Izo picked off a Tar Heel pass at his own 38 then guided his mates to their first score with Nick Pietrosante bulling over from the 2. Stickles convertd to put the Irish ahead 7-6.

The Irish capitalized on another golden opportunity by recovering a Carolina fumble on the Tar Heel 49 and marching again for their second touchdown. Again it was Pietrosante who slashed over from 1 yard out; the conversion was good and the Irish owned a 14-6 spread.

Notre Dame continued to pile up the points when they took over on a bad punt at the Carolina 36. Red Mack skirted right end for 7 yards and the Irish TD. The point was good once again to make it 21-6.

SMITH SCORES ON PASS

Carolina just got under the wire with its second score of the day when Cummings hit Wade Smith on a beautiful down the middle pass good for 33 yards and a score. Again the Heels tried for two, and again they failed, going into the dressing room at intermission on the short end of a 21-12 count.

Carolina came roaring back at the beginning of the second half, going all the way after the kick-off. Cummings hit Al Godstein twice to provide most of the yardage, then Don Klochak smashed over from the 3. The try for two wasn't good again, and the Heels trailed 21-18.

KLOCHAK GIVES HEELS 24-21 LEAD

Once again the Tar Heels fought back, for their fourth touchdown and the second time they held the lead throughout the whole game. Moe DeCantis snared an enemy aerial from its intended receiver at the Carolina 28, and his mates marched straight down the field to take the lead. The big play was a great 27-yard heave from Cummings to Goldstein at the 1 yard line. Klochak crashed into the end zone to put the Heels ahead 24-21. Once again the try for two was no good, but the Tar Heels led with 5:33 of the third quarter left.

Notre Dame however did not take to this pattern of play fondly

Student Legislature Passes Four Bills

By DEE DANIELS

Student Legislature passed four bills, one by special orders, which will affect future legislation, drinking regulations, the Lenoir dirt area and duties of the head cheerleader.

Meeting Thursday night, the governing body approved a bill which will allow any student organization a chance to consider pending legislation concerning said group—Joe Warner (UP).

These provisions will be incorporated into the bylaws of the Student Legislature.

Through a bill introduced by Otto Funderburk (SP), a committee to study the drinking rules of UNC is to be established. Included on the committee will be the IFC Court Chairman, IDC Court Chairman, the chairman of Student Council, IDC Women's Honor Council and Women's Residence Council, and three members appointed by the student body president.

REPORT

The group will submit a report to Student Legislature not later than four weeks after its appointment.

Legislature sanctioned a bill (Funderburk) to provide a committee of three (selected by the student body president) for the pavement of the dirt area between Lnoir Hall and the Law School.

By special orders, they passed a bill (Rules Committee) to change section 4 of Article IV of the UNC Constitution to read:

"There shall be a head cheerleader who shall be selected by the student government and who shall be responsible for the selection of the cheering squad and co-ordinating their activities."

This amendment will be referred to the student body in the fall elections this week.

The student body will also vote on a bill (Norman Smith—Ind.) to provide an amendment to the constitution which would provide for a single annual fall election of Legislature.

The governing body defeated a resolution (Jim Crownover—SP and Charlie Gray—UP), introduced by special orders, to attempt to secure the telecast of the UNC-Notre Dame game on WRAL-TV.

U.S. SUSPECTS NEW SUMMIT DRIVE

Khrushchev Backing Away From War Danger?

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Premier Nikita Khrushchev seems to be backing away from the dangers of a military showdown over control of West Berlin.

U. S. officials said Saturday that Khrushchev obviously intends to keep the dispute, which he started a week ago, in diplomatic channels.

They suspect strongly that his plan is to parlay the German situation and other current East-West controversies—such as the nuclear talks at Geneva—into a new drive for a summit conference.

Evidence of a calming down in Khrushchev's campaign over East Berlin was seen here in his latest move which took the form of a statement that he intends to make formal proposals to the west on the future status of the city.

Khrushchev clearly has the initiative in anything he wants to undertake. The Western powers have been unable to come up with any fresh ideas for outmaneuvering him on the German issue or throwing his incipient summit campaign off balance.

With Secretary of State Dulles in Seattle most of this week, having devoted his latest public speech on Thursday to a denunciation of the Red Chinese communist system, some observers here got the impression that the United States for the moment was lagging one crisis behind.

Actually Dulles was addressing an audience largely occupied with Far Eastern issues. His return here yesterday enabled him to direct detailed attention to the Berlin crisis.

He will have opportunity to discuss the situation in a speech at Cleveland, Ohio, Tuesday night. He will address the National Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Saturday the White House announced that the U. S. Ambassador to West Germany, David K. E. Bruce, will confer with President Eisenhower Monday before returning to his post. He will leave for Bonn later in the week. Officials denied that he was speeding up his plans in any way on account of the Communist threats toward West Berlin.

The main Washington interest in the situation Saturday concentrated on the two points which Khrushchev made last night at a Kremlin reception for Soviet Military school graduates. He said he does not intend to fight the West for Berlin (although he renewed warnings against the West fighting East Germany) and he declared he is preparing formal proposals on the future status of the city.

State Department authorities interpreted the latter remark as meaning hat some time soon the United States, Britain and France will get notes from Moscow formally putting forth Khrushchev's demand that they withdraw from West Berlin and let East Germany's communist regime take over the city. They have no intention of doing so.

It is believed here that Krushchev's talk of formal proposals means he woul drather debate the Berlin issue through diplomatic channels and try to whip it up into one more argument for a summit conference than to create conditions in East Germany which would raise the danger of military conflict.

East Germans To Vote Today

BERLIN — (AP) — At least one platform for communist shouting about the status of allied occupied West Berlin will be removed today.

About 11 million persons will dutifully troop to the polls in Communist East Germany and cast their single-list ballots for a new parliament.

They will thus write a climax to an "election campaign" that has featured a theme with international repercussions—"get the allies out of Berlin."

The theme was kicked into the arena by no less a campaigner than Nikita Khrushchev. Speaking at a Moscow rally last Monday, the Soviet Premier said the Soviet Union intends to give up its occupation rights in Berlin and the allies should do the same.

Ever since then, East German officials have eagerly plugged his line. Traveling from one end of East Germany to the other, they attempted to whip up their audiences with the Berlin issue.

"The allies and their spies must leave Berlin," the speakers cried. "Berlin for the Berliners."

Not that the East Berlin party bosses need any kind of slogan to win an election. There is only one way to vote against the Red list of candidates—cross them all off the ballot.

In a communist state, most people vote for the list.

Measurement Of Radiation Is Future Need

You have a stake in the development of instruments to measure radiation. Your health in the future and the welfare of your grandchildren may well depend upon it.

Yet, if that sounds grim, two health specialists reminded Saturday that as for measuring radiation danger and doing something about it, "Man is in a much better position to protect himself from radiation than he is automobile accidents."

Emil Chanlett and John Lumsden explained radiation measurement in a lecture sponsored by the UNC School of Medicine. It was one in a four-month series of weekly lectures, all dealing with radiation.

Chanlett is associate professor of sanitary engineering in the University's School of Public Health. Lumsden is chief industrial hygiene engineer of the state Board of Healh.

"The responsibility for protecting the peoples of the world from the harmful effects of radiation, and yet not deprive them of the benefits that will come with the atomic age is the task of all scientists," the speakers said. "It is not just the job of the nuclear physicists and the physicians."

All the danger from radiation is not confined to radiation sickness, Chanlett and Lumsden warned. "It is realized that radiation exposure in today's generation will take its toll in tomorrow's generation. Over exposure to radiation may result in future generations with a poor and inadequate genetic heritage."

They noted that Great Britain, as a step to prevent such a tragedy, already has adopted a policy to prevent more than one-fifiteth of its population from engaging in any occupation where radiation may be present. Such jobs range from operating an x-ray machine to testing nuclear weapons.

At the present, Great Britain does not approach the one-fifieth figure, but in the future all nations may reach such a percentage of workers on radiation projects, they added.

Religion

Through the nation during the past several years the tide of religion has been flooding in what has come to be called the revival of religion.

Evangelical churches have been particularly able to recruit members, and the success of such people as Billy Graham and Oral Roberts attests to the amusement value of religion in the modern age.

It might be wise to examine for a moment what these men and these churches are reviving, what the people in whom religion has been revived are doing, and what has been done to the fnudamental concept of man of a rational being.

There is no time like the present when security means so much to so many. It is a time when man looks at the atomic bomb and can realize his physical weakness. It is a time when man can see his annihilation around the corner, but is afraid to look around that corner. It is an age of unreality in which man finds himself incapable of looking at his world rationally, where his own resources are strained, and where he thinks he has no place to go. It is a time for evaluation, and man can see only failures in shaping this world in which humanity is forgotten in the endless game of personal ambition for ambition's sake.

And so man looks to find solace from the present failure, and not having strength to face reality and to deal with it, he leans on religion as a crutch, as a redeemer from his failures and a protector from future sins. And he sins the same way, but feels protected. It is not the average man's fault that he pursues this escape, for at no time in his life has he heard the words "think for yourself." Applied to anything greater than a minor multiplication problem. Thus, he has not been taught to think, and a system of thought is as foreign to him as day is to night.

The fault lies in the missionary zeal of those like Billy Graham, Oral Roberts, and others who are selling religion to the highest bidder in wholesale lots.

They plan emotional crusades picking the more obvious and most minor of man's sins to embarrass him and leave him vulnerable for a tide of emotion to sweep over him so that he, too, can be unthinkingly saved among a mass of cheering spectators.

These men have corrupted religion where it becomes impersonal, unfeeling, unthinking and dogmatic. They have made man a dupe of himself by stripping away from him his power of reason. They have plied on his emotions so that they can cloud everything that would lead them to make a solution in terms of reality for themselves. And the headlines read "Billy Graham saves 1,000." he has not saved; he has killed.

If the revival of religion meant that men were finding for themselves truth, and seeking that truth, then the revival would be health if the revival meant that men were freeing themselves from the secular gods of comfort, pleasure, wealth, and status, then the revival would be something to be hailed. If the people who were being revived to the faith even knew what they were reviving, then it might be a good thing. Yet, this is not the case.

Man's self respect is being destroyed through this revival. He is being degraded and herded as an unthinking animal to the corral, and only those who seek to revive the doctrinaire faith are profiting. When they think back one cold winter night, that profit may seem hollow.

The job of religion now and in the future is to challenge man to find himself, to give him the courage to look at reality and seek a solution ,to project that self into actions, words, and belief, and to make himself instead of weak and service strong and courageous.

The Billy Graham's have been courageous on many issues, notably civil rights ,but they have not the courage within themselves to see the good in man and the potentiality for his greatness. There needs to be an awakening and a revival, but what needs to be revived is the image of the potentialities and possible greatness of man, and what needs to be awakened are these very people who are doing the most to revive "religion."

SP—The Candidates Speak—UP

This is the sixth in a series of articles covering the Student Legislature campaign district-by-district. The Daily Tar Heel will interview each candidate for legislature, asking each candidate three questions on issues that have been important on this campus in the past and are important at the present time. In each district, all candidates will be asked the same three questions from a list of some 15 questions to be asked all candidates. In this way The Daily Tar Heel hopes that both the candidates point of view and the major issues will be brought into focus. The series is being compiled by Dee Daniels and Stan Fisher, and continues today with Town Men's Districts I, II and III.

Town Men's I

Running for the one year seat open in this district is Don Dotson, 20, a junior from Chapel Hill. Dotson who received Student Party endorsement, made the following statement concerning his party endorsement:"

"It was my intention to run for the Legislature as an independent candidate. I appreciate the fact that the Student Party has endorsed me, but I am not a member of the party and do not feel obligated by the nomination."

Dotson was asked the following questions:

(1)Do you favor mixed Honor Councils?

(2) What is the relationship of the town to the University with regard to the parking situation?

(3) How do you feel about the athletic system presently in effect?

Don Dotson

Dotson replied, "I suppose that by now anyone who reads The Daily Tar Heel knows how I feel about the question of 'mixed councils.' I believe that by the time a person reaches college age, he should be willing to accept the good and the bad—the pleasant and the unpleasant aspects of being an adult. Citizenship in the University community means responsibility to all of the students, male and female. Regardless of embarrassment and regardless of the desire of the Women's Honor Council, the Women's Residence Council, or any individual or group of individuals, responsibility to the whole student body should be the underlying principle, and separate councils are not a part of that principle.

"This summer, while serving as a member of the summer school student government, I had an opportunity to learn something of the attiutde of the town aldermen with regard to their attitude toward the University. As I attended their meetings concerning the parking maters, which now grace our streets, it was obvious that the town aldermen look on the University as a somewhat secondary attachment to the community and the interests of the town's coffers. While I do not believe that the aldermen represent the feelings of the merchants who deal primarily with students, the overwhelming majority of the merchants, it is obvious that the officials of the town have very little concern for the students, despite the fact that the nickles of the students and faculty of the University will fill the parking meers as well as the cash registers of the town. At this juncture, the relationship is somewhat one-sided.

"I believe that athletic participation is a vital part of a person's education and is something that should be continued through life. I enjoy sports as a spectator, particularly football. I think that the athletes here at Carolina are a definite asset to the University—as a group and as individuals. I am very satisfied with the athletic program."

Town Men's II

A one year seat is open in this district. Rick Wolfer was running for this seat on the Student Party ticket, but had to withdraw his candidacy because of his academic load.

Town Men's III

Two one year seats are open in this district. James Pittman and Ed Levy are seeking the seats on the SP ticket. Levy has received endorsement also from the University Party.

Questions asked in the district were:

(1) How do you feel about University owned utilities?

(2) How do you feel about segregation?

(3) What is your attitude toward deferred rush?

James Pittman

Pittman, 21, a senior from Williamston, answered:

"The University facilities, such as the lights, water, and snack shop and Lenoir Hall, I believe adequate. We must remember that we receive those services at a much smaller expenes than they could be supplied by an outside firm. The major complaint that I have heard is that a better system of telephones is needed. The solution to this problem being the installation of the 'Hear-Here' booth so that a person speaking on the phone can hear without the other noises bothering him.

"I feel that integration is moving along very well on the UNC campus. There are Negro students on campus who use all the University facilities quite freely. As more qualify through entrance examinations, more will be accepted. There has been some controversy about their having been placed in one dorm instead of spread out, but we must remember that this was moderation in action, and only through moderation can this problem be solved.

"From economic standpoint, the fraternity will suffer if a system of deferred rush were to be installed. This is a foregone conclusion. Another argument is that the freshman does not have enough time to adjust to college life before he is sent through rush, but many people fail to see that the boys, once they do pledge a fraternity, are helped to adjust by the fraternity. Each pledge is given a 'big brother' to whom he can bring his problems and from whom he can seek advice. This system is better than the dorm system of one counselor for 25 or more boys.

"Thus, for economic reasons and because a program of deferred rush will hinder freshman more than it would help them — I am against it."

Ed Levy

Levy, a junior from New Orleans, La., answered:

"The controversy over whether the University or private industry should own the utilities of Chapel Hill is extremely involved and quite technical. Under the present system, the University provides itself with cheap utilities (in some instances makes a profit by providing services to Chapel Hill), but is not under the control of state regulatory commissions. Thus if a citizen of Chapel Hill has a complaint that prices are out of line or service is poor, there is no commission ot which he can appeal. With private industry in control, the University would be forced to make a substantial outlay for its utilities.

"The only ideal solution would be to make it possible for University-owned utilities to be within the jurisdiction of the state regulatory commissions.

"Having lived all of my 19 years in an area of the United States commonly referred to as 'Rebel Territory' (you can't go much farther south than New Orleans), I feel keenly aware of the difficulty involved in changing or even modifying tradition which has been practiced for centuries. However, we are citizens of a country which claims to all, home and abroad, that the United States is democratic. The world, which is over 2/3 'colored,' listens to our claim with the same ear as they listen to our cries for peace, freedom, equality, international cooperation, etc. What happens when the 'uncommitted peoples' of the world hear our claim of democracy and plea for peace and at the same time read about paratroopers in Little Rock, school closings in Virginia, bombings in Clinton, race riots in Pennsylvania? Would it not be possible to question, and legitimately, all of the United States' proposals?

"But the international situation, no matter how ominous it may appear, would not serve as justification for eliminating segregation. The essential question is whether 'built-in' prejudices and discrimination is compatible with the democratic principle. My answer would necessarily be an emphatic 'no.' I believe in an individual's guaranteed right to discrimnate, but enforced segregation by the local, state, or national government is contrary to the democratic concept. In a democracy there is no reason why the government should see an individual in the light of his race, color, creed, or religion; equality under the law is a basic premise of democracy.

"It is unfortunate that desegration attempts in the South have been so painful. When Southern leaders arise who are familiar with the southern situation and who are willing to take over the reins to establishing a more democratic system, then desegregation will proceed with less friction and more consideration.

"The institution of a system of deferred rush at the University of North Carolina would prove beneficial to the University, to the students, and eventually, to the fraternities. Under a system of deferred rush, the new student would have time to become somewhat adjusted to college life and would be capable of making an inteligent appraisal of his social needs and how these needs could best be fulfilled. The University would benefit from the change because the possibility of students becoming disoriented in their allegiances would be lessened. Too often students tend to displace the allegiance they owe first to academic endeavor and then to their University with an allegiance to some other organization. The fraternity would eventually benefit from a change to the deferred because they would be admitting boys who have had sufficient time to judge the various houses on a realistic plane and boys who have had an opportunity to settle down to college life.

"The change to a system of deferred rush at the University of North Carolina must be preceded by the following: a renovation of the social facilities (including the student union) and social programming; a careful and thorough study of deferred rush procedure; at least one year between enactment of deferred rush legislation and the time deferred rush is to be instituted. The one year period is to allow fratrnities time to adjust their finances to the new system.

"The institution of deferred rush should not be considered the first step toward abolishment of fraternities. I am a member and officer of a fraternity and neither advocate nor intend to suggest their abolishment."

Town Men's I

Nominees on the UP ticket from Town Men's I for two 1 year Legislature seats are Bob Grubb and Bob Turner.

Following are the questions given them.

(1) Are you for mixed honor councils?

(2) What is the relationship of the University and town with regard to parking on campus?

(3) What do you think of the athletic system in effect presently?

Bob Grubb

Grubb, a sophomore from Charlotte, said:

"I am against having mixed honor councils. Ideally mixed honor councils would be a good thing because of the equality of decisions, but this single advantage is far outweighed by the impracticality of opening such a system.

"The town and the University both share the problem of off campus parking. This problem is most acute in the area around the big fraternity court. I feel that the town has only aggravated the parking problem in this area by having parallel parking and "no parking zones along Columbia Street. In the future the town and the University should work more closely to solve the traffic and parking problems of Chapel Hill.

"The athletic department is one of the best developed and widest reaching departments in the University. The reason for the success of the athletic department has been the large amount of money spent by it for athletic scholarships. The question has arisen as to whether the great financial support of the athletic department is beneficial to the University. So I am in favor of the entire program, for I feel that it has not only given some worthy boys a chance to come to the University, but it has produced winning teams and these teams have greatly increased the school spirit."

Bob Turner

Turner, a senior from Lanett, Ala., says, "I do not chose to comment on these questions."

Town Men's II

Charlie Gray, the incumbent in Town Men's II, is a junior from Gastonia. He was re-nominated by the UP to represent the financial picture of student government in the Legislature, since he is treasurer of the student body.

The series of questions for this district were:

(1) Are you for deferred rush?

(2) What would be the best type of cut system?

(3) Would you enforce more rigidly or do away with the drinking regulations at UNC?

Charlie Gray

In answering the questions, Gray said:

"At the present time I am against deferred rush. Ideally this system has some good points. It would give a boy a better chance to analyze the fraternity system and it would give the fraternities more time to look over prospective pledges. However, practically, this system is not feasible at the present time. Many people have mentioned the economic side of the problem. Fraternities operate on a high financial basis. Most of the smaller fraternities would fail and even the larger ones would suffer economically if deferred rush were started.

"Also there exists the problem of "illegal rushing." This is a tremendous problem even in the short period before fall rush. Just think of the problem that would exist for a whole semester. My final objection is that deferred rushing would keep fraternities and sororities from rising to a higher rating. The lengthened period before rush would allow the top fraternities to receive the most outstanding boys. Therefore, the good would become better and the fraternity or sorority that needs to rise would drop lower. For these reasons I'm against deferred rushing.

"This question (best type of cut system) is one that I cannot truthfully answer, since the two systems which I have been under have shown definite falws. I doubt if anyone could provide an absolutely workable system now. I do, however, think that every student should be allowed at least three unexcused cuts. Any cuts above the three should be between the faculty and the students, taking into consideration the class and academic standing of the student.

"There are parts of campus life where I think the drinking regulations should be more strictly enforced and other parts where I think enforcement would be wholly impractical. The drinking displays at athletic contests have shown a need for stricter enforcement while enforcement at certain social affairs would be turning face to the fact that drinking has become an enrooted part of society. Because of these differing ideas I cannot state a definite answer, pro or con. I think the best move at this time would be to do away with present unorganized regulations and to formulate a more definite and uniform set of drinking rules."

Town Men's III

UP nominees for the two 1 year Legislative seats in Town Men's III are Ed Levy and Bill Stepp.

Their questions were:

(1) What do you think about University owned utilities?

(2) How do you feel about segregation?

(3) How do you feel about deferred rush?

Levy's coments appear on another section of this page.

Bill Stepp

Stepp, a sophomore from Marion, stated:

"University-owned utilities are a good thing. They can give the students better services at a better rate than private concerns. However, their rulation should come under the state utilities commission since their services are available to the general public.

"Segregation has reached the point where its institutions have started to crumble fast. This is inevitabel under a system of government such as ours. Now is the time that we must watch our step because the world is watching us just to see how we will handle this problem.

"As I see this problem, desegregation is inevitable. Our concern as educated men and women is to accept the problem and to work out our own solution without making fools of ourselves and our country.

"As it stands now, I am against deferred rush. My main objections are (1) it would wreck the financial situation of the small fraternities and it would even injure the larger ones; (2) dirty rush could not be controlled during the period of silence; and (3) it would allow the larger fraternities to get the top boys.

"I am not saying that deferred rush is wrong. I will agree that it is fine in principle and that it has its virtues. But these virtues are completely overshadowed by the inevitable bad results.

4 PLAYS BY WILLIAM INGE: COME BACK, LITTLE SHEBA; PICNIC; BUS STOP; THE DARK AT THE TOP OF THE STAIRS. 304 pp. New York: Random House. $5.00.

William Inge is a misfit in the triumvirate of Inge, Arthur Miller, and Tennessee Williams. He is, for one thing, the most commercially successful of the three: his four Broadway offerings, all of them sold to Hollywood, have made him a wealthy man. Artistically, on the other hand, he is the most mediocre, for no matter how far Milland and Williams have fallen short of artistic fulfillment, Inge has remained considerably less brilliant.

Inge's comparative mediocrity stems not from a failure of his plays to realize themselves, but rather from the fact that his plays, even fully realized, are of lesser stature than those of his two peers. While Miller and Williams strive to bend their material to the traditional uses of great drama, utilizing the unweildy materials of contemporary American civilization, Inge remains content to ignore the ultimate issues which the drama can express in favor of a superficially gimmicked soap opera approach to human existence.

So Inge, despite the fact that he is the only one of the three who has never known critical disfavor, and who has made a small fortune from his plays, is also the only one of the three who cannot be considered a major figure in the history of the American theatre or a potent force in modern world drama. Arthur Miller and Tennessee Williams are widely discussed not only in terms of the theatre, but also in terms of religion and philosophy, as artists who have contributed to the definition and expression of the human situation as it is manifested in modern life: Inge is discussed most passionately outside of theatres where his works are being performed, the discussion diminishing toward Sardi's and becoming less and less cogent as it travels beyond.

A reading of this volume of Inge's collected works provides the reason for the big noise outside the theatre and the subsequent silence: it is that Inge's plays have theatrical impact, due largely to the fact that they have been excellenly acted and directed on Broadway and in the movies, but they are philosophically defunct.

Reading his plays, without the benefit of expert acting and directing, it is possible to experience the essential boredom of them The boredom is due partly to the raw material with which Inge chooses to work — the average citizen of his native Kansas, but both Miller and Williams, not to mention O'Neill, have written powerful and cogent drama using just such humdrum characters, foregoing the eloquent speech and fine passions of traditional great drama. The fault in Inge's plays goes deeper than his raw material: it is the playwright's inability or unwillingness to see his characters in depth and to express universal ultimates through their everyday predicaments. In place of authentic depth, Inge substitutes superficial resolutions to inarticulated problems, with a gloss of vague symbols and accessory gimmicks.

The typical superficial resolution in Inge is conjugal love, or sometimes just plain sex. The hero is invariably lonely, frustrated in the world, unsure of himself. He confesses to a woman his inability to face life alone, abandons his unique and masculine mode of adjustment, and makes the easy leap into the conjugal bed. In such a resolution, half a man plus half a woman (she can't do without him, either) are supposed to equal one mature individuated human being. (c.f. Robert Brustein's article, "The Men-Taming Women of William Inge" in the November HARPER'S.) This simple formula applies in each of Inge's four plays, and it is always the central issue, around which the palywright groups sexual symbols (most explicit in the javelin-phallus symbol in COME BACK LITTLE SHEBA and the "cowboy" as a symbol in the other three plays).

Reading Inge's plays, especially after seeing them on the stage, is a dissappointing experience: their invalidity, deprived of the emotionally satisfying artificialities of staged presentation, becomes deadeningly clear. They are unexciting reading.

This Random House collection is important and worthwhile, nonetheless, but its value is for those interested in the current American stage as such, and not in the drama as an art.

Pip's Quips

For the well functioning of the Honor System it is important that the jury be chosen from a predetermined group selected through interviews.

The Honor System is not fully accepted by all the members of the Carolina Campus. Many find easy enough to accept the first part—not to lie, steal or cheat—but find it difficult to adjust their philosophies to the idea that they are honor bound to turn in others.

Considering there is a sizable percentage of the student body who hold some reservations concerning the Honor System what would be the wisdom of forcing these people to serve on the jury?

In a person who simply does not believe in anything of the Honor System going to be willing to find someonee guilty? Is there not some danger that those who oppose the Honor System will make a farce out of justice and due punishment?

As the system is now set up students who are interested and have some knowlege of the Honor System an become eligible for jury duty.

In this way the offender can be assured of a fair trial by people who have been adjudged to have some competency in the matter.

The Carolina Honor System and trial procedure are not the same as the legal system of the "outside world." There is no reason why the student community should conform.

There are many diffeerent ways of doing things. In this division of student government there are no jails and no police force. Consequently, the student government must depend on the good-will of the people for its well functioning.

It would not be beneficial to the Honor System for a tradition of no conviction without regard of the evidence to begin.

The strength of the jury system depends on the responsibility with which the jurors face their tasks. During each case there are two types of justice to be rendered—justice to the individual and justice to the system.

Only through interested and informed jurors—chosen for these qualities — can fairness be given to both.

The University's Russian language specialist, Dr. Walter W. Arndt, has been elected chairman for 1958-59 of the Slavic Section of the South Atlantic Modern Language Assn.

Arndt attended SAMLA's recent sessions in Augusta, Ga. along with other UNC representatives in Germanic languages, Romance languages and English.

Second Book On NC's Outer Banks Written

Another book on the fabled Outer Banks, the Tar Heel outpost on the Atlantic, was released Saturday by UNC.

"The Outer Banks of North Carolina," covering the history and legends of the area, was written by David Stick, who was lived in the coastal region since childhood.

Stick is the author of "Graveyard of the Atlantic," a bestseller on shipwrecks off the Outer Banks which was published by the UNC Press six years ago.

His new book sketches the history of the banks, from the Indians, the "Lost Colony" of Roanoke Island, through Civil War battles to the modern era ushered in by the Wright brothers and the airplane in 1903. It also deals with Outer Banks natives, their legends, and the speech and customs they have preserved since the 17th century.

Stick has lived on the Outer Banks since the age of nine. He attended Elizabeth City High School and the University of North Carolina. He has had an active part in promotion, preservation and development of the Outer Banks.

Singers Started Off In 1907 With $12; Rehearsed In Shacks

By ANN BALLENGER

Beginning in 1907 with $12 from their pockets and rehearsals in abandoned shacks, a group of Parisan students interested in spreading the beauty of liturgical music founded a boys' choir which later grew into the Little Singers of Paris.

The Little Singers will appear in Memorial Hall today at 8 p.m., sponsored by the Men's Club of the Chapel of Saint Thomas More Catholic Church, Chapel Hill.

The program will include Gregorian chants, music by Palestrina, folk songs and secular music from the Renaissance. There will be an admission charge for the concert and the funds raised will be used for church purposes.

POPE' IDEA

The idea for the boys' choir came with a Church ruling by Pope Pius X in 1903 which appealed for an improvement in the quality of music sung in churches and advocated bringing back liturgical music. It strongly urged the formation of boys' choirs to sing this music.

The founders drew membership for their choir from among the working class in the Vaugirard district of Paris. They planned to teach the boys religious music and then travel with them from town to town.

The group met for the first rehearsal in 1907. They chose a simple white robe and a wooden cross for the choir uniform and thus adopted the name of "les Petits Chanteurs a la Croix de Bois" (The Little Singers of the Wooden Cross).

By 1910, the Little Singers had traveled 4,000 miles on their visits throughout France. World War I brought a new leader, Father Fernand Maillet, and under him the group soon organized a choir school.

In 1931, the Little Singers made their first ocean crossing—to America.

Members and ex-members were lost in World War II, both on the battlefield and in concentration campus. After the war, Father Maillet purchased a building in Paris for housing, feeding and clothing the Little Singers. He discovered that the boys worked better when living together.

The Little Singers still live in Paris attending school and studying religious music while there. When on tour, they continue their regular classes and homework.

They have appeared in over 35 countries and in 1957 made a tour around the world.

Student tickets are priced at $1.50 and are on sale along with the other tickets at Danziger's and the Building.

Modern Sounds Now Available In GM Lounge

A new collection of Jazz records has been purchased by Graham Memorial for use in the main lounge. The new collect-includes recordings by Erroll Garner, Chet Baker, Gerry Mulligan, Oscar Pettiford, Chris Connor and Kitty White.

More classical records have also been purchased for use in the lounge. Among the new records are: the Bach Brandenburg Concerti, the Shostokavitch Symphony No. 11, Mozartis Requiem Mass, Brahams' Violin Concerto and Resphigi's Pines and Fountains of Rome.

Record concerts will be held in the lounge Thursday nights, instead of Wednesday nights, as originally planned.

The first concert will be held tonight at 7:30 and will include the Brahm's German Requiem.

The second concert, which will feature the 4th, 5th and 6th string quartets of Bela Bartok, will be held Nov. 20.

The total passing yardage of 256 racked up by Carolina's Jack Cummings, Henry Clement, and Rabe Walton against Virginia set a new school record for one game. It surpassed the 235 previous high set against Georgia in 1947.

to give the kind of service that's building
America's second largest telephone system

When it comes to service we aim to deliver the goods. Result: we're growing fast! For in Gen Tel Territory, America is finding the room the overcrowded big cities can no longer supply. New homes, new stores, new factories are springing up fast.

And so is the need for up-to-the-minute telephone communications. That's where Gen Tel comes in big. To meet the growing need for telephone service, we're installing 750 new phones each day, investing almost 4 million dollars each week in new facilities.

At Gen Tel we're working overtime to develop new uses for the telephone to keep ahead of the growing need for better and more complete communications. That's one reason we are America's second largest telephone system.

No doubt about it, America is on the move. And Gen Tel is moving with it—moving up.

Booters Take 7-1 Record Into Terp Game Tomorrow

By JIM PURKS

Monday will be THE day for the Carolina soccer team.

For at 3 p.m. Monday the Tar Heels will square off against always-powerful Maryland in College Park in an important conference clash.

Maryland has conquered all its other conference foes this year, including a 7-2 trouncing of Duke, and now must get past the determined Carolina team in order to clinch another conference championship.

Carolina Has 7-1 Record

Going into the Maryland game, the Carolina squad has an impressive 7-1 record, and a 2-0 conference record, with victories over Virginia and N. C. State.

Both games were won on the home field, however, and Monday's contest marks the first time this season the Tar Heels have faced a conference opponent away.

No conference team has ever beaten a Maryland soccer team, and Maryland has thus won the championship ever since the conference was formed for soccer.

Coach Marvin Allen's team last year came close to defeating Maryland, but finally lost by a 4-2 score in Chapel Hill on a rain-drenched field.

Had it not rained, Coach Allen believes the Tar Heels could well have handed the Terps their first conference loss.

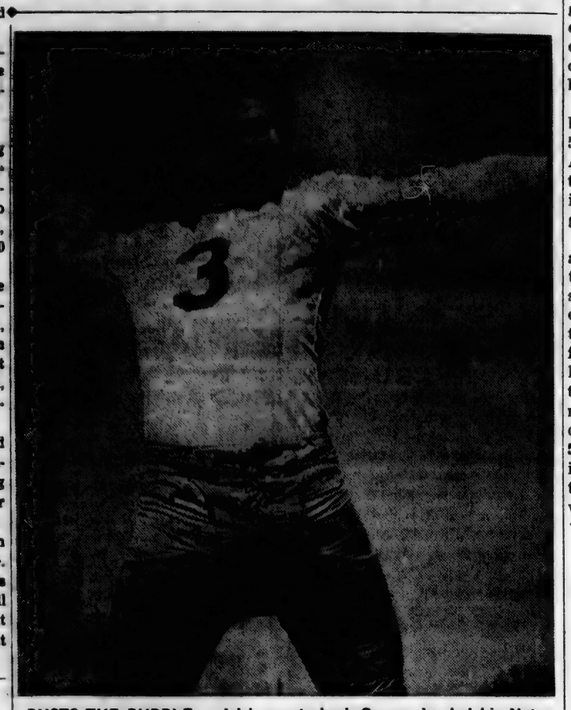
Terps Beat Tar Heels Last Year

The year previously, a driving rain again marred the Carolina-Maryland game. Playing under almost impossible conditions the two teams fought it out in College Park, and Maryland emerged with a 4-0 victory over Carolina.

This year, the Terps will face one of the best soccer squads in Carolina's history. It is a squad which, as Coach Allen said, has its own brand of confidence and team spirit which, if it holds in this contest, could well spell trouble for Maryland.

Everything will have to be played right against Maryland, Coach Allen said. There can be no lagging by any member of the team, either on defense or offense, Allen said.

Allen said he is confident the team will keep its poise and confidence. On offense, Allen said the team's give-and-go passing pattern will have to be razor sharp and that the players must not be reluctant to shoot at every chance.



BUSTS THE BUBBLE — Irish quarterback George Izo led his Notre Dame teammates to a 34-24 victory over Carolina which halted the Tar Heels six game win streak and knocked them out of contention for a major bowl bid.

Irish Defeat Carolina 34-24

and took the ensuing kick off back in 6 plays for a touchdown and regained the lead. Red Mack scooted around left end from 15 yards out for the marker and Stickles converted to give the Irish a 28-24 bulge.

Greensboro's Norm Odyniec broke the Tar Heels' back with a 56 yard dash to the Carolina 13 Although the Irish didn't score that time, the play kept the Heels in the hole for the rest of the game.

Carolina, with a 4th and 1 situation at their own 29, elected to try for a first down, but were stopped short. Notre Dame took over on downs and in six plays got their clincher when George Izo faked a handoff, then kept around his own right end for the final tally of the game. The kick was no good, but at this point the Irish didn't need it. The score, with only 5:18 left in the contest, stood 34-24 in favor of Notre Dame nad that's the way it was when the final gun went off.

ACC Cross Country Meet

The climax of the 1958 UNC cross country season will be reached tomorrow when tre ACC meet takes place here at 2:30 on the rolling fairways of Finley Golf Course.

The Tar Heels, fresh from a second place finish in the state meet Monday but still trying to forget a 3-4 season record, have been pointing for this one ever since the Duke loss and even long before that.

They are determined and ready, but the shadow cast by the injured knee of top man Wayne Bishop will darken their chances as it has ever since the Maryland meet. With him, the odds would be fairly good; without him, its almost as bad as the Red Sox without Williams.

Still, Carolina has captain Dave Scurlock (second last year), who should really open up on those long, level fairways, and junior Cowles Liipfert to shoulder most of the load.

If Scurlock decides to really run instead of lope and IF Liipfert stays glued to his back, then both could conceivably finish in the top five.

Following these two will be a trio of sophomores that may well decide Carolina's fate. They are Bing Somers, Sonny Sweet, and gritty Bob Foxworth, who has abrubtly set himself up as team darkhorse.

On the Advantages of The Worm's Eye View

Some years ago a good photographer brought out a book called GRASS-ROOTS JUNGLE, which presented a fresh new world of pictures taken at ground level. Strolling through the old book corner today, I was reminded of that book, because that's really the sort of view you get among the old books.

You and I know how the Revolution came out, and who won at Gettysburg, but in the old book corner you can listen to the chaps who were worried and troubled, and didn't know what the answers were going to be.

It's a fresh world, and a fascinating one, and it's yours for a half-hour's browse.

But beware, pal, beware! Once you've discovered the delight of evesdropping on bygone years, you'll become a collector.

Talent Troupe Has To Pay To Use Hall

J. S. Bennet said yesterday "We can't turn microphones over to inexperienced personnel."

This statement answered the Carolina Cavalcade of Talent's question, "Why must we pay a man $10 to use Memorial Hall?"

The Cavalcade of Talent opens tonight.

Bennett said that the office of buildings and grounds must keep university equipment in good shape. "Some people are damaging the hall," he said.

Violations of smoking and drinking rules in Memorial Hall were cited. "We have wanted a decent auditorium and now that we have it, we must keep it."

Don Furtado Requests Aid From Cabinet

Says Faculty-Student Relations Are Low

Student Boy President Don Furtado asked the Chancellor's Cabinet for its cooperation in bringing about better student-faculty relationships at yesterday's Chancellor's Cabinet meeting.

Furtado pointed out that the opportunity for contact between students and faculty was limited, and that increased contact might better the climate for learning on the campus.

Ralph Cummings, vice-president of the student body, and Paddy Wall, secretary, stated that the access to the faculty was limited at the present time and many appointments were not kept by faculty members.

Chairman of the Faculty William Wells said that this lack of unity was a product of the overall climate of this campus, he added that he would bring the matter up to the Faculty Council at its next meeting.

Chancellor Aycock suggested that this approach might be made through the orientation program, and one member of the Cabinet suggested that the Faculty Club might be a likely outlet.

Big And Mean Rameses 'Protected' From Dukes

By JIM JONES

Rameses VIII, who hopes to cavort to the strains of a winning tempo this Saturday, is "well guarded" from any invasions by the Duke enemy this week.

Glen Hogan, who boards the Tar Heel mascot at his farm north of Carrboro, said today that "I'll deliver him in good shape" for the Duke-North Carolina game at Kenan Stadium.

"North Carolina State students tried twice to abscond with Rameses before this year's game," Hogan said. "But they discovered he is well guarded."

It probably wouldn't be too good an idea to fool with Rameses, anyway.

"This is the most aggressive ram I've handled," Mr. Hogan said. "In fact, he can be downright dangercus."

He said the UNC mascot is particulary angry when he hears the beat of a drum. Mr. Hogan turned the animal over to University of Maryland students during the Homecoming game here last month.

They got about halfway across the field when a drum sounded, and away he went.

Mr. Hogan remembers the time, several years ago, when he invited UNC cheerleaders out to help him protect the ram prior to a Duke game. About 50 persons showed up, about half of them from Duke.

"That ended that," he said.

Rameses is not only one of the most aggressive of UNC rams, but also one of the biggest. An eight-year-old, he tips the scales at 250 pounds.

Possibly to clear the air of any possible invasion ideas by the Dukes, Mr. Hogan concluded:

"He's big and mean, and he loves me."

Here's How Voting Works

The voting procedure for today's fall elections consists primarly of presentation of ID cards and signing rosters.

The Election Laws for dorm voting procedure requires students to present their identification cards to be stamped and to sign the dorm roster before they can be given ballots.

Town voters must present and have their ID cards stamped and fill out an index card with their names, residence and class. The index cards will be filed by the poll tender.

Voting On Two Referenda Part Of Election Today

Two referenda will be on the ballot when students vote in the election today.

The first proposition is a constitution for the graduate club, and the second is to abolish the campus-wide election of cheerleaders.

The graduate club constitution would embrace all graduate, professional, and special students and would provide for an annual election of Graduate Club officers coincident with the regular campus-wide elections in the spring.

The constitution provides for the election of a president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, and also a Graduate Council which would have all legislative power and the power of impeachment over executive officers.

The Graduate Council would be made up of representatives from each department and school of the University, by election by the graduate club membership in that department, selection by the department head, subject to the approval of the Graduate Club members in that department, or by selection by the department head without approval.

The constitution further provides for committees under the club including, budget, program, publicity, social, and graduate orientation committees.

The position of head cheerleader was deleted from the election law in the recent election law revision, but since it was also in the constitution it must be voted upon by the entire student body.

Copies of the constitution are available at Y-Court and at the polling places in Dorm Men's III, Dorm Women's I and all Town Men's districts.

Europe Tour Is Planned For Summer

By MARY BAHNSEN

Europe is getting closer every day.

A group of Carolina students think so. They are busy planning now for a summer abroad.

Every Wednesday the group meets in the library assembly room at 4:30 and every Wednesday the group gets larger.

Plans for the summer trip are still in the primitive stage. Two basic tours have been discussed. One is for extensive travel in Europe, then fly to Russia for 23 days and return to Europe for ten free days before coming home.

Another idea is to spend a month hitting the high spots of Europe, followed by 23 days in Russia and then return to Europe for a month of free time in which the students will travel on their own. There are many other possibilities in agenda.

Jim Carse, Y staff member and co-ordinator for the tour, said that they hope to make this a three month trip in order to give the students as much time abroad as possible.

The cost of the trip has been discussed. Spending a maximum of 90 days abroad, flying both ways and including visiting Russia, will cost a minumum of $1500. This figure could be cut to $1100 by omitting Russia.

The trip is not to be the normal run-of-the-mill European tour. The possibilities of attending seminars in a few of the larger cities, of living with native families, and of meeting important people such as the mayor of Paris are offered.

Definite plans will begin to be made at this week's meeting. All students interested in this tour are invited to attend the meeting tomorrow at 4:30 in the library assembly room.

String Quartet To Do Works Of 3 Composers

The Tuesday Evening Series sponsored by the UNC Music Dept. will present the University String Quartet tonight at 8 in Hill Hall.

The program, which is open to the public at no charge, will include string quartets by Boccherini, Beethoven and Debussy. The featured work will be Beethoven's Quartet in A minor, Op. 32, No. 4. Quartet members Dr. and Mrs. Alden, Jean Heard and Mary Gray Clarke are beginning their eighth season together.

Dr. Alden, first violinist, teaches violin, theory, and graduate courses in musicology in the UNC Music Department and is associate conductor of the University Symphony. Dr. Alden is a member of the N.C. Symphony and the Mozart Festival Orchestra, and has appeared as soloist with both of these orchestras.

Mrs. Alden, violinist and teacher of strings in Chapel Hill, has held first chair in the N. C. Symphony and the University Symphony. She has performed throughout North Carolina as soloist and in various chamber groups.

Mrs. Heard, second violinist, studied violin with the late Ottokar Cadik of the University of Alabamba and with Mischa Mischakoff at the Julliard School of Music in New York. She is a member of the University Symphony.

Mrs. Clarke, first 'cellist, is a graduate assistant in the UNC Music Deparemtn. She holds a master's degree from the Manhatten School of Music, and has performed in concert in Germany as well as this country.

The String Quartet will also play at 1 p.m. at the Faculty Club luncheon today.

No Prediction Of Turnout Made By Election Board

Elections Board Chairman Bob Furtado said yesterday he could make no estimate of today's expected turnout.

He added that voting today will probably be lighter than in spring elections. The reason for this is the greater importance of the offices voted on in the spring, he said.

Fall elections last year drew 2,6422 voters, or 34 per cent of the student body, to the polls.

The polls open at 9 a.m. and close at 6 p.m. for the annual fall election of class officers, Legislature members, representatives to the Men's and Women's Honor councils and the Student Council and two constitutional amendments.

Graduate students will also be voting on a constitution for the Graduate Club.

Several changes were made earlier this school year pertaining to the various polling places and the Legislature districts.

Ballot boxes will be located in each dorm except Kenan and Conner. Kenan coeds wil vote in McIver, and residents of Conner will be voting in Winston.

Students living in Emerson Stadium will vote in Ruffin Dorm. Residents of Memorial Hall and all other University-owned buildings except the dorms will vote in Old East.

For the Town Men's districts, the polling places are: Town Men's I at the Carolina Inn, Town Men's II at the Scuttlebutt, Town Men's III at Graham Memorial and Town Men's IV at Gerrard Hall.

Town Women will vote at Gerrard Hall.

According to reapportionment of Legislature districts, the following list includes the composition of each district:

Dorm Men's I, Cobb Dorm; Dorm Men's II, Stacy, Graham, Aycock, Lewis and Everett; Dorm Men's III, Joyner, Alexander, Conner and Winston; Dorm Men's IV, Mangum, Manly, Grimes, Ruffin and Emerson Stadium; Dorm Men's V, Old East, Old West, Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, Memorial Hall and all other University-owned buildings; Dorm Men's VI, Avery, Parker and Teague;

Paving Begins Today In Bell Tower Lot

Operations Director J. S. Bennett said yesterday that paving will begin this morning on the Bell Tower parking lot.

He urged all students to move their cars to the hospital side of the lot.

ABC Store Opposition Organizing

Organized opposition to the entrance of ABC stores into Orange County seems to be forming.

"Everyone who is opposed" to the sale of Alcoholic beverages in the county has been invited to attend a "citizen's meeting" Friday.

According to Carolyn F. Noell, a member of the group, the meeting will start at 7:30 p.m. in the basement of the University Baptist Church.

Plans will be mapped at that time for activities to fight the ABC stores.

The Friday meeting was preceded last week by another meeting held by opponents of the ABC establishment. According to officials, the "major achievement" of the first meeting was to "devise a system of contacting some persons in each community in the Chapel Hill-Hillsboro area."

It was noted that while contacts are being made primarily through churches, the new "dry" organization is not church-sponsored. "Rather," according to a spokesman, "we are a group of citizens interested in the issue."

The Orange County Board of Commissioners in September set Feb. 3 for holding of an A. B. C. election in the county, after first setting Feb. 7. According to the commissioners, the date was changed so that it might be held prior to convening, on Feb. 4, of the State Legislature.

No vote on the Establishment of ABC stores has been held in the county since the mid 1930s, following the adoption of the North Carolina local option law.

Phi Society Schedules Reading Night

The Phi Society wil hold a Reading Night instead of debating a bill tonight.

Members and guests will be free to read articles, selections from novels, poems or other matter in the formal meeting.

Reading nights in the past have proved successful and very lively. They provide students with an opportunity to present before the group any piece of writing which may be of interest.

Interested students and faculty are cordially invited to attend. The meeting will be held in Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East at 8 p.m.

The bill scheduled next week is a debate on Gen. Charles DeGaulle as Man of the Year.

Dorm Boiler Blows Off Excess Steam

Steam spurting from the basement of Parker Dorm brought police and firemen to the scene last night at 6:15 only to find that there was nothing they could do.

The steam came from the boiler which furnishes heat for Parker, Avery and Teague Dorms. According to a fireman too much pressure had built up and the boilers safety valve was literally letting off steam. As long as ti continued doing this, there was no danger of an explosion.

Firemen who had been in the basement reported that the temperature was approximately 200 degrees and the basement and lower floors were clouded with steam.

Residents of the dorm said that the constant spurts of steam "sounded like an express train going through."

VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT

Talent Show Opens Tonight

"Elivs" and "Paderewski" will appear here tonight on the same stage.

Elvis-impersonator David Barringer and Henry McInnis, classical pianist, will be two of 22 acts in the third annual Carolina Cavalcade of Talent tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Tickets for the show are now on sale in the Y and Graham Memorial for 50 cents.

When the first Talent Show was held in 1956, it was on a competitive basis. But in 1957 and again this year, the show is strictly a production.

All three shows have been cosponsored by the Y and Graham Memorial. The directors of the 1958 Talent Show, Jim Talley, Ess Bruner and Wally Kuralt, represent the Y and GM.

Acts for tonight vary from the acrobatics of Ann Summers to a "drum battle" between Ed Crow and Joe Alexander.

For jazz enthusiasts, there will be Les Sutorious playing Dixieland jazz and progressive jazz guitarist Harrison Register playing with the Jazz Journeymen. For the less sophistocated. Nick Kearns' combo will be playing rock 'n' roll music.

The pop vocalist from the Yack beauty contest, Kack Anthony, is lined up for tonight's show. Two other pop singers, Ralph Harrington and Jimmy Gibbs, will be featured.

Various singing groups will also be included, from Jim Talley and "The Shades" to Chi Omega's "Circe 9" to the Sigma Chi singers led by Charles Clement.

Besides several selections from the entire UNC Men's Glee Club, from the group a modern quintet (The Comrades) and a quartet similar to the Kingston Trio will appear.

In the humorous vein, Nancy Aubrey will be presented in a comedy piano act, and freshman comedian Wendell Manuel has a file ful lof "suitabe" jokes ready.

Two dance routines will be performed: "The Night They Invented Champagne" by Bob Williams and Belle Harkrader and another one by Tim Longley and Louise McGee.

Three guitarist will perform during the evening. They are Shields Flynn, Frank Elkins and Al Miller.

When needed, the Embers Orchestra with Director Cal Huber will provide background music.

Election

The Daily Tar Heel has presented during the past week a series of interviews with the various candidates for Student Legislature. In this series were raised some of the pertiment issues that are involved in the campaign.

Also involved is the new graduate club constitution, which offers a great opportunity for graduate students to be a greater force in student government and to have more participation on the part of all graduate students.

The purpose of the paper's series and of the presentation of the platforms on this page is so that the people of the campus will vote on the issues rather than on the personality of the men involved.

By way of a get-out-the-vote campaign, it should be mentioned that if you do not vote today, you have abdicated your responsibility to a democracy that your fellow students have created on this campus.

You have forfeited your right to criticizze, for you have not made use of every available opportunity to constructively better the campus by electing the people whom you deem capable of leading student government to do the things you think it ought to do. You have denied to yourself the privelege of citizenship in one real sense.

So, if you do want a good student government, the choice is yours. Exercise it by your ballot today.

Chancellor's Cabinet

One administration member commented after yesterday's Chancellor's Cabinet meeting, that it took an awfully long time to reach candor in student-faculty-administration discussions. This was especially true of yesterday's session, and it could have been avoided.

The session was, for the most part, a dialogue between Student Body President Don Furtado, and Chairman of the Faculty William Wells, about what would be necessary to improve student-faculty relationships on this campus. The discussion lasted for about an hour and a half before they reached the crux of the problem, and the interim period between the opening conversation and the statement by Dr. Wells of the problem was largely a welter of vague statements which said that student-faculty relationships should be better than they are.

The point is that the discussion should not have been held in the Chancellor's Cabinet. Both Dr. Wells and Dean of the faculty James Godfrey should have been approached beforehand with the need. Dr. Wells could have pointed out the problem of a negative student attitude, and some tentative solutions could have been reached without the wasting of an hour and a half of the Chancellor's time for what amounted to little more than intelligent chatter about a problem.

Dr. Wells pointed the issue clearly — a student body more interested in social betterment of themselves than in intellectual pursuits.

It is good to know that President Furtado agrees with Dr. Wells that this is the problem and that bettering student-faculty relationships is only a partial solution, and may not even work if the student desire is elsewhere.

It is better to hear President Furtado's commitment to doing something about the problem, and perhaps soon he will summon enough courage and use some of his demonstrated leadership ability to go beyond the popular fight for a new student union to a more controversial, but no less needed addition to the campus — deferred rush.

The Time

It's that time of year again. Walking by the trees on the campus, you can tell what time of year it is. Even at some distance from these trees, one can discern what time of year it is.

It's fertilizer time.

SP—The Candidates Speak—UP

This is the sixth in a series of articles covering the Student Legislature campaign district-by-district. The Daily Tar Heel will interview each candidate for legislature, asking each candidate three questions on issues that have been important on this campus in the past and are important at the present time. In each district, all candidates will be asked the same three questions from a list of some 15 questions to be asked all candidates. In this way The Daily Tar Heel hopes that both the candidates point of view and the major issues will be brought into focus. The series is being compiled by Dee Daniels and Stan Fisher, and continues today with Town Men's Districts I, II and III.

Town Men's IV

Town Men's IV—five seats—four one-year seats and a six months—are open in this district. Troy Blanton, Gary Greer, Bill Miller and Paul Belanga are running for the year seats, Bob Pearce is the candidate for the six months sent. All of these are on the Student Party ticket.

Questions asked in this district were:

1. What do you conceive as the role of the graduate student in Student government?

2. How do you feed about federal aid to education?

3. What do you think of class officers?

Paul Belanga

Paul Belanga, a senior from Creswell, also running for a one-year seat, said, "I believe that the graduate student at Carolina should and can play a much more important role in student government than he does at the present time. I am cognizant of the fact that the average grad has a great deal less time to spend on extra curricular activites than does the undergraduate. He could hardly find the time to do an atequate job in an office such as President of the Student Body as a result. However, I don't believe that the graduate student would find a position on the student legislature overly taxing. Therefore, I think he should show more interest in this phase of student government instead of being apathetic to the whole question as he has largely been in the past.

"Federal aid to education could be a very good thing if used as an instrument to redistribute the wealth of the country so that the poorer states such as those in the South could provide schools similar to those in other sections. However, in bills on federal aid proposed up to this time, the distinguished Adam Clayton Powell, Democratic representative from N.Y., has always managed to tack on a segregation rider providing for no aid to those states maintaining segregation in public schools. As a result, the South would have been excluded from any aid under such a law. Thus, 'the rich would become richer and the poor, poorer' under this set up.

"As long as federal aid to education laws continues to be used in the aforementioned manner I am opposed to them. Certainly, a law giving aid to such wealthy states as California and New York and not giving it to such poor states as South Carolina and Mississippi is going to do a lot more harm than good The South will reguard such as political blackmail, and, in my opinion, will be justified in doing so.

"Class officers, seem to me, to serve no worthwhile purpose at Carolina under the present set-up. It is my understanding that their duties are very ill-defined and that they are little more than figureheads as a result. If something cannot be done to change this situation, I am definitely for abolishing class officers. The fine talent which goes into class offices each year would be a great deal more help to the Student Body in the student Legislature than in the non-functioning role of a class officer."

Troy Blanton

Troy Blanton, 20, a junior from Rutherford, said,

"In answering the question, it is recognized that the graduate student is a student at the University. He should have the rights, as a student, to participate in any organization, including student government, in which he can be of service or benefit to his community.

"The graduate student and the undergraduate student should have a mutual feeling of cooperation which would result in the satisfaction of their needs to a greater extent. This cooperation, I think, would come if their governmental organizations were better co-ordinated.

"Federal aid to education, to me, points the way to a better educational system operated on a national basis or to an education system based on the entire population. At present, in the United States, we operate forty-nine separate education systems. We on the East Coast have really very little concern with educational system in the West. This, I mainly attribute to the fact that the interest follows the purse or you are interested in what you pay for. However, if the entire population were taxed for educational revenue by the national (all the people) government, the interest would no longer be locally centered. There would be more equality in our school systems and the larger capital states would no longer dominate in the 'educational realm.'

"The class officer, in my opinion, is fighting a losing battle. His function is obscure and, on the verifications of past officers, it is never unveiled to him. The time and money which is put into a no longer useful service could best be spent elsewhere."

Gary Greer

Gary Greer, 20, also a junior, from Spindale, said,

"It is unfair to establish a dichotomy, in terms of graduate, or undergraduate since (1) the basic goal (academic pursuit) should be the same for all, and (2) since student government is a legitimate and valuable component of academic achievement. The graduate students are a part of student government due to their financial support and, as such, should play an active part in the despensing of student government funds and activities.

"The federal system of government originally instituted in this country has seen dramatic change. The evolution has been towards centralization of government; and has, in many areas, become necessary due to the growing demands made by our role in this most complex world.

"Educational facilities have not developed comcensurate with the needs which have arisen due to the rapid technological and scientific advances which are necessary for our position in the present world crisis. Since the ostensible reason for the existence of government is to provide for the people what needs to be done but which they cannot do themselves, then it only follows that is the role of some government to provide adequate educational facilities; and since the state government either cannot or will not do this job completely, then the responsibility must be placed upon the federal government.

Class officers can never be of value since their functioning entails the establishment of a class system, a hierachy, based not upon individual merit, rather upon position relative to graduation. Of course if, as is the usual thing, the officers do not function, then their existence is a waste of time, money, effort, and potentially good leadership in other endeavors."

Bill Miller

Bill Miller, a sophomore from Rutherford County answered by saying, "The graduate student in the past has not assumed an important role in student government. Their role ought to be that of leadership, and increased graduate student participation is to be desired.

"Federal aid to education is an important benefit to the education of the people of the United States. I can only say that aid should be increased if anything.

"Class officers should either serve a worthwhile purpose or not exist at all. Unless they are given a definite function, class officers should not exist within the framework of student government."

Bob Pierce

Bob Pierce, a junior from Rocky Mount, answered:

"I do not believe that the role of the graduate student in student government should be that of holding offices such as that of President of the Student Body; but since he is affected by decisions of the legislature he should be represent there so that he may be able to voice his opinion on matters of legislation.

"Federal aid to education would be a good thing if it could be received without any intervention from the government. I am wholeheartedly in favor for anything which would better our public schools, but only without influence from the government would I favor federal aid.

"If class officers are to remain only as figureheads without doing anything, I am in favor of abolishing them. If the class officers could be given some definite duties so that capable boys would not waste their time by serving as figureheads, I would be for keeping them; otherwise let these boys run for offices where they can exert their capabilities."

Independent

Town Men's III

George Hotelling

George Hotelling, senior from Chapel Hill answered the following questions:

(1) What do you think of University owned utilities?

(2) How do you feel about segregation?

(3) What is your view on deferred rush?

He answered thusly:

Wherever the University can bring goods and services to the community at a lower cost than is otherwise possible, the cause of education is being served.

The wisdom of the North Carolina view on segregation has been shown by the experiences in Arkansas and Virginia. Certainly before the law and government no color discrimination should be allowed although of course every individual may discriminate as he pleases in choosing his associates In thinking about segregation the primary purpose of UNC should be kept firmly in mind.

Also with regard to rushing one must be made aware of the need to study before being allowed too much social life. If a freshman arrives at college and is confronted with rushing in the first weeks of school his allegiance to his studies, just in the formative stage, is very likely to become stunted.

David Evans

David Evans, junior from Fayetteville, answered the questions by saying:

"As most students know, University owned utilities do not come under the state utilities commission. This is bad because the general public of Chapel Hill has no one to appeal to if they are dissatisfied with the prices or services they are receiving. The sutdents at UNC should be quite happy with the present system though, as they receive better services at less expense than would be received under a private firm. I feel that from the student's point of view, we are better off with University owned utitities.

"I believe that students at UNC are accepting the segregation problem in an understanding way. We are one of the few schools in the south that have integration. Most of the students accept this as long as it is done in moderation, for we know it is impossible to disregard a tradition in one abrupt step that we have had for hundreds of years. I believe that integration will take place but it must proceed at a rather slow pace, so as to give the people of the south time to accept it.

"I am against deferred rush at the present time. Many of the fraternities on campus are having financial problems, and deferred rush would only aggravate these problems. Of course many people maintain that deferred rush would give the student more time to become adjusted to college life, but a fraternity helps adjust freshmen to the Carolina way of life through his "big brother" who aids him in many ways."

Town Men's IV

UP nominees for Legislature seats from Town Men's IV are Lou Harrin, one-year seat, and Ira Hardy, DeWitt McCotter, Bob Price and Dick Quick, six-month seats.

The nominees answered the following questions:

1. What do you conceive of as the role of the graduate student in student government?

2. How do you feel about federal aid to education?

3. What do you think of class officers?

Ira Hardy

Hardy, a senior from Raleigh replied:

"As part of the University, graduate students should participate in student government as long as they have no despotic influence on persons and policies at the undergraduate level. Politics of the Tammany Hall type have been and could still be detrimental to our student government.

"Federal aid to education in the form of scholarships and fellowships to the individual is very desirable. I oppose federal aid to education wherever it means an increase in federal control, particularly where it involves a state's public school system.

"Class offices should be continued at the University. I see that the Student Party is diligently trying to elect a slate of candidates to the class of fices that they propose should be eliminated. The emphasis should be placed on the officer and not the office. A responsible candidate can be a credit to any office to which he is elected."

Bob Price

Bob Price is a senior from Reidsville.

Commenting on the role of the graduate student in student government, he said:

"I believe that the role of the graduate student in student government in slightly less than that of the undergraduate. However, since the graduate student is influenced by the actions taken by student government he should have an opportunity to exert a definite force on the actions taken by the student government which will either directly or indirectly affect him. I am sure that there are many issues which take place on campus that are of great interest to graduate students and in which a number of students are interested. Therefore they should have an opportunity to express their feelings.

On federal aid to education, he stated, "Federal aid to education is an issue that has been much talked about. Federal aid to education on the college level is a good thing in many ways. I believe that high school science teachers' program is financed by the Federal Government. This has allowed a lot of improvement in high school science that might not have otherwise been possible. Also, Federal Research Grants have allowed otherwise impossible projects to take place. Programs of this type aided by the Federal Government are good and do not include a great amount of direct government control. I do believe programs which would entail too much government control should be avoided in the schools.

"Class officers can be a valuable part of student government, especially in the freshman and sophomore years. This is a very good place for students interested in student government to obtain very valuable experience in the issues and political situations present at the University. These offices can help students gain experience that would be very helpful for those who would like to go on into student government."

Candidates Lou Harin, DeWitt McCotter, and Dick Quick were not able to be reached by The Daily Tar Heel reporter doing this part of the election series.

Town Women's

UP candidate for the Town Women's district one-year Legislature seat is Ann Harvey. Ann is a senior from Sheffield, Ala.

Ann answered the following questions:

1. What do you think of the freshman rules?

2. Are you for deferred rush?

3. What do you think of class officers?

Ann Harvey

Concerning the freshmen rules, she said:

"If viewed in realtion to the upper classmen rules, the freshmen rules seem extremely harsh. However, this is not the view that the dear of nursing takes. If the rules are made more lenient then the Nurses' Dorm will be placed under their own rules. I do not believe the rules are strict enough to be eased at the expense of widening an almost closed gap between the nurses' and campus dorms. Unless strong objections are expressed by the freshmen in the WRC poll I say let the subject rest until the administrations can be reconciled.

"At the present I am not in favor of deferred rush for financial and other reasons. When freshmen have gone through a week of rush, there is not one who is not aware of the financial, academic and social obligations accompanying fraternity membership. True, with deferred rush he may become more sure of which house he would fit into best, but neither he nor the fraternity will benefit by a watchdog atmosphere for an entire semester. Relations will be strained. Dirty rushing will be more prevalent. Fraternity finances will be endangered. Freshmen will feel set apart from the rest of the campus.

"Class officers should exist on this campus, even if they exist only for the few times it becomes necessary for a class to take action as a whole. Every group, no matter how disorganized, needs an acknowledged steering committee. These officers can be important, and I urge each of the newly elected officers to make their office one in which they themselves can be proud to fill."

University Party

1. Revision of Election laws to restore stability and proper representation in Student Legislature.

Because of the recent change in the election laws, legislative seats have been taken from dormitory, sorority, and fraternity areas where interest in student government has been concentrated, and one-fifth of th entire representation has been given to areas outside the corporate limits of Chapel Hill. The UP feels that this action will greatly reduce the prestige and efficiency of the Student legislature.

2. A decided attempt to secure pavement of the road from the Bell Tower to the new men's dormitories.

It is unfair for the residents of Avery, Teagus, and Parker not to have adequate access to their respective dormiteries. The UP is going to direct all its efforts toward having this road paved immediately.

3. Introduction of specific duties and responsibilities for class officers.

The UP pledges to work closely with the class officers in order to insure that they become functional rather than dignified positions.

4. Provide playgrounds and recreation areas in Victory Village and Glen Lennox.

The children in these areas are in dire need of playgrounds that will provide them with safe places for outside recreation.

5. Constant efforts to prevent the further installation of parking meters and to have the meters removed after the six-month trial period.

The parking meters in Chapel Hill are neither necessary nor justified. They are also a burden and nuisance to the university students who contribute more than their share of revenue to the city.

6. Build school bus shelter in Victory Village and Glen Lennox.

The school children in Victory Village and Glen Lennox have to stand unprotected in the weather while awaiting their buses. The UP is going to have shelters built for the children in these areas.

7. Both political parties are working toward many similar goals. These are musts for the betterment of the university. The University Party pledges to work wholeheartedly in order to meet goals.

a. cooperation with the IDC in improving social facilities in men's dormitories;

b. secure additional parking areas for dormitories and fraternities;

c. continue efforts to obtain a new student union;

d. work toward doing away with self-liquidating dorm rent plan; and

e. strive to improve student-faculty relations.

Student Party

1. Active student support of the budget request of the University of North Carolina through personal contacts, letters, petitions, etc. especially:

a. Continuance of efforts to secure a new and adequate student union.

b. acquisition of funds to allow adequate salary increases for the members of the faculty.

c. elimination, at least in part, of self-liquidation of dormitory construction in order to combat rising room rent.

d. an increase in the state funds alloted per dormitory occupant (now $2500) in order to provide improved dormitory facilities.

2. Active student support of requests for the initiation of a policy of faculty leaves.

3. Action to insure student control of student paid employees.

4. Elimination of all non-functioning class offices in order to concentrate student interest on purposeful student positions.

5. Elimination of all discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, or national origin, especially as it pertains to the University community.

6. Improvement of dormitory social facilities and rooms, in keeping with the Student Party initiated dormitery visiting agreement.

7. Revision of the Student Traffic Council and associated bodies in order to gain more definition of purpose and power.

8. Extension of the jury system and the use of the Attorney-General's Staff to Campus Code violations, as well as Honor Code violations.

9. Elimination of the involuntary payment of fees for athletic passbooks.

10. Provision of adequate study facilities in dormitories and in various classroom buildings.

11. Action to eliminate mandatory loyalty oaths for persons applying for University employment as being both impractical and in violation of the principles of academic freedom which should prevail on the campus.

12. Action towards relieving traffic congestion and parking problems, by such methods as offstreet parking, renovation of present areas, etc.

13. Full and nonpartisan investigation of the practicality of delaying formal "rushing" for fraternities in keeping with the SP's belief that such a delay would be beneficial to the entering freshmen over-all adjustment to college life.

14. Application of the intent of the "unlimited absence" attendance regulations.

15. Continued action towards the procurement of free telephone service in library phone booths.

16. Installation of more SP-inspired wall telephone booths in dormitories.

17. More careful investigation and appraisal of student budget requests.

18. Proper use of the information resources of the National Students' Association.

19. Support of the National Students' Association project to make student citizens of the state more cognizant of our educational needs.

20. Thorough study of the existing problems in campus politics in an attempt to increase interest and effectiveness.

Grad Club Letter

EDITOR:

Several years ago an interested group of graduate students formed a club which was initially sponsored by the YMCA. This organization was known as the Graduate Club, the purpose of which was, and is, "to promote the general welfare and interests of the members of said organization." Membership in the Graduate Club is open to all graduate, professional and special students enrolled in the University.

Although the Graduate Club has been in existence for several years, it has never operated under a Constitution. This fall, a large number of graduate students have felt the necessity of formulating a body of rules under which the club will operate. A special constitution committee together with its ratification sub-committee drew up and presented to the Graduate Club the proposed Constitution, which was approved by the members of the club on November 3. Copies of the Constitution have been distributed to the graduate women's and men's dormitories and to all of the departments. Additional copies may be secured in the YMCA by those persons desiring them.

On November 18, the day of the campus elections, each graduate student will have the opportunity to vote for or against ratification of the proposed Constitution. It is our hope that every graduate student will take advantage of this opportunity to exercise his opinion and to accept the responsibility to VOTE next Tuesday.

Parking Meters 'Complaints' Levelling Seen

The Chapel Hill Police Dept. has been deluged with complaints from local residents about parking meters after the first week of operation.

But Chief of Police Bill Blake said today that he feels the complaints, "mostly by persons who parked their car briefly to 'run into the store' and then got caught" will level off this week.

Chief Blake reminded motorists that his department has a fulltime man policing the town's 400 new meters. He also noted that "just running into a store" didn't exempt motorists from paving for the time to park.

Men From Manly Dormitory Throw Party For Nurses

"Quite a lively party," said Manly resident Bill Harrington speaking of the dance given the nurses by Manly Dorm Friday night.

One of the highlights of the dance occurred when Mrs. Margaret Jackson housemother, did the Charleston. Another was Ed Crow's combo who furnished the music.

The party, attended by about 110 people, was given in the basement of the Nurses Dorm from 8:30 till 11:30 p.m.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND
DTH SPORTS EDITOR

A long trip into the far north, 60 minutes of bone-breaking football, and Notre Dame had effectively burst the Carolina dream bubble. The Tar Heels bit the dust to the tune of 34-24 against the best team they've played all year.

Even against this fine Irish team, the Tar Heels had a chance up until 5 minutes to go in the game. At that point the Irish marched for their final TD to sew it up.

THE IRON CURTAIN FALLS

The Carolina defense, which had been given the name "The Iron Curtain, was ripped to shreds by the fast Irish halfbacks and the passing of George Izo kept the defense honest.

The bowls have turned their backs. There is still a chance but it is a slim one indeed. The Sugar Bowl is probably out for sure, with the Gator, Cotton, and Orange left.

IT WASN'T CAROLINA'S DAY

The Tar Heels have absolutely nothing to be ashamed of. They played their hearts out, but just couldn't make it. Every man played as well as he knew how, and they made a great game of it, but it just wasn't Carolina's day.

Notre Dame coaches and writers freely admitted they had played their best game of the entire season against the Tar Heels. The Irish, after a slow start, couldn't do anything wrong.

THE DIFFERENCE — SPEED

The biggest difference between the two teams was speed. The Irish had it, the Tar Heels didn't. Red Mack and Jim Crotty skirted the ends for long gains and slanted off tackle with equal success. A North Carolina boy, Greensboro's Norm Odnieyec, played the finest game of his career, getting off one 56 yard run.

The Irish even somehow figured a way to stop Don Klochak. True, they didn't keep him from making short gains, but the Bull just couldn't get loose for a long run. Terry Brennan said after the contest was over that the Irish defense was geared to stop Klochak. It did.

CUMMINGS, KOES WERE GREAT

Jack Cummings was one of the bright spots in a losing cause. Cummings passed with his usual skill in addition to pulling some good offensive plays. In the line, Ronnie Koes was simply great. We've never seen any one make a greater effort than did Koes. He would get blocked, get up, get knocked down again, and climb to his feet and make a tackle.

Al Goldstein continued his fine play at end. The transplanted Brooklynite sparkled on many catches, but one in particular on which he simply took the ball away from two Notre Dame defenders at the enemy one. Wade Smith and Emil DeCantis tried hard, very hard, but just couldn't make any headway through the tough Irish line. With two 235-pound ends going for them, the Notre Damers didn't have to worry about end sweeps either.

GUILTY AS CHARGED . . .

There has been a lot of criticism against Carolina on two particular counts. One is that the second unit was put in too soon and stayed in too long, and the other that the wrong play was run when the Heels had 4th and 1 at their own 29. To both counts, under the circumstances, they must plead guilty. Everyone should realize, however, that under such terrific pressure things go wrong. One should also realize that if the strategy had worked, the Tar Heels would have been heroes instead of goats.

So, they did their damndest but it didn't work out. On another day the story could read a different way. But football games have been lost before, and the team certainly take it in stride if the students can't. There is another game to go, and the season isn't over yet.

LAST GAME SATURDAY

This Saturday is the final game of the season. Most students probably haven't heard of the school we are to play. It's a place over in Durham, called Dook. We played them last year, but it was just to fill up the schedule.

Seriously though, the Devils won't be a pushover, not for Carolina or anyone. The Tar Heels can show what they're made of by whipping Duke Saturday. They have bounced back before, and they can do it again.

Frosh Booters Beat Dook 4-1

Carolina's freshman soccer team played its final game of the season with an impressive 4-1 victory over Duke here yesterday.

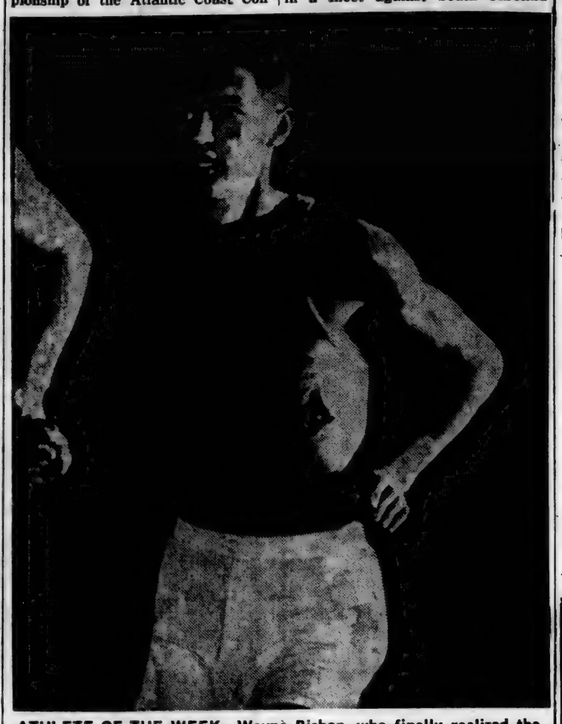
Kingman Brown scored two goals for the Tar Babies, while left wing Tom Sprinkle scored one goal, setting his total for the season at six goals. Also scoring was Jorge Belmont.

NAMED ATHLETE OF WEEK

Wayne Bishop Wins ACC Championship; Duke Team First

Carolina's Wayne Bishop, running for the first time in a month in competition, nosed out South Carolina's Bill Latham here yesterday with a brilliant finishing kick to gain the individual championship of the Atlantic Coast Conference's cross-country division. His great comeback made him Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the week.

Bishop, who led most of the way, finished up with a time of 18:40. He was injured earlier in the year in a meet against South Carolina and has not run since that time. The championship which has eluded the all-time UNC great finally came this year after many disappointments.



ATHLETE OF THE WEEK—Wayne Bishop, who finally realized the ACC cross-country championship yesterday, is Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week. Bishop shot past USC's Bill Latham in the last 100 yards to clinch the honors.

Last year Bishop went into this same event undefeated in regular season meets, but suffered an injury along the route and had to drop out. This year the recurring knee injury struck again, but Bishop stuck in there and kept working out. It payed off handsomely yesterday.

Bishop ran his last race for Dale Ranson's cross-country team yesterday. He has been the team stalwart since his arrival at Carolina and will be sorely missed.

Bishop is also an outstanding man in the track season, running the mile and two-mile for the Tar Heels.

Duke Team First

Duke rolled to first place as team champions with their 1-2-3 punch of Jerry Nourse, Cary Weiseiger and Dave Pithkethly sweeping 3rd, 4th, and 5th places. The Devil score was 47.

Carolina was second in the team totals with a final count of 66, which just shaded Maryland. The Terps had 68 ponts.

The Bishop-less Tar Heels finished the regular seasonwi th a 3-4 record, one of the worst since Ranson took over the cross country reigns.

The remaining team finishers were State, Clemson, Virginia, Wake Forest, and South Carolina in that order.

Scurlock Eighth

Carolina's Dave Scurlock was 8th, and Cowles Liipfert finished 10th. Other Tar Heel runners were Bing Somers, 20th, Howard Kahn, 27th, and Bob Foxworth, 30th.

The individual summaries:

1 — Bishop, (UNC), 2 — Latham (USC), 3 — Nourse (Duke, 4 — Weisieger (Duke), 5 — Pithkethly (Duke), 6 — Colavita (Md.), 7— Medlin (WF), 8 — Scurlock (UNC), 9 — Tyler (Clem.), 10 — Liipfert (UNC).

Terps Hand Booters First Conference Loss By 2-1

COLLEGE PARK, MD. — Maryland's powerful soccer team clinched another conference title here yesterday with a 2-1 victory over a fired up Carolina squad.

Carolina played four quarters of good soccer, but the Terps were too much for them and thus continued their dominance as soccer champion in the ACC.

The Tar Heels, playing hustling ball from the start, jumped into a one-goal lead with 10 minutes gone in the first quarter on a goal by left forward Joe Perkins, who scored after taking a setup pass from John Ghanim.

Maryland retaliated about three minutes later on a goal by Pete Liaris, his tally tying the game up at 1-1. For the remanider of the half, both teams waged a defensive battle.

Carolina's offensive unit, passing beautifully, could not hit paydirt as Maryland's defense tightened up just as the Tar Heels seemed on the verge of scoring.

In the third quarter, Maryland forward Dick Ronnie dealt what proved to be the death blow for the Tar Heels when his shot went into the Carolina goal after being deflected off the foot of a Carolina defenseman.

Carolina threatened several times to tie the score up, but were thwarted by some miraculous saves on the part of Maryland's goalie, Al Lehman.

In the last 10 minutes of the fourth quarter, Maryland gained the upper hand and threatened to increase the lead, but Carolina's defense, bolstered by the fine playing of goalie Marvin Blunt, held firm and the game ended with Maryland victorious, 2-1.

After the game, a Maryland player praised the Tar Heels' defense, stating that the team had been accustomed to getting an average of 20 to 30 shots per game against its opponents.

Yesterday's game marked the closest a Carolina team has come to beating Maryland in four years. Maryland, since three years ago, has beaten Carolina by scores of 3-1, 4-0, and 4-2.

The loss was Carolina's first conference defeat of the season, giving the Tar Heels a 7-2 over-all record as they prepare for Friday's important conference clash with the Duke Blue Devils in Durham.

Student Legislature Line-Up In Doubt; UP And SP Both Hold 23 Seats

UP Wins Thirteen Offices

The University Party swept through thirteen of the fifteen class officers elected last night. The new Freshman class officers are Jey Deifell, President; Stewart Priddy, Vice President; Maxine Green Field, Secretary; Tom Alexander Treasurer; and Peggy Costner, Social Chairman.

In the closest race of the election, Charlie Graham edged past Davis Young (SP) as Sophomore Class President by a margin of only 2 votes. Other Sophomore officers are Joe Warner, Vice President; Sharon Sullivan, Secretary; Dave Alexander (SP), Treasurer; and Carol Tieslau, Social Secretary.

The Junior Class officers elected yesterday are headed by Wade Smith, President; Jack Spain, Vice President; Martha Morgan (SP), Secretary; Graham Claytor, Treasurer; and Mary Margaret Brown, Social Chairman.

There is a posibility of a re-vote in the sophomore Class Presidency. A recount was held and candidate Davis Young's margin of defeat was cut from 4 to 2 last night. If the Elections board feels he has a valid case they can order such a re-vote.

Club Elects Officers

Jack Mitchell, a sophomore of Chattanooga, Tenn., was elected president of the Canterbury Club, the Protestant Episcopal Church felowship group for college students, at a recent meeting.

Other officers include: Angus Duff, vice-president and program chairman; Nan Robinson, secretary; Penny Boone, treasurer; and Tom O'Neal, food chairman.

At the last meting the members of Canterbury Club unanimously approved a new constitution.

Grad Constitution Approved

The Graduate Club constitution was approved by a vote of 185-51 last night as approximately 20% of the graduate student body turned out. It was the largest graduate turnout in recent years.

The new Constitution provides for a Graduate Club, four executive officers, and a Graduate Council with legislative power.

The Graduate Council is to be drawn from each department and school of the University with the Graduate Club members in that school or department electing a representative or his being appointed by the chairman of the department subject to the graduate members in that department's approval.

Another proposition failed to be put on the ballot, deleting the head cheerleader from being an elective office. The bill that deleted the head cheerleader passed the Student Legislature that deleted the head cheerleader passed the Student Legislature three weeks ago, but required a constitutional amendment.

The bill should be voted upon along with another proposition to have legislative elections only once a year — in the fall. The election should take place within two weeks.

The Grad Club Constitution is the first in the history of the club which started as an offspring of the YMCA.

Its executive officer, president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer will be elected at the time of regular student body elections in th spring.

The Student Legislature line-up remained clouded after last night's elections as three independents swept into office.

The line-up in the legislature after last night is 23-23 with four independents. Organization of the Legislature will have to wait until it convenes next Thursday.

Tom Cordle and Joe Mazzei swept Dorm Men's I for the Student Party, as they whipped Don Hayes and Randall Johnson. Mazzei, however, won in a very colse race.

An independent copped one of the two seats in Dorm Men's II unseating an incumbent, Roger Foushee (SP). Jim Scott, the independent, and Jim Crownover (SP) won easily with Crownover's victory almost landslide in proportion. John Frye (UP) finished third behind Scott.

The SP won three out of four seats in Dorm Men's III bringing their delegation from that district to four. Winners were Ray Bagwell (SP), Mike Shulman (SP), Joe Oppenheimer (UP), and Dan Brown ((SP).

The University Party copped its second seat in nominally SP Dorm Men's IV, as Bob Sevier beat out Dave Matthews (SP) handily.

Bill Porter, incumbent SP legislator from Dorm Men's V, eked a small victory from Jimmy Hartung (UP).

Four SP candidates coasted to victories in the race in Dorm Men's VI, as incumbent Dave Jones won along with running mates Bob Nobles, Henry McPherson, and Bob Thompson.

Bob Grubb and Bob Turner, both UP, coasted to easy victories over Don Dotson running independent from Town Men's I.

Charlie Gray (UP) ran and won unopposed in Town Men's II.

Two independents won in Town Men's III, as doubly endorsed Ed Levy, and non-endorsed David Evans both were elected.

Nine Elected To 3 Councils

Three candidates won seats in the Student Council Elections last night, as nine students were elected to judiciary posts.

Elected to the Student Council were Erwin Fuller and Tony Salinger without opposition.

Joe Warner copped a three candidate race from Angus Duff and Hugh Ragsdale for the third seat. Duff was runner-up.

Libby Johnson and Rosemary Roberts won clear majorities in the race for honor council, but the third seat was a dead heat between Sandra Trotman and a run-off will in all probability be necessary.

George Grayson led a field of 10 candidates for the three vacant seats in the Men's Honor Council. A surprise winner was Dewey Sheffield, an independent running without selection board endorsement for the second of three seats.

The third seat was won by Howard Holderness.

'Spectrum' Features Creative Art Forms

By VIRGIL EARLY

Poetry, fiction, art, drama and music. All will be included in the new campus literary magazine, The Spectrum, to be published soon.

Editor Dennis Parks reports that The Spectrum will feature creative writing by students and faculty of the University. "The Spectrum is to be a contemporary magazine stressing intimacy through unity. It is to be a living form rather than a commentary," said Parks. The first issue will follow a general theme—relationship between people.

The magazine will contain approximately 32 pages of written material plus advertisements and will sell for $ .35. It will also include six cuts of original campus art work.

Only establishments which fit into the general character of the magaine are being solicited for advertising.

The idea of the Spectrum arose last spring in the YMCA meetings. Parks said there was a feeling of need for such a magazine. This This fall the organization took place with the YMCA's financial backing. The Spectrum editor has full freedom in the magazine's makeup.

In the YMCA meetings Dennis Parks was elected editor. The other Spectrum positions filled by appointment are Art. Editor, Jo Trupp and Business Manager, Doris Berry.

Because of a lack of office space in the YMCA building, the Spectrum offices are located in the Co-op house on W. Franklin.

The writings and art work are being judged on a scale of 0 to 5 by the staff. The only criterion is the materials excellence. Parks stressed that material is still being accepted for this issue and should be sent to: Spectrum, 208 W. Franklin.

Staff Meeting Planned

All staffers have been urged to be present for Yack pictures which will be made at that time.

IDC Planning To Take Stand On Gambling

The Inter-Dormitory Council plans to take a definite stand on gambling tonight in the form of a joint statement with the Inter-Fraternity Council and the Student Council.

Rudy Edwards, IDC president, said yesterday that by-laws for the council will also be voted on at the meeting.

The council will discuss the possibilities of opening the social rooms of eight men's dorms this weekend and of securing more vending machines.

Plans for establishing a campus store near the new dorms, Avery, Parker and Teague will also be considered.

Sam Gets A Bath; Old Baths Remembered

"Sam needs a bath every year. Doesn't his face look better?"

A Chapel Hill policeman was, of course, commenting on the removal of the "new suit" of paint given Silent Sam, the Confederate soldier, Monday night sometime between 3 and 4 a.m.

The blue coat and white trousers (instead of weathered gray) might have been painted by a Carolina student, the policeman said yesterday, watching the paint being removed.

But J. P. Ellington, superintendent of maintenance painting for the University, disagreed. When Ellington first saw the paint job, "I thought they'd taken Sam down and put up a Carolina man. But the blue was a little too dark."

In addition there is still this evidence: two "Duke" words on the east and west sides of the statue's stone pedistal.

The policeman did say that a car bearing a Duke sticker was seen in Chapel Hill on Franklin and Raleigh Streets Monday.

While cleaning off the paint from Sam, workmen C. W. Clark and Robert Elmore asked if the Rebel had ever been painted red. With the blue and white paint, they were cleaning off red paint, reminiscent of the intense rivalry between Carolina and State College.

Ellington, who has gone through many, many paint jobs during football season, said whoever painted Sam this time did a good job. "I'd like to find them. I might put them on."

Another paint expert, George Hicks of Durham, suggested that Ellington leave the "Duke" written on the stone base of the statue. And if UNC wins Saturday's game, "Carolina" should also be written with the score.

The "Duke" won't come off completely for several days, Ellington said, because stone absorbs the liquid paint removers and streaks badly. A sand blaster will probably be used since the paint was applied by a spray gun instead of by brush.

Recalling past experiences with "amateur painters," Ellington said the Sam painting hadn't really been so bad, except for the words written on stone.

Other years had brought the painting of columns all over the campus—Memorial Hall, Morehead Building, the Library, Graham Memorial.

One time, Ellington remembered, ink bottles had been emptied into the Old Well.

Local policemen commented that a favorite spot for the "patriotic painters" is the horse at Person Hall.

Ram And Ewe Editor Resigns

Sam Varnadoe resigned yesterday as editor of the Ram and Ewe, the campus humor magazine. Varnadoe gave lack of time and lack of staff as reasons for his resignation.

The humor magazine is scheduled to come out twice this year, and interviews to select an new business manager and editor will be held within the next two weeks.

According to Varnadoe, the Ram and Ewe is obligated to subscribers and advertisers to print at least twice, otherwise the money has to be returned to the subscribers.

A difficulty was reported in the finances of the magazine, since financial records have not been kept.

The Publications Board, meeting yesterday, decided to give advertisers credit, and produce the magazine twice this year in order to meet their financial obligations.

IFC Plans Statement On Gambling

The Inter-Fraternity Council voted to make a joint statement with the Student Council and the Inter-Dormitory Council Tuesday night concerning gambling on the campus.

IFC President Tucker Yates said that the statement would be released at the end of this week. He termed it necessary for the IFC to take a stand on the matter.

Yates told the IFC Monday that there would be a crackdown on drinking at the Carolina-Duke game. Coolers and ice will be confiscated, and the ushers have been instructed to get the police to take care of people who show signs of intoxication.

This action was initiated by the Student Government.

He advised the council members to tell the members of their houses about the crack down.

The IFC voted to cooperate with the Panhellenic Council in sponsoring a blood drive. Details will be worked out later.

James Edward Moore has been appointed to investigate the possibility of withholding diplomas until all fraternity debts are paid.

Yates urged the council members to try to prevent any vandalism against Duke. He reminded the members that a student could be kicked out of school if he were found on the Duke Campus after women's closing hours.

The IFC is still working on getting office space. Ashe Exum has been appointed UNC's representative to the National Inter-Fraternity Council convention in Atlanta.

Vote Coming On Amend's

Two constitutoinal amendments will be voted on by students within the next few weeks, Bob Furtado, chairman of the Elections Board, said yesterday.

One of these, authorizing the appointment of the head cheerleader by student government, had been reported by The Daily Tar Heel as being included in yesterday's election.

The bill was not on the ballots because Student Legislature authorized the referendum last Thursday, less than six days before yesterday's election. An amendment must go through at least a six-day waiting period after Legislature has passed it before being voted on by the students.

The student Constitution currently provides for the election, rather than appointment, of the head cheerleader.

The second proposed amendment calls for a single fall election of all members of Legislature.

Pep Rally To Be Unique States Head Cheerleader

Th last pep rally of the season will be "unique," according to Carter Jones, head cheerleader.

The University Club has planned a wide-sweeping pep rally to begin about 6:30 Friday evening.

Les Sutorius and his combo will begin at Fraternity row and lead students from that area; the University pep band will lead students from the lower quad area.

Both bands and followers will converge on the intramural field to meet the team,, light a bonfire and cheer.

After the rally at the field students will form behind a truck containing the band and march on the town. The rally will end in the center of Chapel Hill with much cheering and cries of "Beat Dook!"

Audit Board Discusses Employees' Rights

The Student Audit Board discussed the righis of Student Activity Fund employes at its meeting Monday afternoon.

The board plans to draw up a list of basic policies concerning the fund employes regarding vacation, sick leave and overtime.

Don Gray, chairman of the board, said the possibility of making contracts with the employes will be undertaken by the board.

Letters introducing the board's plans were sent to all campus organizations, inviting questions about the use of Student Activity funds.

'Beat Dook' Parade Friday; Awards Given At Pep Rally

The Pi Kappa Alpha "Beat Dook" float parade will start Friday at 3 p.m. in front of Woollen Gym, proceeding through campus, down Franklin St., up Columbia St., across Cameron Ave., and back to the gym.

Thirty-three entries in the parade will compete for five trophies to be awarded Friday night at the University Club pep rally. One trophy will be given in each of the following divisions: men's dorms, men and women's dorm combinations, sororities and fraternities.

Miss Katherine Carmichael, Dr. James E. King and Roy Armstrong will judge the parade.

Bands in the parade will be the UNC Band, Navy ROTC and Air Force ROTC.

The "Beat Dook" queen and court of six were chosen from 24 contestants last night. The queen and her court will ride in the PiKA float and preside over the pep rally Friday night.

Judging the beauty contest were: Mrs. Margaret Carmichael, Jimmy Kapps of Radio Station WPTF, Raleigh; Dr. S. B. Knight and Dr. Hugh Lefler.

Coeds Meet To Draw Up Statement

A group of coeds will meet today to draw up a statement of purpose for a proposed Social Standards Committee.

Nancy Adans, Women's Honor Council head who has spearheaded the drive for such a committee, said yesterday she feels confident of the full support of all dormitories and sororities after this statement is issued.

The committee met earlier this week to discuss the views expressed by women students in regard to the formation and function of such a committee.

Commenting on the discussion at the meeting, Sue Ballantine president of Carr Dormitory, said that the proposed committee ought to answer questions concerning what the Campus Code covers. The committee would make the girls more aware of the code and at the same time make the code more outstanding. The purpose of the committee is not to define a lady, she said.

The physical structure of the committee will consist of one overall council and smaller committees in each dorm and sorority.

Another house president commented yesterday that the committee would "warn" girls not yet violating the Campus Code, but getting close to it. This "warning" function is necessary because girls won't take the responsibility of warning each other, she said.

Dean Takes Dim View On Duke Vandalism

Dean Robert Cox of Duke University said yesterday if any Duke students are caught doing damage to the Carolina campus, "just lock them up and we will deal with them."

Dean Cox and Duke Pep Board chairman Ty Heineken said they regretted the painting of Silent Sam supposedly by Duke students.

Extra plans have been made both at Duke and here to control students and protect property, Cox said.

Federal Aid

It was interesting to see some of the answers given by legislature candidates to the question on federal aid to education. All, it seems, are for federal aid, and all, save one grudging response, are against federal control.

Why they are opposed to federal control maybe three-fold. First they may be opposed due to the federal pressure on desegregation. Secondly, they may oppose federal control because of the thought control that might result for all students under a federalized system. Thirdly, they may come from other states than North Carolina whose revenue might be turned to poorer states under a federal system. Whatever their reasons are, they are wrong.

The federal government should not only aid but also control education. They should develop a nationwide system giving each person in the United States an equal opportunity for educational advancement, and eliminating the disparity between the quality of education received that currently exists by crossing state lines. The government should not only outlay money but see that the state's money is outlayed on an equitable basis that would insure each student the right of equal educational opportunity.

There should be also a national standards committee to set up the minimum standards necessary throughout the nation for achievement, and to see that all public facilities maintain these standards. Finally, it should be that all students no matter of what financial standard, should be able to gain an education free of charge to their individual academic capacity — which means free college education subsidized by federal scholarships and grants.

To those who argue that thought control might result, the answer can be given that there is more thought control on viewpoint in the south now than could be under a federal system. If handled fairly with a respect for what democracy is and with a view that the handling of education both in program and finances is not a political football, although a crucial issue ,this system can provide for all, not just some, to get an adequate education without suffering.

Those who have something to fear from such a system are those who either profit by keeping a limited public in ignorance or those who do not believe that on a national level democracy can work. These either lack faith or commitment.

A federal system, whatever its potential evils, offer to the people of the United States an opportunity to get out from under the miasma of ignorance that it currently is in. This is a situation to be desired.

A Good Thing

The Chi Psi lodge is doing things out of the ordinary for bettering campus conditions and breaking down fraternity-non-fraternity barriers.

Included in their program are periodical dinners with dormitory leaders and fraternity officers, and teas, like that held this weekend with members of the faculty.

The Chi Psi's under the leadership of Charlie Huntington are doing an excellent job, and have been able to do a little toward creating a balance between the social and academic.

Monday came and passed pretty much as usual. The sun rose, and later it set. The Bell Tower made its noise; waking, rising, classes, meals; studying, sleeping—all traveled their weary road. But Monday was different, too. Three times one could sense its peculiarity, and one knew that here was a day, an individual, particular, depressing, enlightening, wretched day.

Early one began to suspect the difference. The dormitory door stuck a bit as it was opened. With but a little question, even Monday morning eyes detected that it had been sloshed with paint. The now-familiar fire blisters were somewhat hidden, and those attractive black charred spots had disappeared. A shiny new screen covered the window above the letters ALEXANDER, and the cracked panes had been replaced. A few days wear, and the door shall stick no more; weather will dull the screen. All will be the same as before

I guess we'll be getting our fire extinguishers soon.

Then, classes and lunch were done. A walk to town and a package was mailed. Again something was different—or should have been. But it was overcome.

"They" were there: the merchants, their yawning coffers; the students, many with willing money, most with some; and the cars. The masses were stirring, here, there; registers singing; leeches smiling, winning; money spent.

Not today, one thought. But it was true. The students had come. Not today.

Chicago Tribune item: parking meter—an automatic device that bets a dollar to your nickel that you can't get back before the red flag pops up.

The University is full of reckless gamblers.

Chapel Hill is full of willing bookies.

One returns; the door again, and then noise. Once again this day is different. More noise, and it doesn't stop. Finally an explanation, and one knows that readers of the next day's sports pages will be amused. A clever trick by a clever man. It should be worthwhile.

There is shame, though, too. Why was the noise necessary? Other students have more spirit; they constantly support and cheer their team. Tatum must prepare; his team, despite fine success, has not been deafened often. The players are not accustomed to much noise

Accursed apathy. And then "that" columnist! It's too bad.

Fire extinguishers, parking meters, artificial cheers.

It's all too bad.

But can it be remedied? Probably not. Too bad.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

Eleanor Steber's recital, which served to open the Duke University Artists' Series last Monday night in Page Auditorium, was frankly disappointing. Her artistic fame has been well-established by her frequent appearances with the Metropolitan Opera, often in extremely demanding roles such as Tosca and the recent title-role in Samuel Barber's new opera Vanessa. Miss Steber has sung in almost all the major operas in the reportoire and has been recognized as one of the outstanding sopranos of our time. Perhaps it was for these reasons that we expected much, and, not satisfied, were disappointed.

Her concert was carefully arranged to present a balanced program which included groups of French, German, and American songs, and concluded with three arias from Italian operas. It was only in the last part of her concert that the soprano was in her true element and provided the audience with some musical fireworks. The fault, it would seem, lies not with the artist, but with the demands of the program. Singing opera is distinctly different from singing art songs; and it would seem almost impossible for one singer to have the temperment and talent to do justice to the demands of both. Nevertheless, the so-called "balanced program" asks the singer to do just that, with the result that the artist has to srech her artistis range beyond its capabilities, doing serious harm to her performance. Miss Steber in an operatic soprano: she has the technical and artistic equipment to sing opera with the kind of excitement few other singers can match. But to ask her to sing Franch and German art songs is unfair to her and the music.

The program opened with a rather hysterical rendition of Verdi's aria "Ritorna Vincitor" from Aida. Following this was a group of French songs by Duparc, Debussy, Faure, and Bachelet. The wide vibrator of the soprano's voice could not really come to terms with the inherent purity of the French art song. The delicate melodic line, with its own peculiar kind of passion, demands the kind of focus of sound that the artist does not have. The songs in her performance lost their subtlety and became almost factual, rather than transparent.

The second group of songs, representing the German lieder, were all by the composer Brahms. Here the soprano's voice was not so much a barrier to the proper execution of these songs, as her sense of phrasing which has been conditioned by her operatic singing, and is highly unsuitable for the lieder. Frequently phrasing in operatic singing can be accomplished by a kind of slurring of the voice which unites one note with the next by a gradual raising or lowering of the voice. This, by the very nature of the German lieder, cannot be done in a Brahms song without seriously endangering the peculiar structure of the melodic line which depends for its musical existence on a much more prounced clarity of interval and, consequently, clarity of intervallic progression.

Again Miss Steber's operatic temperament tended to interpret these songs either as dramatic or sentimental. The lieder is neither: it may be deeply serious and deeply involved with sentiment, but the difference between seriousness and drama, between sntiment and sentimentality is vital in the conception of these songs.

What must also be criticized was the lack of musical communication between pianist Edwin Biltcliffe and the singer. This is of the utmost importance in these songs, and without it, the musical intent loses its proportion and unity. The art song is not a voice line accompanied by piano, but the amazing unity of two equals.

After the intermission followed a group of American songs, the most successful of which was Menotti's hilarious "Hello, Hello!" song from The Telephone.

The program closed with the arias "Depuis le jour" from Charpentier's Louise, "Addio del passato" from Verdi's La Traviata, and from Puccini's La Boheme, the beautiful "Musetta's Waltz Song. In these, the artist demonstrated her natural sympathy and talent with Italian Opera. Her voice, lush with its wide-range vibrato and amazing volume, brought to these arias a firery excitement and naural expresssion.

I think it is time to recognize that the chasm between the art song and the operatic aria necessitates entirely different interpretation and rules of performance which should make clear whether an artist does or does not have the vocal equipment and personal temperament to bridge this chasm. The so-called "balanced program" is a musical fallacy.

Letters On Many Different Topics

Editor:

May I say that I do not pretend to bet a skillful writer and I shall in no way attempt to make it appear so to the readers of this article. It does not appear that too much ability is required to express the reastions to the disgusting editorial View and Preview by Anthony Wolff which appeared on this page November 8.

For those of you who did not read the article, it amounted to a direct slam at Coach Jim Tatum, our football team, our faculty, any of our students who were on hand to cheer our Tar Heels to a blazing victory. I say our team, our faculty, and our students because they are ours. They are a part of each and everyone at Carolina. Ninty-nine per cent of the students on this campus are proud of our team, our faculty, and our fellow students for their efforts in making our university one of the finest in America.

As to the article itself, Coach "Sunny" Jim Tatum should have his throwing hand soundly shaken, and not paddled, for the tremendous job he has done here. In three short years he has taken Carolina's football program out of the doghouse and molded a talent laden power-house that may very likely be an opponent for someone on New Year's Day. Coaches Frank McGuire and Walter Rabb are to be commended also. We at Carolina know that for years to come we can be proud of the success of all of our athletic teams.

Football does not come before classes here at Carolina or anywhere. Anyone with any intelligence knows this. The game at Virginia was no different then the Duke game will be. No doubt Kenan Stadium will be packed on November 22. No doubt ninety per cent of the Carolina student body will be on hand to let its team know it is behind them. No doubt the same people would have been at the game in Virginia for the same purpose had they thought themselves able to miss classes or spend the money. Those students who made the trip to Virginia did so at their own discretion. It is ridiculous for anyone to say that they are the ones who neglect their studies. It just is not right to assume such a thing and it is more probable that classes were considerably duller on Saturday instead of more alive.

It is true that the faculty is the only group "strong enough to thwart Mr. Tatum's proposed desertion of the academic ranks in favor of vicarious athletics." However I am sure that Mr. Tatum does not favor desertion of academic ranks. Obviously the faculty is in full sympathy with Mr. Tatum and our athletic program. If not it should be. There is more to college than merely attending classes every single day. Most people mature in college and they do not do it by maintaining a flawless class attendance record or by keeping their head constantly in a textbook. I may be wrong but I think this is the least of it. People mature by getting out in life and mixing with others. If a person can not get along with and understand his fellowman he must be immature. The person who can not seem to get out of his shell is said to be O. T. D.

Each professor here knows his good and bad students. Many instructors are in favor of unlimited cuts. Therefore it is obvious that many instructors sympathize with the students. They realize as so many of us do that a college student is old enough to make his own decisions. We don't need to be mothered any longer. Everyone at Carolina knows that those who are here for a party are not around very long.

The so called "universal quiz" is one of the silliest things I have ever heard. I doubt seriously that any such quiz has ever been given here by any member of our faculty or ever will be, for how much of a student's ability does this show. The instructors are interested only in educating us, not getting rid of us. There are students who attempt to deceive their instructors, but thy soon fall by the wayside.

The game at Virginia was played and was won very handily by our Tar Heels. That's us! We are all Tar Heels because we are from Carolina and should be proud of it or else we should not be here.

We have a strong student body, a highly capable faculty, and a wonderful football team with a fine coach. Each depends upon the other. Without support what kind of teams would we have? Without winning teams or teams at all where would the old Carolina spirit be, in the classroom. Without a capable faculty what kind of a university would we have? Everything seems to be doing fine on the hill. This is so because the Carolina students, faculty, and athletic program work together. Education is first, but the administration is aware that we have an athletic program and that our teams need our support. If this is not so then why doesn't the administration do away with athletics, move Carolina to some deserted island and say "Let us all become a bunch of monks!"

So far I have not slammed the person who wrote the article the way he did his fellow students, his instructors and the guys who fight their hearts out to win for Carolina. Obviously the guy is in a class by himself, most likely because somewhere along the way he has been left out. From the sound of his article it is probably his own fault. If all of us felt the way he does I am afraid that spirit here at Carolina would be exactly nil.

Happily there are few Tar Heels who lack school spirit. Those who do, however, are not Tar Heels. Hark the sound of Tar Heel voices means nothing to them.

PETE BRAKE

Editor:

The Daily Tar Heel has gone to the dogs. It has, in the past month become principally a commercial information bulletin—we hesitate to uuse the word newspaper.

These continuous, massive advertisements which daily flood the publication are usually quite unrelated to the majority of the students needs and wants. For example, in the issue on Thursday, November 13 . . . How many students are interested in buying dog food, pole beans, or fresh lettuce. We'll agree that some few of the Chapel Hill townspeople who read the DTH might be interested in this, but isn't this a student publication in the first place. We don't want groceries, Mr. Editor, we want news, and if you can't—with help of your staff-furnish us with it; we can always get someone else who can.

Don't get us wrong. We realize the necessity of advertising for a successful paper, but why in Heaven's name is there going to be so much of it? Mr. Editor, you will probably be the first to admit that the excessive advertisement on the above mentioned date succeeded in crowding out the comics and the crossword. Now you tell us why.

Letter From Olympus

"Individuality" is a word that has been used very often this year, appear in the Daily Tar Heel editorials and street corner discussions and everywhere in between. It produces an emotional reaction that is too often unfavorable; it is sometimes considered the most undesirable of traits. This attitude is due only to a lack of understanding of the word.

First, to be an individual does not necessarily mean that one must be conscientiously "different." That Bohemianism is accepted as the Temple of Individuality is from the very beginning fallacious. Bohemianism is merely a revolt against certain varying aspects of the society-at-large; it is not a declaration of individuality. As a matter of fact, Bohemia is a society within itself, based on very strict and superficial modes of behavior such as outlandish clothing, unorthodox opinions, and a general desire among Bohemians to do as other Bohemians do. However, everything that seems "different" is not Bohemian. Many artists find themselves designated as Bohemians merely because they are artists, when in reality the since artist and the Bohemian artist are completely opposite one another in approach to their work. The real artist works, the pseudo-artist talks.

Second, there is fear that an "individual" will flaunt those particular tenets of society that he does not happen to feel like advocating. In other words, that he will be rude when he does not feel like being polite. When someone walks down the dormitory hall in the morning without saying "Good Morning", he is challenged as being an "individual." This is fallacious. When someone is rude, he is not raising the issue of individuality; he is merely being rude.

Third, there are many so-called accepted ways of "asserting one's own individuality." Among these methods are growing a beard, wearing long hair in a short-haired world, wearing blue when greys are the vogue, etc. But none of these acts are what they claim to be namely, assertions of individuality, because in this sense the assertion is really one of non-conformity. Individuality and non-conformity are wrongly equated. There is no such thing as non-conformity; all efforts of non-conformity are merely efforts of conformity to other standards. For instance, the beard-grower is merely conforming to beard-growing as a means of "non-conforming." Perhaps, if there was the possibility of an original method of non-conforming there would be an original non-conformist.

Individuality, then, does not depend on superfietalities such as Bohemia, it does not imply an anti-society attitude, and it does not have anything to do with demonstrations of independence such as beard-growing or other comparable acts.

It does manifest itself through an independent desire to become aware. Awareness is the key to individuality. But it is not enough to be merely aware that there is an international problem raised in the Quemoy area; one must be aware of the implications involved. It is not enough to be aware of the fact that Dostoyevsky wrote a book called 'Crime and Punishment'; one must read the book and be aware of the meanings within it.

Individuality consists of an awarenes of the circumstances within which we act. For instance, wearing ivy-tailored clothes merely because everyone else wears them is an act of unforgivable conformity. But wearing ivy-tailored clothes and, because of the knowledge that they are stylish, choosing to wear them is an individual decision. Voting the Democratic ticket because the Republicans have gone out of style is bad, but voting Democratic because of a certain knowledge of the issues involved is an individual decision.

In other words, the most important thing to individuality is acting as an independent being out of an accurate awareness of a situation, and not out of blind obedience to an existing status quo. If this is the case, the particular choice or decision made does not matter. The only thing that does matter is that it is come by sincerely and honestly, and whether it is generally agreed with or not is completely unimportant. The real issue is self-honesty, and this is far from unfavorable. This is admirable.—C.L.

Harper's Bizarre

Gray isn't such a bad color.

In fact, our first distinct impression of the University and Village which is Chapel Hill was essentially gray.

It was during winter exams our first year here. Not until then did we feel the significance of our surroundings. It was bleak, cold, damp (but no longer raining—there was no more room for water) and the buildings and trees stood strangely sharp against the background which was no color—just gray.

We felt the power embodied in the gray. The steady, ponderous pressure which settled over the buildings and trees, and looked like fog. Then we thought of a warm fireside, and it was not cruel.

We recall the gray mountains. Long ago now, but still no farther away, yet so long ago. We were standing in the same water-sogged damp at the edge of a stream. The water was gray too. It was a small stream, but the water had great depth; it didn't tumble playfully over the rocks; it hadn't time. The rocks understood, and the water rushed between.

And we recall the Banks. It was cold August. Gray August. There was water then too, but in the surf there was not violence, merely trust in the gray, everywhere. And the gray made its point. Later, it rained. The next morning there was no more gray, just wet, which is not the same.

But most of all we recall the gray campus: the dripping branches, blurred lights; the passing cars which were absorbed; and the long gray finger of a sundial, pointing it out for those who watched. And we think of a warm fireside.

Gray is not a bad color. —J. Harper

A Letter

Ah, show us your teeth, sir, and flast us your smiles!
We'll surely fall victim once more to your wiles—
We'll surely believe you whenever you grin,
So show us your kindness, and cover your sin.
Now give us your promise, so trusted and true,
And give us your greetings, like which there are few;
We know you are peaceful—you fought on our side,
So who can distrust you, in terror or pride?
The bleat of the lamb drowns the growl of the bear,
And why draw your pistol? We know you are fair!
Those stories of Hungary—stop, say no more;
Come over, and flourish your hand to the fore.

• • • •

We trusted them often, we trusted them far,
We trusted their simpers which nothing could mar;
We have paid for it dearly—but there, to the plow;
The guard has been watching, and watches us now.

PROBLEMS FACING POETS DESCRIBED

The hard problems which modern poets face in reaching a responsive audience were described by a UNC associate professor of English in recent talks here to students at Mitchell College.

Dr. Lyman Cotten participated in the college's symposium on the arts, speaking on "The Modern Poet and his Audience." In addition to his discussion of difficulties encountered by poets of the last 150 years, he led informal sessions with smaller groups of Mitchell College students.

A specialist in Victorian as well as modern literature and poetry, Dr. Cotton has been with the UNC Department of English since 1941. He did undergraduate work at Chapel Hill and received his Ph. D. degree from Yale University.

THE LOW DOWN ON THE UPSTAIRS
By RUTH GORDON

We are so happy to know that this writing endeavor has not been in vain . . . we have had so many girls come up to see us — mostly out of curiosity.

"They came, they saw, they con-curred." You should see the looks of surprise on their faces . . . that such a dumpy looking place should house such beautiful clothes . . . I have said and say again . . . "The decor of this establishment is authentic-authentic Early American Garbage." Very comfortable place to come — you need not fear breaking anything up here . . . everything is already broken . . . even the signs are 'broken' — in other words, we do not get every dress in every size . . . but if you like it, we can fit it . . . we do have the best seamstress this side of the Pacific ocean . . .

Incidentally, we'd love to have you open a charge account with us . . . all you have to do is show us your I.D. card, leave a pint of blood and your left arm — and after that again I say, the dress can be altered to fit — we have gobs of left sleeves hanging around the alteration room.

We are receiving new dresses every day — These after five things are "out of this world" — reasonable too — try to get up here soon and select your holiday dress — early while the selection is complete —

Tar Heels Top Stax

In spite of a loss to powerful Notre Dame, Carolina's Tar Heels still lead the ACC in many departments. After nine games, the Heels lead in total offense, total defense and rushing defense. They are second in pass offense.

Jack Cummings continues to pull away from opposition, leading the conference in total offense. Cummings is second in passing. He needs only 13 yards against Duke to eclipse the old total offense record in the ACC. Cummings currently has 1,025 yards for a 7.6 average. He has completed 661 of 115 passes for 1019 yards and 11 touchdowns.

Russia Plans East Germany Withdrawal

By SEYMOUR TOPPING

BERLIN, — (AP) — A responsible Soviet source said tonight Russia intends to give Communist East Germany control over all Western allies supply lines to Berlin — air, rail and highway.

It was a confirmation of East German hints and Western expectations in a pattern building up since Premier Nikita Khrushchev called Nov. 10 for an end to the four-power occupation.

The Soviet informant said transfer of control of the supply lines was the meaning behind Khruschchev's speech.

Khrushchev proposed that the United States, Britain and France, with city garrisons totaling 10,000 troops, get out of West Berlin.

He promised Russia would hand over its occupation rights in the old German capital to East Germany.

He did not spell out, however, whether he would rish a new East-West crisis by also transferring to Premier Otto Grotewohl's red regime the supervision of traffic between West Berlin and West Germany, divided by 110 miles of Communist German territory.

The western big three—and Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's Bonn government — do not recognize Grotewohl's regime and have refused to have any formal dealings with it.

But the pressure is on. Refusal of the United States, Britain and France to yield to East German controls might lead to a blockade of their West Berlin garrisons.

If left noc hoice, experts here believe the three nations would yield to controls while making it clear that this does not constitute recognition of the East German government. They would officially regard East Germans manning the checkpoints as simply agents of the Russians.

The Soviet source, however, contended they would have to settle any disputes directly with East Germany.

Under postwar big four accords, allied military traffic became subject only to Russian supervision.

However, West Berlin civilian traffic is already under East German police and customs controls. The 2,200,000 West Berliners therefore would not be affected immediately and directly by a controls dispute between the Western Allies and the East Germans.

A spokesman for the Soviet embassy in East Berlin said the Soviet government is preparing a document to elaborate the Khrushchev plan and that this document will be distributed to all nations which fought against Nazi Germany in World War II.

Both Campus Parties Schedule Caucus

Both campus parties will hold important caucus meetings today in preparation for tonight's meeting of Student Legislature.

The University Party will meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Roland Parker I. A floor leader will be elected at this time and plans will be discussed for the 26th session of Legislature.

The Student Party caucus will be held at 6:45 this afternoon in Roland Parker I. SP will also elect its floor leader, as well as setting up a proposed organization of Legislature.

Both parties have urged both old and new Legislature members to attend the caucus meetings.

Little Singers Of Paris Will Appear Here Sunday

The concert of the Little Singers of Paris to be given in Memorial Hall Sunday at 8 p.m. will be a representative jprogram from their varied repertoire.

The presentation will include religious music secular selections from the Renaissance and folk songs of many nations.

The program will include Il Est Ne Le Divin Enfant, arranged by Noyon, and Allons Pastoureaux by Aubanel. Three religious compositions on an identical liturgical text, Tenebrae Factae Sunt by Gregorian, Vittoria and Francis Poulence, will be presented.

Other selections will be Es ist ein Ros' Entsprungen, Praetorius; O Vos Omnes, Vittoria; and Hymne De Serapion, E. Martin. Nous N'Irons Plus Au Bois, arranged by Bernard Loth; L'Amour de Moy, Harm. C. Boller; and La Nuit by Rameau will also be presented.

The choir will sing Yver, Vous N'Estes Qu'un Villain by Debussy and excerpts of the Cantata of the Two Cities by Darius Milhaud.

Folk songs on the program will include Tutu Maramba, a Brazilian lullaby, and the French folk songs Frere Jacques and Alouette. Another familiar folk song the choir will sing is Jean Pagot's arrangement of Danny Boy.

The Little Singers of Paris, known as the Petit Chanteurs a la Croix de Bois (Little Singers of the Wooden Cross) were organized in 1907. A group of enthusiasts organized the choir with the hopes of reviving the Gregorian chant and Palestrinian music. Today the singers rank as one of the outstanding boys' choirs.

In their many appearances in over 35 countries, including a 1957 tour around the world, the Little Singers have given nearly 10,000 concerts. During the seven concert tours they have made in the United States and Canada, they have covered the continent from one end to the other.

World Tension Theme In Rights Forum

William L. McGovern and Edward P. Morgan will return to the UNC campus Dec. 7-9 to speak again at the annual Human Rights Forum sponsored by the Public Affairs Committee of the Y.

The theme of the forum will be "Human Rights in a World of Tension," according to John Casparis and Carol Josey, heads of the Public Affairs Committee.

McGovern, a Washington attorney, has served as special assistant to the attorney general, Department of Justice, and as chief economic intelligence officer for Chunking.

At present he is a member of the Arnold, Fortas, and Porter law firm, in Washington, D. C., a firm known for its defense in cases involving civil liberties.

Morgan, ABC commentator, is vice president and vice chairman of the Radio-Television Correspondents Association. In 1956 he received the George Foster Peabody Award for the best news broadcasts in 1956. He was also cited in 1956 by the Overseas Press Club for his coverage of the Geneva Summit Conference. He broadcasts Mondays through Fridays over ABC radio at 7:45 p.m.

Both speakers will take part in the main event of the forum, a discussion of "Domestic Issues and their influence on Foreign Policy" Dec. 8.

Morgan and McGovern will also attend informal discussion groups, luncheon and dinner meetings and class meetings. These meetings will include discussions on the ideal of human rights.

Win Hangs On Bonfire

The Tar Heels can win Saturday's football game! This is possible IF someone from UNC manages to light the traditional victory bonfire at Duke before Friday night.

However, the bonfire will be heavily guarded by Duke freshmen from 4:15 this afternoon until tomorrow.

If the fire is lit before tomorrow night, not only will Carolina win Saturday's game, but the Duke class of '62 will be forever cursed, according to tradition.

Instructions for the annual "Frosh Nightwatch" have been distributed on handbills, made up by Ty Heineken of the Duke Pep Board and Joel Arrington of the freshman dormitory government, "BOS."

These are the instructions Duke freshman got:

1) Each house (in mass) must be at the fire from the beginning of your time for watch.

2) No exceptions will be made except for class conflicts.

3) It is up to each one of you to eliminate al gold-brickers (roommates included).

4) Each of you is directly responsible to three people who will be with you: your housemaster and the two men from BOS and Pep Board.

5) Guarding procedure will be given when you arrive at the fire.

6) Any defensive action against UNC intruders will be signaled and lead by the BOS and Pep men in charge.

We Goofed!

In reporting the results of Tuesday's elections, The Daily Tar Heel incorrectly named Stewart Priddy as the new vice president of the freshman class. The winner of that office is Ed Manning, who ran on the Student Party ticket.

IN CONJUNCTION WITH DUKE-CAROLINA GAME

Old West Alumni To Hold Annual Reunion

By NEIL MURPHY

The fourth annual reunion of Old West alumni will be held in conjunction with the Duke game, reunion chairman Raymond Taylor announced yesterday.

Alumni will meet at the "Old West bench" at 1 p.m. Saturday and then go to the game.

In a letter sent to former residents, Taylor said, "Alumni will proceed together to see the football team of the University of North Carolina render sound defeat to the athletic club of a recently organized small parochial school just outside Durham."

At 6:15 p.m. Saturday the group will meet in the Saddle Club in Durham for supper.

Taylor pointed out that students stayed four years in Old West because of a "spirit" that held them together. "This is unusual," he said, "because about 50 per cent of the residents were fraternity men." The first reunion in 1955 was informal. "The fellows kept returning just as if it were a fraternity house."

Many stories have been told of the Old West bench, the bench where the alumni will meet: stories of its theft by residents of Old East and recapture, battles with buildings and grounds crews when they wanted to take it in each winter.

"We used to meet at that bench before every game," Taylor said.

"We got tired of people taking our bench, so we bought a chain and chained it down once. No one took it for about three years then. Old West's bench is still there."

"Old West proves," Taylor said, "that it is possible for a dorm to have the spirit of closeness, friendship and brotherhood that some say can't exist in a dormitory."

UP Wins Class Positions; Parties Split Legislature

UP Dominates Class Officers

The University Party, whose policy advocates the retention of class officers, captured 13 of the 15 class positions in elections Tuesday.

There remains a possibility that Davis Young (SP) will contest the election of Charlie Graham (UP) as sophomore class president. Graham won over Young by a margin of two votes.

Other sophomore officers include Joe Warner (UP), vice president; Sharon Sullivan (UP), secretary; Dave Alexander (SP), treasurer, and Carol Tieslau (UP), social chairman.

Leading the junior class during the coming year as president will be Wade Smith (UP). Assisting him will be Jack Spain (UP), vice president; Martha Morgan (SP), secretary; Graham Claytor (UP), treasurer, and Mary Margaret Brown (UP), social chairman.

The new freshman class officers are all UP candidates, except one. They are Jey Diefeil, president; Eddie Manning (SP), vice president; Maxine Greenfield, secretary; Tom Alexander, treasurer, and Peggy Costner, social chairman.

Erwin Fuller and Tony Salinger, who ran unopposed, were elected to the Student Council. Joe Warner won the third seat.

Libby Johnson and Rosemary Roberts were elected to Women's Honor Council by clear majorities. Sandy Trotman and Bunkie Vester were tied at 195 votes apiece and there will be a run-off election next Tuesday.

Di Favors Nuclear Tests

By ELLEN STEIN

A bill favoring the continuation of nuclear weapons tests was passed last night by the Dialectic Senate. The effects of nuclear tests upon U. S. security, scientific advancement and world opinion encouraged a heated debate.

The affirmative argued that no security would be maintained in view of Eisenhower's "open sky" policy unless tests were continued. They also pointed ouut that the goal of the United States was to reach the planning stage of the nuclear test band.

Senator Rick Wolfer said that a secondary benefit of the testing has been technological advancement especially in the field of economics. He said the possession of atomic weapons raises this country in the eyes of outside nations, reminding them of equal strength as the Russians.

He also commented on the practical side. If tests were halted, he said, then scientific crews would put aside their work, especially developed facilities would be useless and thousands of dollars would be wasted.

Senator Christie Farnham said that the testing programs cannot be halted because of the imminent Russian threat to the security of this country. She said that Russia was purely propagandist in her various offers to stop nuclear test and that she never kept her end of the bargain.

Greer Against Passage

Senator Gary Greer said, "Nuclear tests are detrimental to the genetics and to the health of the world."

He said that it is not the Soviet Union but the United States that is a war monger in the eyes of the world at this time. "At the last Rusian-American conference in Geneva the United States refused Rusia's proposal to halt all tests. They were willing to delay testing for one year after completing the persent testing program," he said.

Senator Greer said that the United States' present variety of nuclear weapons is adequate to wage war anywhere, even in outer space. To illustrate the power of present weapons he said that the U. S. Navy has one nuclear device that can lift its entire fleet, 901 ships, out of the water; the Navy has 10 guided missiles, the Army has four to five nuclear devices.

Legislature Meets For Officer Election

Election of officers and committee chairmen will be the main order of business at the first meeting of hte 26th sessino of Student Legislature tonight.

The meeting will be at 7:30 in Phi Hall, 4th floor, NeNw East.

Since each party holds 23 seats and there are four independents, the winning legislation will depend upon the independent vote, unless the parties split on issues.

Ralph Cummings, student body vice president, will swear in the new legislators and officers.

There is no carry-over business and, as far as Cummings knows, there will be no new business introduced.

Blake On Dorm Strangers

Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake advised caution in allowing strangers in the dorms.

Larcenies have been reported in the past as a result of strangers, mostly young boys. Many have appeared this year wandering through the halls.

Chief Blake said, "Some of these boys are honest shoeshine boys, but not all of them are honest, I'm afraid."

Last night patrolmen saw a young boy counting money behind Manly Dorm. The patrolmen said he was wearing a coat which appeared too large for him and had a bundle under his arm. When one of the officers got out to investigate, the boy ran into the Arboretum. A search failed to produce him.

Captain Coy Durham said yesterday the Bell Tower parking lot had given the police some trouble. "Some of the people fail to lock their cars" and several larcenies have bene reported, he said. Some of the trouble "like hub cap stealing" is done by rings. "They take a little time to break but we usually get them," he added.

Rivalry Noted By Furtado

Saturday afternoon the football teams of Carolina and Duke Universities met on Kenan field.

In view of this athletic rivalry, Student Body President Don Furtado reminded all the students that "we should attempt to confine the action to the football field and to the two teams involved."

He stressed that the rivalry between the two universities was a long and healthy one and that it should remain that way.

In order to keep this friendly rivalry, Furtado urged that "each student must remember his obligations to conduct himself as a gentleman or a lady at all times, whether it is on the campus or in the football stadium."

UP, SP Cop 23 As Indepen's Take 4 Seats

The Student Party and the University Party each copped 23 seats in the Student Legislature elections Tuesday night.

Four independent candidates fill the remaining seats.

Organization of the new Legislature will be held tonight at 7:30 in Phi Hall, New East. They will elect officers and committee chairmen at this time.

Representing Dorm Men's I district are Tom Cordle and Joe Mazzei, both SP.

Jim Scott (Ind.) and Jim Crownover (SP) gained the two year seats form Dorm Men's II.

In Dorm Men's III, SP won three seats, giving them a delegation of four from that district. Winners include Ray Bagwell, Mike Shulman and Dan Brown. UP victor for the district is Joe Oppenheimer.

Bob Sevier is the new UP representative for Dorm Men's IV.

Incumbent Bill Porter (SP) retained his Legislature seat from Dorm Men's V.

SP again dominated in Dorm Men's VI as incumbent Dave Jones, Bob Nobles, Henry McPherson and Bob Thompson came out on top.

In Town Men's I district, Bob Grubb and Bob Turner, both UP, won the two one-year seats.

Incumbent Charlie Gray ran unopposed for the one-year seat in Town Men's II.

Independents Ed Levy (endorsed by UP and SP) and David Evans both captured the one year seats in Town Men's III.

In Town Men's IV, SP candidates won the four one-year seats. They are Paul Belanga, Troy Blanton, Gary Greer and Bill Miller. For that district's six-month seats, UP captured four. UP winners are Ira Hardy, DeWitt McCotter, Bob Price and Dick Quick. SP candidate Bob Pierce won the other one.

Six women were elected to Student Legislature.

Representing Town Women's District is Ann Harvey (UP)..

Belinda Foy (UP) and Jane Walters (SP) captured the two one-year seats from Dorm Women's I. Ann Hassinger (UP) won the six-month seat.

University Club Plans Year's Biggest Rally

The University Club has boasted that Friday night's pep rally will be the biggest this year. The unique "Pied Pipper" style employed for this last pep rally has been calculated to draw as many people as possible.

Sororities and women's dorms have been asked to fall into the parade as a group.

Les Sutorius nad his combo will begin at Fraternity row while the University pep band begins at the lower quad at 6:30 Friday night. Both bands will led the students to the intramural field.

At the intramural field head cheerleader Carter Jones has worked up a colorful show. The football team and coach Jim Tatum will be present. Chemicals will be used to cause the bonfire to burn with a different hue.

The climax of the rally will be a march into town. The University Club has asked the student body to fall in with the band for the march. The pep rally is expected to converge in the center of Chapel Hill at 7:30 p.m.

"BEAT DOOK!" yells Head Cheerleader Carter Jones, who will lead the football season's final pep rally at 6:30 p.m. Friday.

Large Crowd Attends Master Point Tourney

Sixty-six students and 21 visitors flooded the Rendezvous room in heated competition in the monthly Master Point tourney held last Monday night at Graham Memorial.

Four students, three Life Masters and one Durham visitor walked off with the eight Master Points won.

The following is a list of student winners for the new record crowd of 88:

Section A: North South: Jim Tedder and Frank Carlisle, third place; and Dana Dixon and Bill Caison, fourth place. East West: Frank Jones and Robley Light, first place (Master Point winners); Roy Smith and Arnie Greneberg, second place; Mrs. J. B. Pfeiffer of Durham and Gene Whitehead, third place; and Mrs. Mildred Alexander and Mike Alexander, fourth place.

Section B: North South: Malcolm Clark and Dan Duke, third place. East West: Tom Jordan and Walt Rand, first place (Master point winners); Anita Withers and Teddy Distefano, third place; and John and Nancy Hummel, fourth place.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Charlotte Katherine Williams, William Der Tarn, Wallace Anthony Graham, Richard Anthony Barth, Carl Sherrill Wood, Herman Pickel, Julian Willis Bradley, Michael John Swain and Alan D. Resch, Harry Warren Wells.

Election Boards

It seems that someday the Elections Board will functipn correctly. No one can say the Election Board does not have a difficult job to handle, but many elections have passed and one would think the Elections Board could have learned from past experience.

They should have learned that care enough has to be taken in getting the ballots printed a head of time so that different color paper could be had to distinguish one contest from another. Three ballots exactly the same color, same size, for the same type of election can lead to no end of confusion, and in one case did.

They should have known that the election law provides for the opportunity for people in the Infirmary to vote, and yet these students were not given ballots nor was any other opportunity to vote afforded them. It could have meant the difference in at least one election.

The Election Board in picking up ballot boxes picked up at least one before six o'clock closing thus denying certain people their legal right to vote.

Finally, the Elections Board printed insufficient ballots in some contests in particular districts. There is no excuse for this. Ballots should be printed in sufficient quantity for all students in the University to vote if they want to. Waste of paper is less important than individual votes.

Next time the Election Board stages an election on the campus, it would be wise to make a check list of things to do, so that the things not done and the things not to do will not be so flagrant.

Independents

The fact that there are now four independents in the legislature, and that these hold the balance power is indicative of but one thing — that the two campus political parties are not performing their functions.

These functions are to provide mature leadership, to establish programs for action, to nominate candidates who will pursue the programs of action without compromising for the sake of personal ambition, and to try to embrace a set of principles which have validity in the present society or in any society.

These functions at least one of the parties at one time assumed, but it is not the case now, and the campus knows it.

Student Government does not have to be government of 200, by 200, for 200. It can be important. It takes work.

The Daily Tar Heel

Janus

She means a lot to us, this old University; we won't, can't admit it, but we love her. We're proud of brick walks, colonial architecture, brilliant teachers, great teams, and rightly so; but these things aren't so much in the long run. We love the old girl not because we're proud of her, but because she's made us proud of ourselves, made us better men and women than we were when we came here, and, candidly, just a bit better men and women than any other comparable group anywhere.

Those of us who have spent four years here can tell you exactly why we love the place—tell you in one word — it may be a different word for each different speaker; most will call it "atmosphere," but all will mean independence. Independence of our minds from well-meaning, but grossly crude and blundering guiding hands. The lack of these hands hurts a little sometimes; we make bad decisions and we suffer because of them;; but (and I know this is trite) we learn to think for ourselves, we build our own individual set of moral, spiritual and philosophical values. And because this set is our own and was not forced on us, it is upright and good and its rules are not violated.

The group of all these individual, independent sets of values composes our atmosphere, the Carolina way of life. And this way of life is the rich medium in which the minds that will be the leaders of a few years hence must grow.

Now every so often some well-meaning but short-sighted person proposes a sugar-coated threat to this way of life, and just as often the student body shrugs its shoulders and refuses to swallow, and the threat fades away. The Administration (whatever that is) usually manages to display a maturity below its years by vigorously supporting such proposals for a time, later realizing the utter futility of same. Take for instance the men's dormitory counselors who were forced on the residents of Cobb dorm a year or so ago as an "experiment." Even the freshmen (nothing derogatory intended; I was one myself once) shunned this counsel, preferring to suffer their own mistakes and triumph in their own successes.

The latest of these attempts comes in the form of a Standards Committee for coeds — some sort of double talk about defining the word lady. (Now it seems to me that most high-grade morons know what a lady is, and what a lady does and doesn't, but this is beside the point.) I always thought, for some reason, that we had coeds at Carolina because Carolina had something to offer that other schools didn't, and that part of that something was this freedom and independence that I've blown so much hot air over. It seems to me that without this freedom, the coed could have stayed at her finishing school, just as the freshman could have gone to a prep-school, and both would have been better off. Besides all this, it occurs to me that the coed should be just a little insulted at the insinuation that she needs someone to tell her how to act in public.

Our coed's got a lot on the ball or she wouldn't be our coed—it's not the easiest thing for a girl to get into Carolina, you know. Personally, I couldn't justify a Standards Committee, even if the coed's behavior needed attention, and since I can't see that her department is wanting much if anything, the whole idea seems ridiculous. If, as usual, I'm all wrong, just convince me of it. I'm listening.

On The Military Establishment

William Geer

It was exactly 40 years ago today that the United States and her Allies signed the Armistice Agreement with Germany which ended the military phases of what was called The Great War or The World War. The world had never seen a conflict of such magnitude and the joyous outbursts which greeted its termination would tax the imaginations of those who did not experience them. America had entered that war with high idealism and during the contest had built up the illusion that it was a war "to end all wars" and that it would bring to the world peace and a better life. The Congress declared November 11th a national holiday to be known as Armistice Day, a day of peace.

The high hopes of Americans on 11 November 1918 were soon dispelled. In the nineteen-twenties and thirties, as disarmament conferences failed, the League of Nations weakened (party through our non-support), and new organization of tyranny in Russia, Italy, Japan, and Germany embarked on aggressive adventures, it became increasingly apparent that Armistice Day marked only a temporary cessation of hostilities and that World War II was to enmesh the nations. The United States faced that conflict with greater realism and in the post-World War II world has shouldered major responsibilities for the reconstruction of devastated areas, has vigorously supported the United Nations' efforts to create a world of order and sanity, and has maintained a vigorous military establishment for the purpose of defending itself if necessary and for aiding the United Nations if called upon.

Despite this bleak history we still celebrate November 11th, but recognizing the changed outlook in the mid-twentieth century, the Congress in 1954 renamed the day "Veterans Day," a national holiday to memorialize the contributions of all American veterans of all wars. The past is worthy of commemoration. The debt which the Nation owes its veterans is great and deserves recognition. Old soldiers never die, as the ballad says.

But a sense of realism indicates that the past is dead and merely serves as a prologue for the present and future. Old soldiers must fade away and the safety of the nation must be entrusted to the new generation of Armed Forces. In my view, the obligation which you owe to the veeran is small by comparison with the debt which we veterans are beginning to owe to you, the new defenders of our freedoms.

I suggest that your highest loyalty today, the loyalty which the veterans of past wars and which the Nation expects is that you of this generation face the contemporary military needs and problems of the present with courage, and honesty and imagination. Within the framework of a discipline which does not and must not dull youur imaginations you must raise the necessary questions and you must find the most desirable solutions which will aid this nation and the world to live in peace and constructive fulfillment. The question of Veterans Day is this: Can you contribute to these goals?

In many ways the present position of the Armed Forces of the United States is more salutary than it has ever been in our national history. The Military Establishment holds the confidence of the nation as never before. Almost half of the national budget is entrusted to the national defense, usually more money than can be actually spent in a given fiscal year. We are fortunate that in our country the military forces are relatively detached from partisan (political) contention and that the military forces have no inclination to intervene in political affairs. Both of our political parties support military appropriations generously. Cooperation betwees industry and military research teams is developing new and promising techniques of defense. The ROTC which has served the nation well since its establishment in 1917 is supported within the military establishment better than ever in its history. The Reserve forces of all branches are more effectively trained than ever.

On the other hand, the problems of maintaining a large military force and directing its posture for peace are many and complex. It is characteristic of armies historically to prepare for the last war, and this, it goes without saying is a fatal approach to defense. After World War I France built on the German border the magnificient defensive works called the Maginot Line. In an earlier day, this Line would have served splendidly to protect that nation, but in 1940 the Germans went over and around it and took the whole thing from the rear. In America today, if our nation is to be capably defended, we must train our troops and devise our defenses immaginatively. As a veteran of a past war, I find it hard to project beyond my limited experience and to think in futuristic military terms. I feel old-fashioned. But I raise the question for you of the present services to answer: How old-fashioned are you? How obsolete are your training and equipment for today's military needs? Is it not true that in the fast moving world of today's space vehicles, a plane which merely moves with the speed of sound is too slow to have much military value? Do ground forces, even though spread out at pentomic distances, have significant fighting utility in an age of rockets carrying radioactive warheads? I would not wish to contribute one sour note to the fine harmony which is symbolized by the joining of our respective armed forces of the Navy and Air Forces on this campus today, but it is important to ask ourselves whether we have effectively unified out Army, Navy, Air Forces and Marine Corps in a fighting force of the kind the nation needs in a space age. Is an 18th century concept of division of forces, modified slightly in recent years, a valid basis for the military needs of the present? And in the area of international relations, surely we need to ask what contributions the military forces of our country can make to world order and the prevention of War. A military man above all others has a stake in peace, for he must face the horrors of war first and most fully. Our national policy in this century, as our presidents have repeatedly stated, is never to resort to war unless compelled to do so by aggression or by threats to our vital interests. The President a few months ago called upon the United Nations to establish a "world peace force," a request which the U. N. Geseral Assembly quietly ignored. This remains a major obstacle to peace, for order in this divided world cannot be maintained without an effective world-police-force.

These are some of the problems which you must solve. The veterans of other wars, who tried to solve some of them, look to you with hope. We are complacent only to this degree: we have confidence in your loyalty and your sense of dedication.

"Ah Yes—We'll Take It Up At The Very Highest Level"

Truth In American Propaganda

Russell Eisenman

Does America always advocate free elections? Was the interest of civilians always given preference over military strategy in the Korean war by the United Nations forces? The answer to both these questions is no. However, American propaganda had made them little publicized incidents.

Propaganda needn't be dishonest accounts; it is the distortion of facts by giving one side of a story greater prominence. It is almost a cliche to say that America is for free elections, and that the Communists are not. Usually we are for free elections, and the Communist record has been one of often opposing them. This is probably because we usually think we will win at the polls, and the Communists are afraid they will be defeated. In one far eastern country when America discovered the people would vote Communistic, we opposed free elections. We said the people weren't ready to decide for themselves. The Communists, of course, advocated giving the people a choice, since they knew they would probably win. So, its more a matter of whether our interest will be fulfilled rather than the supporting of an ideal.

It's commonplace to read or hear how wonderful the allies are toward civilians in time of war, and how cruel the enemy treats them. Apparently the American magazines and newspapers were so anxious to paint a picture of the United Nation forces in Korea as shining knights, and the Communist forces as evil dragons, that a very interesting incident failed to receive much publicity. The incident, reported in Norman Cousins' book WHO SPEAKS FOR MAN?, was a good story, and if it had not been unfavorable to the allied forces it most likely would have been a major news story.

The South Korean Military Police were faced with a problem. As Cousins relates the story, many homeless South Koreans were blocking the roads, making it difficult for allied forces to advance. To solve the problem the civilians were driven, by South Korean M. P.'s, toward the Communists. At first it was hard to make the people walk toward possible death. But a few knocks with rifle butts sent them on their way northward, toward the Communist forces.

Each one of these stories should be known by all Americans. They are interesting and significant. However, information about the two incidents is rare. For a democracy, this is very bad.

How To Write

Sidney Dakar

I should like to give some advice to the many aspiring young writers we have on this campus. All of you are trying to give us a masterpiece. You try to duplicate the efforts of Stendhal, Flaubert, Austen and Fielding. Most of you are wasting your time if you expect to make a living when most people have never even heard of most of the greatest masters of all time, much less read them.? No, my friend, a change of tactics is necessary if you are to eat in the future.

The mass market of today goes for the simple, straight forward story. You need not have anything brilliant to say; this would only confuse your reader. Why try to give your ungrateful reader a new insight into the fears, hopes, sorrows and passions of his fellow man? Your words will only gather dust of the library shelves.

Your reader in the mass market doesn't want to be stimulated by being lead over new paths. He reads to lose himself, not to find himself. Don't let your characters do or say much out of the ordinary; you will confuse your reader. The plot, a simple one, of course, must develope very slowly and along lines that are well-known to the reader. If you feel that you simply must have your character stray off the well-worn path, be sure to drop plenty of hints (at least ten). Your reader will feel proud of himself in being able to discern the expected deviation.

The murders and westerns are usually the leaders in the easy cash markets. But, you say that you can't make any money by writing 25c novels. Don't forget that you are going to be geared for mass production. You are not going to be interested in quality, but in quantity. All your reader will ask is that you put a little different twist in the way the hero escapes in the last chapter. Your reader will be happy in that he has spent several hours without being given any new ideas which would trouble him and you will have the money rolling in.

Now I am sure some of you aspire to write love stories rather than mysteries. You can still use mass production techniques. Remember, all that is needed is that little different twist in the last All you need is a copy of Marion R. Cox's Cinderella; Three Hundred chapter. You really don't need to be original in thinking up the twists. All you need is a copy of Marion R. Cox's Cinderella; Three Hundred Forty-five Variants by your typewriter. While the foolish writer is trying to give us something new, you will be in Cannes enjoying your royalties rfom your faithful public.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

The University String Quartet—Edgar Alden and Jean Heard, violins; Dorothy Alden, viola; and Mary Gray Clarke, cello—presented its first concert on campus in the Tuesday Evening Series last Tuesday evening in Hill Music Hall. It was a pleasant affair which raised only one serious question: Why don't we have more string quartet concerts on campus? Here we have a highly competent group of musicians who should be heard at least once a month. They play highly respectable programs and, judging from the very large audience which attended this concert, undoubtedly they would be more than welcome to perform for us more frequently. The Quartet performed the Beethoven quartet in A minor, Opus 132 and the Quartet Opus 10 of Debussy.

The opened the program with a skillful and delicate performance of the quartet in A major Opus 32, No. 4 of Boccherini. What was revealed from the very opening notes, and sustained throughout the program, was a well-integrated string quartet in which each artist balanced the other both in tone and temperament. They play well together and the performance was indicative of a common aim and conception of musicianship.

The performance of the late Beethoven work is an almost Herculean task. Of considerable length, the composition poses a problem of sheer endurance to the performer. Numerous changes of tempo within the movements ask tremendous concentration of ensemble playing. There is the very difficult task to present, as is necessary in these late works of the composer, a relationship between the different movements, in terms of tempo, mood, expression, contrast, and musical drama. This calls for a total conception of the work in which all of these can be brought out. Within the separate movement the care for detail is almost impossible to fulfill, nevertheless the score is literally filled with tempo, dynamic, and expression indications. There is a danger to put too much emphasis on the details as well as a danger to put too much emphasis on the overall patterns, for inevitably one emphasis will cause havoc with the opposite lack.

In the University Quartet's performance there was much to admire. Tone was smooth in general, attacks were neat, and the different lines emerged clearly through the think contrapuntal texture. This reviewer was only disturbed by the lack of sheer force that made the performance on the whole too smooth and neat. There is a certain roughness to Beethoven which is part of his particular kind of expression. Without it the music may be very beautiful and clear, but the power of Beethoven is lost. Hence, this performance for all its clarity and precision, admirable in such an extremely difficult work, did not accomplish as much as it could have with more forceful playing. This lack of force could be found in the attacks which did not have punch enough. The sforzandos, in general were toned down. The violent contrasts between loud and soft, I believe intentional for definite reasons of expression, again were softened. All these took away from the music a dimension that belongs here. Nevertheless, the performance was highly successful in conveying the more mellow character of the later years of Beethoven. The growl, however, was missing.

In the Debussy Quartet, strangely enough, we found exactly that force that was missing in the performance of the Beethoven. Especially the first and second movement were presented with some of the most intense playing of the evening. And the slow middle movement and the nervous concluding "Tres modere" brought to a close a carefully prepared presentation of, again, a difficult musical composition.

The artists are to be congratulated on their work in bringing to us this first concert. Let us hope that there will be many more in the very near future.

A Letter

Editor:

Cort Edwards should be praised highly for coming out and saying the things he did in his article in Thursday's Tar Heel. It is high time that something be said about loneliness, for it is a bigger problem than it should be in society today, and something should be done about it. Unfortunately I don't have the secret formula to solve the mystery.

I am unhappily among the lonely on this campus, and am happy to know that there is someone else who feels this way too. I have been struggling to fight this ever since I first came here in September.

I feel as if I am one pebble in a big sweeping river, which flows along leaving me stuck in a notch floundering and unable to escape.

I walk the pavement to classes day after day and the people walk right by seeing nothing, hearing nothing. I have been to sorority houses to be met by smiling faces and meaningless conversation. I have been to football games and watched the spectators become drunker and drunker. I have tried to join organizations, only to be brushed aside. I have tried to tell myself that I don't care, and tried to bury myself in studies, which I have found interesting, but scarecly can take the place of true friends. I didn't come here to learn how to escape from life. I didn't come here to "grab me a man." I didn't come here to change my personality. I came here, so I blindly thought, to learn about myself, and others. I came here to meet people on an equal basis, to talk about things that mean something. I came to learn from books and from people and to enjoy life. I want to be myself, but it doesn't seem very possible here. I want to meet people as they really are. Why are people afraid to be themselves? Why must they always run and hide? These are questions that everyone would do well to ask themselves; these are problems that all of America must face.

I'm sorry I ever came to Carolina, and I certainly won't carry pleasant memories of the "friendly south" back home. Perhaps coming here has been a good eyeopener for me. I now look at friendship in a new light and treasure more than ever those who I can call my friends.

Reserves Get New Programs

Two new programs are now available in th Officer Candidate School of the Coast Guard Reserve.

The programs are: the three-year active duty program and the six-month active duty for the training program.

The three-year active duty program entails a six-year obligation. Graduates of this program are assigned to duty in the same manner as regular Coast Guard officers.

The second program entails an eight-year obligation. Upon completion of the six months training graduates of this program affiliate with organized training units of the Coast Guard Reserve or perform such training activity as authorized by the commandant. Classes are convened every four months. The next class will matriculate March 1, 1959.

In the event that a candidate does not successfully complete the course of instruction, or is not recommended for a commission under this program he must serve on active duty for a period of two years in an enlisted status.

He will also be required to remain a member of the Coast Guard Reserve for a period of six years from the date of his enlistment and, while a member of the Ready Reserve, to perform the minimum training requirements that are perscribed. This does not apply to candidates who previously have served on active duty prior to assignment to the Officer Candidate School.

Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of DTH articles on Carolina's graduating football players.

By STEWART PHINZIY

Carolina is kicking off. No. 70 calmly places the ball on the tee, turns and walks back a few yards, holds up his right arm, leans forward, and then starts toward the ball. The impact of his toe striking against the ball sends it soaring high into the air toward the end zone. An opposing back drifts back, grabs the ball and begins to race up field only to find himself knocked off his feet from a bruising tackle by the same No. 70.

Thus Phil Blazer rather quickly establishes the fact that he is a pretty tough customer when it comes to playing this game of football. And it doesn't take Carolina's opponents long to wish that they had put a detour sign around the territory occupied by big No. 70.

The six-foot, one inch, 224-pound Blazer is a senior from Whitaker, Pa. The hustling Blazer's ability to take charge makes him an ideal captain of the Carolina team.

All-ACC In '57

On the basis of his fierce line play Blazer in 1957 won All-State and All-ACC honors and in this fall's pre-season polls the name Phillip Blazer appeared consistently on the All-American check list. Phil has lived up to all the pre-season publicity he received, for he has been a tower of strength in the Carolina forward wall, all season long, a line that has yielded less than 136 yards per game rushing.

Jim Tatum, who had several All-American tackles while he was at Maryland, says this about Blazer:

"He's as good as any of those great tackles I had at Maryland including Ray Krouse, Stan Jones, and Dick Modzelewski. All our boys have great confidence in him. His dressing room talks to the players have been inspirational and a big factor in their fine morale and discipline.

"I think the first requirement of an All-American is that he have leadership ability, and Blazer has had plenty of that to help us bounce back after we lost our first two games.

Hard Worker

"Phil works hard in practice; he never seems to let up. He's as fine an offensive player as he is defensive. He's a great downfield blocker and has terrific speed for a big man. He is also a mighty handy man to have around to handle your kickoffs and PAT chores." (Blazer last year kicked 13 out of 15 PAT and this year he has a perfect record of 4 for 4.)

Phil was asked what he attributes Carolina's success to. He replied, "Well, for one thing we have a nucleus on this year's team of nine seniors who have played together now for some time, but the real success boils down to one thing . . . a terrific team effort all the way."

Drafted By Detroit

Blazer, who is an excellent student, is majoring in industrial relations. He is active in the Monogram Club and various campus activities. Phil has already been drafted by the pros. The Detroit Lions grabbed the rights to his name last year.

It was a wise choice.

Bowl Prospects

By Associated Press

Coach Jim Tatum has forbidden any mention of bowls as he prepares his University of North Carolina football team for its final game against arch rival Duke here Saturday.

But his Tar Heels definitely figure in bowl talk and could strengthen their case for a possible Sugar Bowl spot against Louisiana State with an impressive showing against Duke.

A North Carolina victory would give the Tar Heels their best record since the 1949 team won 7 of 10 and then lost to Rice in the Cotton Bowl game.

Should Duke lose, its 4-6 record would be the school's poorest since 1929.

Stop Gambling-IDC Votes 27-9

The Inter - Dormitory Council Wednesday night went on record as "opposed to gambling of any sort in men's dormitoritories."

After a lengthy debate on both sides of the issue, the IDC approved a resolution on dormitory gambling, saying, in part, that the group will "use full power to control and eliminate all gambling in the men's dormitories."

The resolution passed by a vote of 27 to 9 after a 30-minute debate.

Some were opposed on the grounds that, as one member put it, "Passing the resolution is like saying the IDC is in favor of doing what it is supposed to do."

Those who favored the resolution countered by saying that the policies of the IDC should be clearly and forcefully stated. They said the reason for this is that the students need to be informed that the rules are going to be enforced more strictly, since the gambling situation has become so serious.

The resolution further stated that since gambling is "getting out of control, trouble could arise and such trouble would not be an asset to the reputation of the University of North Carolina."

Rudy Edwards, IDC president, said, "We want people on campus to know we are concerned and are going to take appropriate and efficient action against any violations which may occur."

The IDC Executive Council has expressed a desire for all gambling cases to go to the Student Council. The reason for this is the need for "uniform justice." The IDC court can try dorm cases. But since the Inter-Fraternity Council cannot try gamblers, cases of gambling in fraternities must be tried by the Student Council.

Edwards emphasized the fact that, even though "big money" games are the major problem, small games will be tried if they are turned in. He also pointed out that this is not retroactive.

The IDC bylaws were passed, along with three amendments, by a unanimous vote.

The coed visiting agreement will not be in effect this weekend, because some social room doors in the upper and lower quads have not been put up. However, eight dorms will have their social rooms open Saturday. These dorms are Avery, Teague, Parker, Cobb, Winston, Mangum, Joyner and Connor. They will be open from 12-1:45 p.m. and after the game to 7:30. The visiting agreement should be in effect by the weekend after Thanksgiving.

The matter of vending machines for the new dorms was discussed and additional vending machines will be provided for each of them. A temporary "Scuttlebutt" is going to be set up in the basement of Avery dorm around Christmas.

Gambling Rule Jurisdiction To Be Uniform

In an effort to provide uniform justice for violations of the gambling rule, the Student Council will try all such cases in the future.

According to a joint statement issued yesterday by the Student Council, Inter-Fraternity Council and Inter-Dormitory Council, the Student Council will try all gambling cases, including those previousy tried by the IDC Court.

The statement reaffirmed that 'gambling of any sort is contrary to University policy established by the Board of Trustees, State law, the Campus Code, IFC policy and IDC regulations. In the future the IFC and IDC will take responsibility for its effective enforcement."

The three councils reported that such a statement was necessary because of an increase in gambling in recent months.

Uniform justice for offenders is expected when all trials come under the jurisdiction of the Student Council. Beforehand, the IDC has tried only cases which arise in dormitories. The IFC, which cannot try fraternity men, either reprimands violators or sends the case directly to the Student Council.

The statement was released yesterday by IFC Chairman Tucker Yates, IDC Chairman Rudy Edwards and Student Council Chairman Jim Long.

Davis Young Asks Study Of Election

By DEE DANIELS

Davis Young, defeated by Charlie Graham for president of the sophomore class by two votes, will ask the Student Council to evaluate the election, Young said yesterday.

According to Jim Long, Student Council chairman, the Council will meet Tuesday night to consider the case. If it decides Young's protest is valid, the Council will ask the Elections Board for a re-vote.

In a statement issued yesterday, Young said:

Paint-Brush Vandalism Hits Duke

The Monogram Club got a paint job last night. Sometimes around 122 midnight or 1 a.m. the word "Duke" was plastered in huge red letters across the front of the building. No one saw or heard the culprits at their work.

"Duke" is still shining on the Monogram Club, and an employee at the Monogram Club said the defaced part of the building will probably have to be repainted.

'Pied Piper' Pep Rally Starts Tonight At 6:30

By AL RESCH

Forget the studies for a little while and come a runnin' as the "Pied Piper" pep rally gets under way at 6:30 tonight.

The University Club has boasted that the cheering group will be the biggest this year.

The victory march will begin at Fraternity row with Les Sutorius and his combo piping the students out of the houses, and meantime the University pep band will be marching around the lower quad.

Both bands will lead the students to the intramural field where head cheerleader Carter Jones has worked up a colorful show. Coach Tatum and his football team will be present as the bonfire is lit by a special chemical lighter.

The rally will climax with a mass march into town. The group is expected to converge on Franklin Street at 7:30 p.m.

The University Club, Ray Jefferies and the Chapel Hill chief of police have expressed faith in the student body to conduct themselves as ladies and gentlemen when the pep rally gets to town.

A request has been made that all students refrain from property damage and other ungentleman-like conduct.

Free Dance Sponsored By GMAB

Couples can step, drag, swing or just plain shuffle Friday night in a free dance in the Graham Memorial Rendezvous Room.

The sound will be provided by Les Sutorius and his combo in the 8-12 p.m. affair. Couples only will be admitted.

This is the third dance in a series sponsored by the Inter-Dormitory Council and GMAB Dance Committee. Two previous dances have been successful, according to Dance Committee Chairman Gay Cowan.

Cowan urged students to continue attending as they have in the past. He said campus dancing was at an all time low and he hoped interest would be renewed through the Friday night dances.

SSL Group Elects Levy Chairman

Ed Levy was elected delegation chairman of the UNC State Student Legislature delegation in a meeting held Wednesday night.

The UNC bill, an omnibus statement in favor of individual rights, which have been violated in the past, was presented and approved by the group.

Other delegation officers elected were Sam Poole, delegation vice-chairman; Betty Baxter, delegation secretary; Betty Zeh, delegation social chairman; Frank Elkins, delegation sergeant-at-arms; and John Frye, delegation treasurer.

Roger Foushee and Erwin Fuller were chosen as senate representatives by the delegation, and Gary Greer was chosen as a senate alternate. Foushee was chosen senate floorleader.

The rest of the delegates will occupy the House, and Curtis Gans was chosen to be house floorleader.

The bill that the University will present as its primary offering includes a statement of renewed faith in the Sate Student Legislature's right to speak on all matters, in the light of criticism it received last year.

A blanket statement in opposition to all laws which enforced discrimination by race, creed, or national origin is also a part of the bill.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Joanne Hill Scroggs, Julie Ann Wendler, John Granville Alley, Eloise Poe Walker, Herman Edward Tickle and Julian Willis Bradley.

PROF. WILD AT DUKE

Prof. John Wild of the Dept. of Philosophy, Harvard University, will be sponsored in a series of lectures at Duke University by the Lilly Endowment Research Program, Nov. 18, 19 and 21.

Governing Body Votes Suspension Of Election Law

By DEE DANIELS

Student Legislators voted last night to supend the election law in order to delay the run-off election until after the Thanksgiving holidays at the first meeting of the 26th session of the Student Legislature.

Jim Crownover (SP) introduced the bill suspending the election law in behalf of Bob Furtado, Elections Board Chairman, who felt that one week is not sufficient time to prepare for a run-off. The bill was passed unanimously.

Both parties organized the Legislature on an equal basis with two independents assuming important posts.

Ralph Cummings, speaker of the Legislature, appointed Ed Levy (ind.) to serve as parliamentarian, while Gary Greer (SP) copped president pro tem from David Grigg (UP).

Ann Harvey (UP) was elected clerk unopposed, and the newly created position of filing clerk went to Sue Wood (UP) who won out over Bob Nobles (SP). Ray Bagwell (SP) bested Bob Grubb (UP) for sergeant-at-arms.

Norman Smith (ind.) won unopposed the chairmanship of the Ways and Means Committee, while Gordon Street (UP) bested Dave Jones (SP) as Finance Committee chairman and Gary Greer won over Bill Crutchfield (UP) for head of Rules Committee.

Three new bills were introduced to (1) appropriate $1,000 to the Fine Arts Forum by David Grigg (UP), (2) create the office of Legislature chaplain by Smith, and (3) send telegrams to Governors Faubus (Ark.) and Almond (Va.) denouncing efforts to evade the decision of the Supreme Court through the abolition of the public school system by Levy.

Furtado Repeats Plea For Good Sportsmanship

Student Body President Don Furtado yesterday repeated his plea for show of good sportsmanship at Saturday's clash with Duke and added that with the victory went the goal posts.

The Panhellenic Council also voiced its desire "to promote and encourage conduct at the game befitting that of Carolina ladies and gentlemen."

Furtado said the captains of the two football teams, the two student body presidents and various other interested students met to consider how competition at the game might be confined to the athletic field.

At the joint meeting representatives decided that "if Duke University is the victor, the Duke students will be allowed to take the goal posts, just as UNC was allowed to do at last year's game."

"I hope that all members of the student body will cooperate with this decision, and if Duke happens to win, all UNC students will stay off the playing field," stated Furtado.

He added that last year Duke won the Atlantic Coast Conference Sportsmanship trophy. "We can't let that happen again," he said.

Chief of Police W. D. Blake said his department was not expecting any trouble but added that they would be on hand just in case. "The Duke game is usually quiet; we have the most trouble at games between UNC and Wake Forest or UNC and State," said Blake.

A statement issued Wednesday night by the Athletic Council pointed out that it "was unlawful for any person or persons to be or become intoxicated or make any public display of any intoxicating beverage at any athletic contest or other public place in North Carolina."

Violation of this state statute is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not exceeding $50 or imprisonment for not more than 30 days.

Paint-Brush Vandals Hit Monogram Club

Dean Robert Cox of Duke has reported that the initials, "UNC," have been painted in yellow and blue "almost everywhere" on the Duke campus. He said that the paint was sprayed on roads, walks, windowsills and doors.

The walk behind the chapel has been painted, but the chapel has been painted, but the chapel has not been damaged, according to Dean Cox.

"We cannot say that Carolina students did it," he said. "We are trying to keep it (the destruction) down on both campuses."

Higher Pay, Better Union Called Needs

Two of the greatest needs of the University are a new student union and an increase in faculty pay, said H. L. Riddle of Morganton, a member of the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees.

Riddle and several other members Visiting Committee, came here yesterday of the UNC sub-committee under the and are on campus today as a follow-up to a full committee visit in October.

The Visiting Committee makes at least one trip to each branch of the Consolidated University each year to survey the needs of the institutions.

Riddle said yesterday any student who has any problem or recommendation may make an appointment with Fred Weaver, dean of student affairs, to talk with the committee members sometime today.

The living conditions in men's dorms could be improved, Riddle commented.

In discussing another University problem, Riddle said new dormitory financing should be done in a way other than through the self-liquidating policy.

Riddle and other members of the sub-committee will have lunch with students today from 12:30 to 2 p.m., among other meetings planned.

From 9 to 10:30 a.m., they will meet with the Council on Student Affairs. After lunch a meeting with Jerrold Orne, librarian, will be held from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m.

Yesterday, meetings were held with Chancellor William B. Aycock, Dean of the Faculty James Godfrey, Law School Dean Henry Brandis, Dean Arnold Perry of the School of Education and the School of Education staff. The committee also were introduced to the intramural program.

Job Opening: Editorship Of Playbill

A new student publication is in the market for an editor and business manager.

Playbill, a magazine which will provide a program for campus activities and coming events, has been authorized by Student Legislature and will be undertaken by the Publications Board.

Interviews for editor and business manager will be Tuesday, Nov. 25, in the Woodhouse Conference Room in Graham Memorial.

The editor and business manager will be members of the Publication Board and compensation will be provided for their work.

Income will be through advertising and office space will be available.

Those desiring further details should contact Curtis Gans or Harold O'Tuel.

The Lands

There are in this world two lands. They are separated by an ocean and are far apart. Yet, they are within sight of each other.

One of these lands is barren. On it vegetation is at a minimum, and there is almost total darkness. This land is heavily populated, and people pursue their tasks by the day. Their life is ordered — ordered by the mores of the group, and for the most part they seem happy and comfortable despite the barrenness of the land and the density of the population. They have their amusements which carry them far from the darkness of night in which they perpetually live, and these amusements keep them continually in a state of something that resembles happiness. So they live from day to day, and hour to hour, without seeing the barrenness of their world and the darkness of their existence.

The other world is radiant. The sun shines perpetually. There are flowers, trees, birds, lakes, all in a myriad of different colorations and in a multitude of different shapes. Light is its keynote, and beauty its possession. Few people live there.

Separating the two worlds is the ocean, angry, gray, and almost unnavigable at any time. It stands as a wall of white, gray, and black to block the foolhardy traveller.

There are people in important places in the barren land who know of the beauty and light of the land across the sea. They know, but do not let the other people know, for by keeping the people in ignorance they feel they save lives and preserve their position. They point to those few, who, not recognizing the ocean's force, have set out to see what they could see and were thrown back against the rocks, the boat destroyed and the people killed. By and large the people listen. They continue at their tasks and mutter about what a fool that person was. And night continues into night.

The barren land is stormy and often when a particularly bright flash of lightning is discharged, a few can see the land across the sea. Most consider this sight a mirage and do nothing about it. The few in important positions issue statements to aid the people who saw the land across the sea and ease their questions about their own senses.

Throughout the history of the two lands there have been some who have seen in those bursts of lightning a better land, and who remained disturbed. Some kept the disturbance internally, and it was not revealed to anybody except through their eccentric actions.

Some, after seeing the land more than once, developed a thirst for knowledge. They looked at the angry sea and realized its dangers, and yet despite this they attempted to go across. They, with their thirst unslaked, paddled hard, but most were crashed against the rocks, and the people of the barren land were unable to distinguish these from the fools that were more often washed against the rocks.

Once, perhaps in every century, one lone man in the tiniest of ships made it across despite the difficulties of the ocean, and after his arrival the water receded a little bit, but the sea was just as angry. Most of these men stayed over in the other land.

There were a few who returned to show the people in the barren land that this beauty did exist, but more often than not they were not heard and died before they could return to the land across the sea.

Yet, through the years many men have come to know the land across the sea, and have sought to persuade other men to take the long, hard, dangerous voyage to the land of light.

And there were men who told of the glories and who ventured courageously across, and others sometimes followed their lead and upon arriving found that they needed no lead. All returned to try to bring back more, and yet, though numerically more as the years went on, these people were proportionally as small, compared to the growth of the people who lived and liked the barren land.

Yet, no matter how numerically insignificant, no matter how degraded, no matter how eccentric, these are the greats — the people who have over the centuries tried to bridge the gap between the land of is, and the land of ought to be.

Variations

Gail Godwin

A little over a year ago, Amanda Vail's first effort appeared on the bookstands. LOVE ME LITTLE was half the size of THE BRIGHT YOUNG THINGS, but said exactly the same amount. Both books deal with the efforts of Emily and Amy to lose their virginity. In LOVE ME LITTLE they f a i l e d. In THE BRIGHT YOUNG THINGS they are victorious - but bored.

Little is known to the reader about the author, except that she appears on both of her novels' dustjackets peering inquisitively out at her audience from behind a mop of long, dark straight hair. There is no autobiographical note, possibly indicating that Miss Vail, like her character Henry Salem - a creative writing teacher - "had a passion for anonymity." Henry's one book was also published without an autobiographical note "'which,'' says Emily "always indicates to me great strength of character on the part of the author."

Emily and Amy are two more cliches from this over-written-about generation. Emily is the college freshman who is discovering for the first time the discoveries that each of us make concerning life while going through our freshman year. The full attention to these discoveries is being diverted by Emily's father who has reached the "age" and has flown the coop for a period of several months. He goes up the street and sets up housekeeping with an old family friend and leaves Emily's mother to the drastic fate of a trip to the Bahamas.

During their Christmas vacation from Northcliffe, Amy and Emily - armed with appropriate womanly weapons - set out to conquer and to achieve their goal. Amy captures Henry Salem, the college's unbelievable creative writing instructor who would never be found in a real-life small college for girls. His vocabulary repertoire is apparently limited to "'goddamn" and his stories fill only on unsuccessful published volume.

"That's why my stories are so awful good. They're full of my marvelous awful sickness. They're RICH with it," he tells Amy as they lie on the couch together on their first date. By April, he and Amy are married, even though all this means is social sanction. "The only change it's going to make," says blase Amy, "is that we won't have to sneak past Mrs. Ard anymore."

Emily does not lose out completely. Her continued single status is made up for by a short holiday affair which dies shortly after the Christmas tree. After this, she is again recompensed by a seven-hundred dollar check which she wins for placing first in a short-story contest. With this money plus the money provided by her reconciliated parents, Emily is promised a trip to Europe and her world is neat and whole once more.

"There would be nothing but the sea and the ship and I on it; like the ship itself I would be: cut loose and left to the mercy of wind and weather."

The book is a home for unbelievable characters: Daisy, the unadjusted plump senior who is always pictured sitting stoically on her dormitory bed in a Zen Buddist position, accepting with the help of sleeping pills, orange juice, and milk the fact that she is pregnant; Arnim and Chambers, two shadowy and inseparable Lesbians who drift from one room to the other; Mrs. Ard, Henry Salem's landlady, who has become a literary expert by reading old journals thrown out by the professors who live at her house, and who has something to say about Truman Capote's poetic tendencies and Albert Camus' well-preserved body. These misty figures plus most of the main characters simply sail aimlessly from page to page, leaving the reader with absolutely no impression of anybody - except that of Emily, who is telling the story and who does us the honor of stopping every now and then in the middle of her narrative to share with us her philosophy on love, lovemaking, cracks on the ceiling while making love, and the faults of parents.

Miss Vail is to be highly commended on one score: that of recognizing a literary trend and cashing in on it. One feels vaguely that she knows what she is writing and writes it anyway with tongue in cheek and palm outspread for royalty check.

Edward P. Morgan

Putting the overplay of maudlin pollyannaisms aside, sometimes, surely a man's finest hour really is in defeat.. Ugly as the circumstances were, bitter as the consequences are, that hour has arrived for a sensitive, civilized Congressman — ex-Congressman now — from Little Rock named Brooks Hays.

For eight successive terms—16 years—Hays, a Southern Democrat, who gave that label a mark of distinction and not disgrace, had served his district and his native state of Arkansas in the House of Representatives. It was he who tried to moderate the differences last year between the president and Governor Faubus, and avert the emotional tornado that finally broke over Little Rock's Central High.

For his pains, Faubus cut Hays down at the polls last Tuesday by a dubious trick which may even yet be challenged in the courts, though not by the victim himself. A man accomplished in breaking pledges even to presidents, Faubus did not scruple to keep a solemn promise to support all the Democratic candidates, Hays included. Instead the governor released his executive assistant, one Claude Carpenter, to help hatch a covert plan sprung in the last eight days of the campaign to confront Hays with a write-in candidate in opposition. "I fought like a tiger," Hays said afterward, "but it was too late." He got 49 percent of the ballots but his opponent, an extreme segregationist named Dr. Dale Alford, beat him by 1,249 votes. Alford ran in a beclouded category as an "independent" and a move has already begun to have him excluded from committee assignments in the House.

But there was no vindictiveness in Hays himself as he returned to Washington today and held the largest news conference of his career. Almost to a man, reporters who crowded his office clambered forward to shake his hand afterwards, leaving their standard shield of cynicism behind. My colleague, Benjamin A. Franklin, was moved to scrawl a personal aside on his notes which read "Hays was gloriously, militantly tolerantly RIGHT about everything. He is a religious but not pious man. He knew he was right even in bitter defeat and it radiated from him almost blindingly." Another awed reporter remarked "if there was ever a Congressman who ought to go to Heaven, it's Hays." Something, I am s u r e while supremacists would agree, must be done to restore some objectivity to Washington journalism.

Hays began by reading a long statement from Edmund Burke which concluded thus: "Your representative owes you not his industry only, but his judgment, and he betrays you instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion." He said he had not been repudiated or renounced by the people of Little Rock. "There is still enough good will so I can be heard." And he intends to speak and speak and speak, at home and throughout the country, hammering at three points on the racial question: a non-violent solution must be sought; the lips of the clergy—both pro- a n d anti-integration must not be sealed; justice must be sought for the Negro on the local level. When a reporter, obviously with Hays in mind, asked for a comment on the fact that while "the people who stand for law and order are punished and defeated, few mob leaders are brought to book," the Congressman recalled an anecdote;

"My daddy, who is 86," Hays said, "once told me about a friend who was critically injured when a jackass kicked him in his barn. The doctor came, examined the man, then knelt over him and said he was going to die. 'I sure do hate to have it written on my tombstone that I was killed by a jackass,' the man said. 'Couldn't you make me live long enough to die of pneumonia?'"

Hays said he wouldn't challenge the write-in move but he hoped others would. "All those Southern boys better look out from now on," he said, "because if Faubus can do it in Arkansas then any governor anywhere can knock off someone he doesn't like in the last few days." A churchman, Brooks Hays will do most of his speaking for moderation in his capacity as president of the Southern Baptist Convention. Four Baptist ministers in Little Rock, incidentally, campaigned against him.

Letter From Olympus

Two completely different views of the nature of contemporary music will be exemplified in a Petite Musicale shortly after Thanksgiving. They will be expressed through the compositions of Tom Rice and Peter Ford, two graduate students of the local music department. While Mr. Rice writes for traditional instruments and relies on the music itself for originality, Mr. Ford writes for revolutionary arrangements of instruments (such as bow-and-arrow, flyswatter, water-hose, bursting-light-bulbs, etc.) and relies on the music for solidity.

Mr. Rice was born in 1933. His music studies were accomplished at the Catholic University in Washington, D. C., with Thaddeus Jones (a former graduate of UNC), Joseph Wilcox Jenkins and William Graves, but he is, as he insists, primarily self-taught, and he relates how, as a child, he figured out by himself the complicated system of music theory. He has played the violin, piano and, in later years, the double-bass, which he now plays in the University Orchestra. He was a teacher of the double-bass at the Catholic University, and he also conducted the Junior Orchestra there.

Interested in Mr. Rice's approach to composition, we visited him in his office and, surrounded by piles of books, music paper, old compositions and Picasso prints, we sat down. Cordially, Mr. Rice pushed aside the double-bass leaning against the wall and took a seat.

"Music should entertain. Anything extra that can be read into it must, of necessity in the case of pure music, be read into it by the audience. The exceptions to pure music would be vocal music, political music and program music. For successful communication between the audience and composer the music must capture the audience's attention and, to do this, it must be entertaining."

He told us that he was now working on an opera on the Perseus-Medusa legend from a libretto by Russell Link, and that it was scheduled for production in the spring.

We bade Mr. Rice a grateful goodnight and proceeded to the Carolina Coffee Shop, where we were to meet Peter Ford to discuss, among other things, his opinions of classical orchestration.

Born in 1931, Mr. Ford studied at Yale University under Quincy Porter and received his M.M. degree at Converse College. He was instructor of the piano at Brevard College in North Carolina and was the composer for, and a member of, the Brevard Percussion Ensemble.

His approach to music is experimental, involving sound relationships rather than music in the usual sense of the word and, as a matter of fact, many of his pieces are titled "Structured Sound," and none of his pieces exceed one minute in length. This is, apparently, all the time needed to achieve the particular effect he is after.

He is the author of two volumes of poems entitled "(!)" and "united states of body-soul". Modestly pouring his second cup of coffee from the new coffee containers at the Coffee Shop, he smiled bennigly and lit a cigarette.

"Music is nothing but a continuum of discrete sound-events in spatial variation . . . a mathematics of feeling, the new being an algebra of the old's mere arithmetic."

Mr. Ford's very algebraic group of instruments includes a water-pistol, electric frying-pan cooking crisco, alarm-clock, balloons, gong, ratchet, flyswatter, typewriter, piano, timpani, 3-way locomotive whistle, party horn, snare drum, window-pane and hammer head, bass drum, woodblock, triangles, water-hose, bow and arrow, 25-watt bulb, cello, double-bass, tambourine, bicycle siren, cider bottle, castenets, high whistle, low whistle, cymbals, mouth siren, glockenspiel, maracas, tone-block, violin, duck-call, cap-gun, tom-tom, bird-whistle and goose-horn, to name a few.

The concert, scheduled for December 7, is free of charge and the public is cordially invited. —C.L.

Janus

I usually count on one stroll down Franklin Street every day. Down the alley past the Porthole and then out to the hurly-burly confusion of our main drag. Saturday nights I head west, make careful note of Robbins' latest window display, look hungrily in Thell's bakery window, then guide my steps to the Carolina to take in the latest flick. Or perhaps I cross the street and peek at the shoes in Alexander's, brief myself on the football scores on Jeff's black board, and try the popcorn at the Varsity. Some days further west—sugar and coffee to buy at Shield's, the New Yorker at Sloan's, and some necessity at Vic Huggins' or the five and dime. I can stand on the corner of Franklin and Rosemary and see the sun set and the lights begin to flicker up from down Carrboro way.

My path on a warm fall afternoon may lead east on Franklin street. Past the profusion in Julian's window and the chic creations of the Little Shop or down the other side of the street with the worn benches and the flower vendors. Check on the progress at the Methodist Church, pick up a package at the Post Office, and then try an ice cream cone from the Dairy Bar. Before I walk on to the place where Franklin Street contrasts campus with residences, I'm drawn into the Intimate, then the tempting sounds gushing forth from Kemps lure me anew.

"Atmosphere" again. I love our village. If I had to choose one place to live, I'd take Chapel Hill, for with all her faults she has many more charms, not one of the least being Franklin Street.

Faults — for any village, town, city, has its faults — but to me, one of these does not appear in the form of a parking meter. We have a village touched with colonial charm but are parking meters any less villagey than, say, the gas pumps at George Barclay's or the very cars we drive? Progress is one of those things we can't lump. It's here to stay and with it come a few things we might not like but may as well accept. There were days without taxes, copyright laws, free public education, days when men were lynched on main drags, plagues ravished the homes of America, our forefathers had to scrape and struggle for their very existence.

No one seems to mind the abolition of smallpox, the coming end of polio; houses with central heating and now air-conditioning; cars which speed along smooth highways with the added luxury of record players, swivel seats, and push button gear-shift. Nobody complains about the free education we're given, or stereo sound, color TV, Cinerama, or a fine first-rate university like Carolina. All of us may not like modern art, chemise dresses, progressive jazz, James Joyce, and a lot of other modern innovations but even the most traditional-loving of us wouldn't go back to living in a colonial home sans plumbing, or wearing celluloid collars or hoop skirts or Saturday night dates via covered wagons.

Progress is here to stay, even on the sunlight streets of Chapel Hill, especially on Franklin street. For $21.90 you can hitch your car to one of those bronze or silver parking meters for one hour every day of the year, all 365 of them. Most of us who can afford cars (those gas eating wonderful monsters) can afford that extra sum and not many of us park down town one hour a day every day anyway—we're home for vacations and summers and we have classes that keep us busy.

Chapel Hill' city fathers have gone out of their way, it seems to me, to be extra nice about the whole thing. If you forget to pop that nickel in the slot and get one of those pretty tickets you aren't even bothered with traffic court—just slide your fine into one of the little red boxes.

Chapel Hill offers us a great deal. Not many villages of comparable size have the variety of stores that we visit on Franklin Street — there are few Intimates, fewer Kemp's. Other smaller and less intriguing municipalities have parking meters and there's no reason why Chapel Hill shouldn't add a little revenue to its coffers.

If they're really repulsive to you there are several alternatives. Sell your car. There's no charge for walking. Squint your eyes and pretend they're gen-u-ine hitching posts, vintage 1804. And there's always the Bell Tower parking lot for those stubborn ones who just can't part with that 1959 Caddy Eldorado. Any other suggestions? I'm listening.

THE STORY OF SALLY

A Fable

Once upon a time there was a pert little girl named Sally who decided to come to college. Momma and Poppa Sally were against her going forth into the world of Sin, but she was adamant. (Actually, she was Sally, but a date once raised the point that she was Adamant too.)

Sally had a terrible time deciding where she should go for her education, but in no time at all a friend convinced her to attend A.C.D.C.U. Off she went, in a Blaze of Glory. (Invicta, Electra, Le Sabre, and Blaze of Glory.) She loved her new institution, for it was covered with ivy (glued on) and had lots of nice looking boys.

Her social life was very very active because she was pert, pretty, and promiscuous. (Sally had changed) It was such a success, to be sure, that she decided that she ought to pledge a sorority. And all the sororities wanted her. But she was choosy and joined XYZ, a good sorority and one with a high reputattion among all those nice looking boys.

Night after night she tripped the light fantastic. (Breaking seven table lamps four pictures, eighteen glasses, and one picture tube in the process.) All the boys thought she was fantastic. Life was fantastic. School was fantastic. Boys were fantastic Everything was fantastic and she had the most gummygummy time in the world

But Sally was not all play and no work. She did her Education every night, thought D.A. 30 was terrific, loved Classics 32, and flunked Music 41, which turned out a little differently than she had anticipated. She made one A, two B's, a C, and an F, which she put off to a lack of empathy with the subject.

Sally ran for Secretary of the Student Body and made it. She was cute and all the voters agreed from the full profile publicity shot. Nothing was in her way. Everybody loved her, and she loved everybody. (Which disproves the age old assertation that one has to be a lover before he/she is accepted by the mass as a "lovable thing.")

In the middle of her senior year Sally became a lover, and her popularity rapidly declined. She was greedy, grabby, and very very possessive about her new boy friend. She kept her roommate up all night talking about him, and bored the entire sorority with the rather poor photograph she pinned on the front of her notebook.

She was a cheerleader, too. That was fun, and became a very adaptable outlet for any exhibitionism she might want to get rid of. In short, life was very good to Sally. It was even better when she dropped her steady and returned to the three P's.

When Sally left the campus no one really missed her. Sure, she had her picture in the yearbook in five or six places, and the girls in the sorority all remembered her, but no one really missed her. And she was a good girl, too — she was sweet, and kind, and a little impulsive, and thought about herself a lot, and pretty, and maybe a little conceited about it, but she was a good girl. So when she left no one missed her — because a lot of wonderful Sallys were right there to take her place.

MORAL: I may have ripped her to pieces in the past, but I've grown to know the Carolina Coed and I think she's pretty doggone good.

Parking Meters--They Draw Praise For Places, Gripes On Police 'Eagerness'

From The Chapel Hill News Leader

Parking meters are causing considerable comment and discussion. Some of it is favorable, some critical. They affect, more personally than anyone, the motorists who must pay the fare—and the merchants who depend on these motorists to park at their store and do business.

To get a cross-section of prevailing opinion on the issue, the News-Leader yesterday took a sampling of comments from eight merchants —their opinion and that of their customers.

In a nutshell, the people like the newly-created parking space, and they dislike just as much the way police are always there with a ticket when time expires.

Here are the comments, unedited:

Store Manager—"I am surprised at the very few comments and complaints we've had from customers. They talked much more about them before than now.

Grocery store manager—"Most of the comments I have received have been favorable. People now feel they have a chance to get a fair share of the available parking space. There were a lot of gripes before hand, but now these same people are favorable to the idea."

Store manager—"For the first two or three days I heard nothing favorable, but comments are kind of simmering down. Then, most of them were pretty irate. I happen to favor the meters, and I don't see where people have any complaints. I've actually had customers who don't put any money in, then run in and out of my store two or three times to see if the police are coming."

Store owner—"I've heard an awful lot of griping. A lot of people haven't become accustomed to the idea yet and are caught without pennies and nickels. When they dash to get change, the cops tag their car. Many customers feel the police should be a little more lenient. It hasn't hurt business any, fortunately, because there is not a large shopping center housing free parking on the edge of town."

Store Manager—"I've heard considerable comment, mostly favorable. Customers express a willingness to pay for the assurance they will find some place to park downtown. My opinion is that within two months, it will be an accepted thing."

Store manager—"I have heard very many complaints but many say you can get parking places now. It seems to me that I've heard folks say that sometimes the cops appear to hover over a meter when it is nearing expiration and then pounce a ticket on it. I think they should be a little more lenient. After all, the meters are to help parking, not to punish people."

Store owner—"I've heard lots of praise and a lot of disgust expressed. Some folks from Durham like the meters here because they can't use anything but nickels over there. And some say they are getting parking spaces downtown now for the first time in many years. I've heard complaints about how the police are almost over-eager, being 'Johnny-on-the spot' every time that little red flag pops up."

Store manager—"There has been considerable griping, but then people often-times are looking for something to gripe about. Many favorable comments have been heard about the availability of parking spaces."

Domitory Social Room Open For Duke Weekend

By NEIL MURPHY

Avery, Parker, Teague, Mangum, Winston, Joyner, Connor and Cobb dormitories will have their social rooms open to coeds this weekend.

They will be open from 12 to 1:45 p.m. and from the end of the game till 7:30 p.m.

Jim Scott, chairman of the IDC coed visiting agreement arrangements, said Wednesday, "We won't be able to make it for the Duke game." He spoke of the plan to open all social rooms for the Duke-Carolina weekend.

Scott indicated that the doors and partitions could not be put up in time for the visiting board to pass on the remainder of the dorms.

In a recent survey conducted by the dean of women's office it was discovered that of 15 southeastern schools only five permitted regular coed visiting.

Of these five all have housemothers or young married couples living in the men's dorms and all have powder rooms for the women visitors.

The five allowing regular visiting were Florida State, Tennessee, Florida, Rollins and Vanderbilt.

Duke, Georgia Tech and Memphis State allow visiting on special occasions only.

Not allowing visiting at any time were Furman, Pfeiffer, Southwestern, William and Mary, Richmond, Appalachian and Emory.

The report sent to the IDC from the office of the dean of women said: "It seems clear that the practice of allowing women visitors in the men's dormitories is far from universal in this sample of coeducational colleges in the Southeast.

"It seems also, that in those schools which do allow such visiting, an adequate structure conforming to the usual requirement of social form, i.e. hostesses present and living in the dormitories, is provided for."

Jim Scott said, "It is the hope of the Visiting Agreement Committee and the dean of women's office that this report will help students realize how privileged they are and at the same time to realize that a great deal of responsibility for the success of this program rests entirely with the individual student."

The plan of the Visiting Committee still remains to open all of the dorms social rooms on one official date.

Cadet Frost Recognized By Air Unit

J. Lindsey Frost has been selected as the outstanding Air Force ROTC Cadet at UNC for the month of October.

A board of five cadet officers made the selection after an interview with cadets competing for the award. The cadet of the month award is presented each month to some cadet at the University.

A 1956 graduate of New Hanover High School, Lindsey is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Frost Jr. of Wilmington. He is enrolled in the School of Education with a major in physical education.

Boston Doctor Is Lecturer At Symposium

Dr. Joseph M. Foley of the Boston City Hospital will be guest speaker at the annual UNC Medicine Symposium today.

The two-day annual event began Thursday. The two guest participants are Dr. W. Proctor Harvey and Dr. Foley. Dr. Harvey appeared on Thursday's program. Over 100 physicians from the two Carolinas and Virginia are attending the symposium.

Aside from Dr. Foley, a number of faculty members of the UNC School of Medicine will take part in today's program. They are Drs. J. Norman Allen, Allan Downie, Gordon Dugger, Thomas W. Farmer, Eugene Loeser, Margaret Swanton and Ernest Wood.

The morning session, beginning at 9:30, will consist of a workshop in cardiology. Small group discussions of individual cases illustrating problems in the diagnosis and treatment of cebrovascular disease, the management of vertigo, epilepsy and other clinical problems will be discussed. The afternoon session will be devoted to panel discussions.

Financial assistance for this two-day meeting has been furnished by the N. C. State Board of Health.

Dr. Foley is a native of Massachusetts and received his M.D. degree from the Harvard Medical School. He is a veteran of World War II.

At the presen ttime he is assistant professor of neurology at the Harvard Medical School and neuropathologist at the Boston City Hospital.

Dr. Foley also is a consultant in neurology at the Long Island Hospital, Holy Ghost Hospital, Togus VA Hospital and the West Roxbury VA Hospital.

Student Show Script Contest Is Underway

A prize of $50 is being offered to the winning script submitted for Sound and Fury, student produced musical comedy to be presented in the spring.

Deadline for entries in the script contest will be Dec. 1, Bob Carter, president of GMAB, has announced. But there may not be a winner unless the best caliber of work is submitted.

The purpose of the contest is to give more students an opportunity to show their skill in writing and at the same time get a script for a future production.

A committee of five persons appointed by Howard Henry, director of GM, and Bob Carter will judge the entries. Carter said he hopes a winner will be selected before Dec. 15. The production is planned for mid spring semester.

Entries may be submitted at either the information office of GM or at the GMAB office.

CADET OF THE MONTH—Air Force ROTC Cadet J. Lindsey Frost of Wilmington, right, receives the letter notifying him of his selection as Cadet of the Month for Carolina's AFROTC Cadet Corps from Cadet Commander, Cadet Lt. Col. W. S. Godwin.

Nuclear Research Funds Said Needed In Medicine

Much of the money which is now being spent on nuclear energy development and space travel might be better spent on medical research to cure human bodily ailments, the director of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory said here last night.

Dr. Alvin M. Weinberg, addressing the North Carolina chapter of Sigma Xi scientific society, suggested that "it doesn't make too much sense for mankind to spend so much money on elaborate technological research when it might be used to find a cure for cancer or for mental illness."

He pointed out how the use of science as an instrument of national policy has tended to affect our science and in some cases has diverted it from its essential purposes.

Formerly director of the physics division and director of research for the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, Dr. Weinberg spoke on "Nuclear Energy and International Science." The program was held in Carroll Hall.

Using the recent Geneva conference as background, he reported progress made in utilization of fission power, using uranium and thorium, and the utilization of fusion power, using "heavy water."

"We are, in effect, learning how to burn both the rocks and the ocean," he said.

Very substantial gains in the fission field are imminent, Dr. Weinberg reported. "In England and many other countries a practical way of producing nuclear energy through fission has been devised."

However, both Russia and U. S. have a common problem in possessing too many other sources of energy for power, to make fission power practical, he said.

"We still face extraordinarily and painfully difficult problems in extracting energy by fusion, which we are not sure that mankind can solve," he continued.

Policy On Cage Tickets At UNC Remains Same

Because of limited seating in Woollen Gym, the Athletic Association will follow the same distribution policy this year on seating at basketball games that has been used for the last few years.

Our first reserved seat game is with Clemson on December 3. Students, faculty members and employees of the University with athletic passbooks must exchange them for specific seating. A priority for the Clemson game will be given to those people whose names start with the letters A - M, and distribution to this group will be made on November 24, 25 and 26.

Any tickets remaining after 4:30 p.m. on November 26 will be distributed on a first-come, first-served basis to anyone who applies. Because of the Thanksgiving holiday period, the first day that passbook holders whose names start with letters N - Z can pick up tickets will be on December 1.

A similar procedure will be followed for the Virginia game on December 8. For that event, people whose names start with the letters N - Z will have a priority exchange period on December 1, 2 and 3. Beginning the morning of December 4, the remaining Virginia tickets will be available to anyone.

This system is worked out to guarantee each passbook holder a priority on certain games. Since all seats will be reserved this season, this will guarantee priority on every other game.

Glen Lennox' Fire Station Bids Are Near

Bids will be received soon on a new fire station for Glen Lennox. Fire Chief John Boone said today that architects are putting finishing touches on plans for the station, which will be near the Patterson-Joyner-Jones clinic.

Chief Boone said details of the new station will be released in about 10 days.

Town Manager Tom Rose told the town's board of aldermen Monday night that signing of a deed for the tract housing the station is merely a "formality." Some $40,000 in town money has been authorized but financing has not been settled, he said.

Debaters Take Second

Two UNC students placed second among 15 teams in the affirmative phase of the Peachtree Invitational Tournament held last weekend at Emory University, Atlanta, Ga.

Participating in negative team competition were David Evans and Clay Simpson. The debate question concerned the abolition of nuclear weapons development.

Second Book By Stick Published By UNC Press

The University of North Carolina Press has published a second book, "The Outer Banks of North Carolina," by David Stick whose "Graveyard of the Atlantic" made the best-seller lists.

Author Stick began working on "The Outer Banks of North Carolina" 10 years ago, studying old records, collecting stories from coastal old-timers and reading old newspapers.

He found so much material on shipwrecks that he digressed to write the best-seller "Graveyard of the Atlantic" published by the UNC Press in 1952 and now in its fourth large printing.

The latest literary venture by Stick covers the history of the formation of the Banks—the Indians, the tales of the "Lost Colony," the legends, the interesting sea history, Civil War battles and Federal occupation and the modern era ushered in by the Wright brothers in 1903.

The story is given of the Outer Bank's early watering places, present resorts and a description of America's first and only national seashore recreational area, the last undeveloped stretch of seashore available anywhere along the eastern seaboard.

The author has woven together local history and national history, including in his book the events of national and world importance that have occured on the Outer Banks during the last 375 years.

Stick also tells of the residents, long dependent on commercial fishing and the sea, whose living now comes mainly from tourists, and who have retained speech and customs handed down from the 17th century.

David Stick has lived on the Outer Banks since he was nine years old. He attended Elizabeth City High School and the University of North Carolina, served in the Marine Corps during the war and was associate editor of the American Legion Magazine after the war.

This committee will work immediately to have students contact and tell needs of the University to their representatives to the North Carolina Legislature. A brochure on needs of the University is being prepared for distribution to interested students.

In appointing Smith chairman o the committee, Student Body President Don Furtado said the Student Committee on State Affairs will work to further the acquisition of all UNC's budget requests.

YOUNG

Narrow Margin Cited

by 273-271, I have been informed by several people of discrepencies which occurred during the election."

Young is asking the Student Council to review the election for the following reasons:

1) No ballots were distributed to the sophomores who were in the Infirmary Tuesday.

2) The ballot boxes in Town Men's II and IV were picked up and taken to Graham Memorial before the election officially ended at 6 p.m.

3) The ballot box in Everett Dormitory could not be located or brought to Graham Memorial until after 8 p.m. on the day of the election.

Young said, "In no way is this a personal attack upon Charlie Graham. Win or lose, I expect to cooperate fully with him in attempting to unify the sophomore class. If the margin were any more than two votes, I would not trouble the Student Council of the sophomore class with this appeal.

"However, feeling that I, as a candidate, have the right to have these points reviewed, I am taking this action."

Jack Lawing, University Party chairman, said yesterday, "Davis (Young) has every right to have his case reviewed by the Student Council. Of course, I would prefer that the decision remain the same; but in view of the circumstances, I would like to see the Student Council investigate the charges."

Student Party Chairman Leon Holt said the SP will stand behind Young and aid him if necessary.

Charlie Graham, who won the presidency of the sophomore class, was unable to be reached yesterday for comment.

The bowl situation, as of now, is as controversial as ever and Carolina is still right in the middle of it. Some say an impressive win over Duke would put the Tar Heels opposite LSU in the Sugar Bowl. The Orange Bowl still has one team to go, they need a squad to throw at Oklahoma. The thing is considerably fouled up, as there are many teams that would like to go and can't for various reasons.

For instance, a team with Negroes on it can't play in the Sugar Bowl. Some of the teams who have Negroes can't play against a segregated school. So it has finally come down to a question of who can go, instead of who should go.

A VICTORY MAY MEAN A BOWL

It appears from here that a Carolina victory over Duke would almost assure the Heels of a bowl berth, although the exact game is still up in the air. Thus, this season differs greatly from last season in that the Tar Heels must be up for the last game and they were way down for the finale last year.

There has been concern expressed that Carolina may have given too much at Notre Dame and has nothing left. This I doubt. There were many bruises and bumps suffered at Notre Dame, but most of the players have healed well enough and squad morale is still very high.

TAR HEELS WILL BE UP

If it were any other game, they might be down. But not for Duke. The members of this Tar Heel team remember how sweet last year's victory was after the sting of 7 straight losses at the hands of the Blue Devils. For this one, they'll be up.

Duke finds itself in a very different position than last year. This year they will probably be underdogs and come into the contest with everything to gain and nothing to lose. They also come in with a most deceptive 4-5 record.

SCORED ON CHINESE BANDITS

The Dukes have dropped three contests by the margin of a field goal. Number 1 ranked LSU is the only team that has really thrashed them, and even at that the Devils became the only team to score against the Chinese Bandits.

No one except LSU has scored more than 2 TD's against Duke. They even managed to effectively bottle up the pin-point passing of Wake Forest ace Norman Snead last week in posting a 29-0 win over the Deacs. Does this mean trouble for Cummings? We think not. Cummings is more experienced and has a better line in front of him.

The Blue Devil halfbacks, Wray Carlton and George Dutrow, have been called the best in the conference. We think Carolina's halfbacks can compare favorably with anyone's and certainly the Tar Heel line has been tough on halfbacks in general. The Heels will have a definite edge at fullback with Don Klochak doing the running.

Duke has been a predominately running team all year. So have many of the teams that have faced the Tar Heels forward wall. Almost everyt eam Carolina has played has been forced to go to the air because they couldn't move on the ground. Duke will have to, and their passing game may beat them.

PREDICTIONS

With a .777 average for the season, we close out with some picks that will be laughed at, made fun of, and ridiculed. Oh well, remember Mississippi Southern?

Carolina 27, Duke 14. The Tar Heels have a superior team all around and the Devils won't be able to stop the passing of Cummings or move against the Carolina line.

Boston College 13, Clemson 13. An upset, and mainly picked by wishful thinking. Should Clemson lose, they'll be out of bowl consideration. Don Allard to beat them in the air.

Maryland 20, Virginia 13. Closer than it looks on the outside, Virginia has a good chance of winning. But the differences in the line will tell, as the Cavaliers bite the dust again.

Auburn 20, Wake Forest 6. Even Norman Snead's passing can't make a dent in the top defensive unit in the nation. Auburn to win easily with its newly found offense and always tough defense.

Well. Almost every team Carolina has played has been forced to explode and they went this one bad. State colses out the year with an upset win over Warren Giese's boys.

We sincerely hope that the students from Carolina won't go over to Durham and start anything by painting statues or something. And it would really be a shame if the Duke bonfire went off ahead of schedule.

University Volleyball League Set

Once again the members of the UNC faculty have lain aside their problems of students to come out and try their hand at volleyball.

There are six teams in the league, and they have taken on the names of a color. These are the red, white, green, yellow, grey, and blue teams. The captains or team managers are Walter Rabb, Dr. Bo Shepard, Pete Mullis, Dr. Henry House, Dr. Bill Peacock, and Dr. Carl Blyth respectively.

Some other outstanding players are President Friday, Chancellor Aycock, and many other athletic faculty members.

Each team is composed of 8 members giving a grand total of 48 players. Also each team will play 10 games in their regular season.

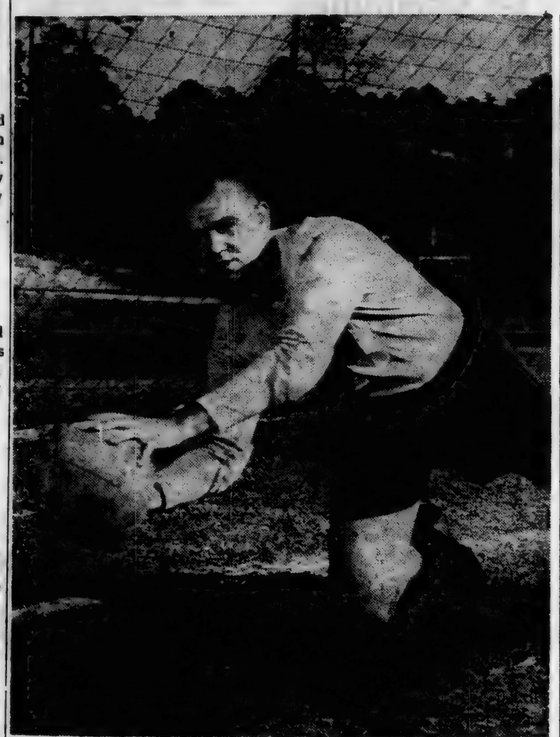
Heels Have 7-2 Record

Booters Face Duke Today



LAST GAME—Captain and Goalie Jim Rattay is one of five Carolina seniors who will see their last action today when Marvin Allen's soccer squad meets Duke on Emerson Field.

5 Seniors End Careers

By JIM PURKS

DURHAM—Carolina's varsity soccer team winds up the season here today when it faces arch rival Duke on the Blue Devils' home field.

Recovered from a 2-1 loss at the hands of Maryland, perennial champions in soccer, the Tar Heels are determined to defeat the Blue Devils and end the season successfully.

Going into the game today, the squad has a 7-2 record, with losses coming at the hands of Washington & Lee and Maryland.

Clinch Second Place

A win today would clinch second place for Carolina in the conference, marking considerable improvement over last year's record when the Tar Heels were beaten by all their conference foes except Duke, whom they tied.

Last year, it took a thrilling goal by Mike Thompson with 30 seconds remaining in regulation time for the Tar Heels to tie Duke, 5-5, in Chapel Hill.

The year previously, Duke eased to a 2-1 victory over Carolina in Durham.

Final Game For Seniors

Today's contest will mark the final game in a Tar Heel uniform for several of Coach Marvin Allen's players. On offense, Rick Grausman at left wing, and Coleman Barks at right wing will be in action for the last time.

On defense, steady fullback Dave Corkey, who played the best game of his career against Maryland, will be in action for the last time, as will halfback Bob Borden and goalie Jim Rattay.

Working with Barks and Grausman on the forward line will be talented sophomore Joe Perkins at left forward, John Ghanim at center forward, and Mike Thompson at right forward.

At the halfback positions will be Bob Borden and Hugh Goodman, who will alternate with Bill Stem, Tom White and Tate Robertson.

Tom Evans will hold down the right fullback position, with Corkey at center fullback, and Bob Quackenbusch at left fullback. Marvin Blount and Jim Rattay will share goaltending duties.

Football Practice

Carolina's football forces went through a light but long workout Thursday spending most of their time on defense and punt and kickoff runbacks.

The freshmen ran Duke plays at the varsity defense as the team continued preparations for this Saturday's traditional battle with the Blue Devils at Kenan Stadium.

Coach Jim Tatum stressed kickoff and punt runbacks during the session, calling attention to the fact that a Carolina back has not run a kick off for a touchdown since 1951.

A capacity crowd of about 44,000 is expected for the Duke game. The Carolina Athletic Department announced, however, that some 4,000 tickets still were available.

SAE Defeats Law School 15-0 To Become All-Campus Champs

SAE fraternity, winners of the blue division, scored once in each half here yesterday to roll over Law School 15-0 and gain the all-campus Intramural tag football championship.

Ed Brunson scored the first SAE Touchdown in the first half, being on the receiving end of a pass from Jim Kelly. Kelly added the extra point, and the SAE's led 7-0 at intermission.

Ben Keyes crossed the goal line with the second SAE score in the second period, again on a pass. The point was no good.

Later in the half, Ed Brown nabbed a Law School back in his own end zone for a 2-point safety, sewing up the win for his teammates.

SAE made excellent use of plays off a short pass variation. They concentrated on moving the ball, and it payed off.

In shutting out the Law School, Grad division champs, SAE defensive standouts were Sandy Ainsely and Ed Brunson. Law School standouts were Frank York and Jim Kiser.

In coming to this final game, SAE had to defeat their own brothers in the division. Law School whipped Joyner, the Dorm champ, to obtain their place.

SAE thus has earned the right to represent Carolina against the University of Virginia tag football champion next year on the morning of the varsity football game between the two schools. Next year this event will be held in Kenan Stadium.

Lively 'Beat Duke' Parade Opens Weekend Of Rivalry

FLOAT WINNERS

Fraternity, (Sigma Nu); sorority, (Alpha Delta Pi); men's dorm, (Mangum); and men's and women's dorm combination.

By JOAN BROCK

"Hark The Sound!" of blue and white streamers, floats, color guards, drill teams, cheerleaders, majorettes, the UNC Band, the Victory Bell, and "Beat Dook!"

Chapel Hill came to life yesterday afternoon as a series of colorful and elaborate floats wound their way in and out among the main streets of the community in the annual Beat Dook parade.

The Alpha Delta Pi float was among the first blue and white creations to appear. Depicting the murder of Coach Murray by Tatum, the float was inscribed with "Et tu, Tatum!" and "We came, we saw, we conquered-" A bevy of lovely Roman lassies flanked the fatal incident.

Next in line were the Alpha Tau Omega scoreboard entitled "Kenan's Alley" in which the Tarheels "bowled over" the Duke Blue Devils and Carr-Grimes' entry of four devils carrying Miss Victory on their shoulders.

"Devils stay in Hell. Tar Heels get the Bell," exclaimed six Alpha Gam angels who were guarding and ringing a huge blue and white victory bell; and the Chi Phis disqualified the Blue Devils from the Orange Bowl by "flushing" Duke from one bowl to another stating "Duke Switches Bowls!" Delta U's "Bugged the Blue Devil" from a tiny foreign car painted like a big bug.

The Chi Omega "Puppet Show" announced an entertaining event to occur in Kenan Stadium this afternoon at which time Tatum's puppets will play Murray's marionettes, and the Tau Epsilon Phis presented an enormous white sleigh driven by the Tar Heels who were 'sleighing Duke."

"Paradise Lost and Paradise Regained" was the theme of the Tri Delt float which portrayed the Tar Heels in heaven and the Devils in hell. Then came the lovely Kappa Delta Vikings in a silver dragon-headed boat bearing the motto, "The win be with us." "Snow 'em down. Ice 'em under," was the title of the Kappa Kappa Gamma snow scene with an iced devil and skaters dressed in blue and white skating suits.

"And the farmer hauled another load away," as the Phi Gamma Delta wagon rolled down the street filled with straw and Blue Devils. The Sigma Phi Epsilon Indians "served up" a roasted Blue Devil on a platter; the Lambda Chi's "Tar Heel Express" had a boxcar for each Carolina victory; and the Phi Delts were after a Duke head with their float entitled "We got the team, now get a head!"

The Sigma Nus depicted the judgment scene with the Tar Heels sentencing the Blue Devils, and the Pi Kappa Phis sponsored a huge moving ram swaggering from side to side down the street.

"Hang down your head, Blue Devils!"—complete with a hanging man, was featured by McIver and Joyner. Then came the Pi Beta Phi's graceful white swan surrounded by several loyal coeds to help "make it Duke's Swan Song!"

The Theta Chi's featured UNC-Duke bowling game and the Sigma Chi's were "grinding Duke" in an enormous meat grinder.

Hard Work And Research Resulted In TB Vaccine

By CHUCK FLINNER

Steadily since 1952 a Gravely Sanatorium research team has worked out methods for producing suspensions of various strains of tuberculosis bacteria.

The chief of the research project, Dr. Stuart Willis, said yesterday this study has led to the development of a new tuberculosis vaccine.

The new vaccine has been used successfully on 6,000 to 7,000 animals, and "at the present time, 1,600 people have been included in human studies evaluating R1, confirming the findings in animals as to its safety."

Dr. Willis said, "At best in America the R1 vaccine is needed only for those who have close contact with TB. Those include: 1) doctors, nurses, attendants, orderlies and hospital personnel, in general; 2) employes in TB hospitals; 3) employes and patients in mental disease hospitals because of the large number of cases in those hospitals, and 4) occasional persons or groups in situations where contact must be continued."

Dr. Willis added, "In countries where there is a high rate of tuberculosis the new vaccine would be a boom."

He pointed out that the vaccine has not yet been produced in quantities for general use. It has not been used in local prevention, he said. Medical students and nurses get the BCG vaccine, an earlier type known as Bacillis Calmette-Guerin, developed from the bovine bacteria.

"We need at least four more years of work on R1," Dr. Willis said. The announcement of the new vaccine is a report of progress to the local, state and national TB foundations. The research is supported by a branch of the national TB association as well as local and state contributions and the Ruth Coltrane Cannon Fund.

"There is still a great need for research," said Dr. Willis. "Although the death rate from tuberculosis has been falling rapidly, the sickness rate has decreased slowly."

The research team at the Gravely Sanatorium include: Dr. H. M. Vandiviere, director of research laboratory; Irene Melvin, research scientist, Dr. H. E. Kennedy, research bacteriologist; Dr. W. H. Gentry, and Margarey Vandiviere, statistician and technologist.

According to Ken Alvord, WUNC-FM's production manager, today's game will be the station's first live sports broadcast.

Newly-Elected Soph President Says Young Has Right To Appeal

Charlie Graham, newly elected sophomore class president, said yesterday that Davis Young, defeated candidate, had the "privilege" of appealing the election to the Student Council.

Young is asking the Council to consider a re-vote of the election he lost by only two votes. The Student Council will consider Young's case Tuesday night and could, theoretically, submit a request to the Elections Board for a re-vote.

In his statement yesterday, Graham said: "It is Davis' privilege as a candidate to take the election to the Student Council. The vote has been recounted one time already. I trust the Student Council; if the Council wants to call a re vote, there is nothing I can do."

Graham was running on the University Party ticket, and Young, on the Student Party ticket.

Duke Is Invaded Unsuccessfully; Teams Will Renew Rivalry Today

Game Results May Decide Bowl Chance

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels today meet arch-rival Duke in Kenan Stadium at 2:00 in a game that could easily decide a bowl bid for the boys from Chapel Hill.

The largest crowd since 1946 is expected for the big battle today, and students have been urged to come early and leave their cars at home.

Duke will be seeking today to avenge a 21-13 upset loss at the hands of the Tar Heels last year. Last year was the first time Carolina had beaten Duke in 7 long years.

Rivalry between the two schools this year has been the hottest anyone can remember for many years. Raids have been made on both campuses, and both teams want this one bad.

After winning six straight games, Carolina last week bowed to powerful Notre Dame at South Bend, 34-24. Duke comes into the game with a 4-5 record. The Devils have lost three games by the margin of a field goal, in addition to being clobbered by top ranked LSU.

The probable starting line-ups:

Pos.	Carolina	Duke
LE	Don Kemper	Jim Bartal
LT	Phil Blazer	Don Denne
LG	F. Swearingen	Art Browning
C	Ronnie Koes	Wade Byrd
RG	Fred Mueller	Mike McGee
RT	Don Redding	Jim Gardner
RE	Al Goldstein	Doug Padgett
QB	Jack Cummings	Bob Brodhead
LHB	Wade Smith	Wray Carlton
RHB	Emil DeCantis	Danny Lee
FB	Don Klochak	Butch Allie

Duke coach Bill Murray has already been hung in effigy by outraged students and a loss today would drop the Devils to a 4-6 slate, their worse since 1923.

A Carolina victory would give the Tar Heels a fine 7-3 record for the season, their best in 12 years. It would also place the Heels in great contention for a bowl bid.

Duke's powerful running attack will be going up against the rugged Carolina forward wall. The Heels lead the conference in both total defense and total offense.

Carolina, the most balanced team in the ACC, will be counting on the speed of Emil DeCantis and Wade Smith, the power running of Don Klochak, and the pin-point passing of Jack Cummings.

Carolina is given the edge in the line by most of the experts. The Tar Heels have one of the toughest lines in the entire country, and

Drinking Law Is Repeated For Drinkers

Spectators of today's game have been reminded of the North Carolina statute against drinking in public:

"It is unlawful for any person or persons to be or become intoxicated or make any public display of any intoxicating beverage at any athletic contest or other public place in North Carolina.

"Violation of this statute is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding $50 or imprisonment for not more than 30 days."

The Athletic Council has called this law to the attention of the student body in connection with the good sportsmanship campaign for the Duke-Carolina contest.

Fray At Bonfire Site Won By Dookies

By ED ROWLAND

An attempt by some 600 Caroline students to storm en masse the bonfire site on the Duke campus Thursday night failed as least 1,000 freshmen from Duke repelled all assaults.

The men from Chapel Hill encountered stern opposition, from Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jeffries, the Durham police and Duke men. No arrests were made.

Jeffries told several impromptu gatherings of students in the Lower Quad and Big Fraternity Court that the license numbers of any cars from Carolina seen on the Duke campus would be taken and the offenders reported to the Student Council for action.

Jeffries sail the names of persons apprehended on the Duke campus were turned in to the UNC Student Council as part of an arbitrary bilateral agreement between Duke and Carolina officials. He said dean of men at Duke, Robert Cox, was informed of any Duke students here as part of the agreements.

DUKE CAR STOPPED

Chapel Hill police Thursday night stopped a car with four Duke students in it on campus. Each had paint on his hands but no paint was found in the car. Their names were reported to Dean Cox.

Jeffries said that as of 3 p.m. yesterday no names had been turned in to him nor had any license numbers been reported. Durham police had no idea how many license numbers were taken.

Nevertheless, many cars did make the trip only to have their attempts to light the fire foiled by alert Duke watchers. Some students got within 10 feet of the tremendous pile of wood on the field near the stadium, and at least one tried to throw a "Molotov Cocktail" on the wood. He failed and the defenders captured him and shaved his head.

OTHER ATTEMPTS

Several others from UNC mingled with the defenders and tried to bide their time until a more favorable moment. This too was unsuccessful. One boy from Carolina had a bottle of gasoline hidden under his coat when he was accosted by Duke men. He could not convince them he was from Duke, so they started to hit him.

He dropped the bottle unnoticed, and tried to run. Brought down by a flying tackle near a Durham policeman, he was beaten and his clothes torn. A plea to the policeman did not save him. Later he walked away from the milling throng unmolested as someone else distracted the bonfire defenders.

'UNC' PAINTING

The Duke Chronicle, student paper, reported yesterday that the letters "UNC" had been painted in various places on the West Durham campus, mainly on signs. The editor Steve Hammer said some of the letters reached four feet in height. He said two columns at the entrance to the Chapel were painted, but no other confirmation of this was available.

ROCKS THROWN

He said that rocks thrown during the peak of the assault attempt on the bonfire broke several windshields and incurred minor injuries on Carolina students. No confirmation of this was available.

Several of the Carolina students caught with gas or kerosene had their heads shaved, he reported.

The Duke defenders were forewarned by Chapel Hill police, Hammer said, so that the raid came as no surprise.

Police reported no personal injury was known to them, and that no damage to property occurred except $75 damage to a passing car during the height of the melee. The car belonged to a man returning home from work at midnight, police said.

AIR ASSAULT

Dave Jones, University Club president, said yesterday the attempt to secure a helicopter to hang an effigy of a Blue Devil from the Duke Chapel fell through because of extreme cost and the difficulty encountered in getting CAA approval. He added that 5,000 leaflets saying "Beat Dook" were to be dropped from an airplane yesterday.

Meanwhile Duke students plastered the campus Thursday with posters showing a photo of a Duke football player with the caption, "Do you recognize (player's name)? You should. He's going to help us beat UNC.'

Grail Asks Good Conduct At Stadium

The Order of the Grail, men's honorary, yesterday joined the many individuals and groups in urging proper conduct at today's game between Carolina and Duke.

The Grail said:

"It is the overwhelming feeling of the members of the Order of the Grail that the conduct demonstrated by the Carolina students at the Saturday ball game will have a strong bearing on the general reputation of the University of North Carolina.

"We therefore strongly urge Carolina students to remember three things:

1) That the Campus Code requires us to conduct ourselves as ladies and gentlemen.

2) That public display of alcoholic beverage is against the state law.

3) That the general behavior of the students in full view of the some 40,000 spectators from all parts of the state and nation will reflect credit or cast disrepute on the generaly good reputation enjoyed by the University.

Why Did It Happen?

Nearly every Friday morning, The Daily Tar Heel carries the play-by-play of the previous night's student legislature meeting.

And on Saturday mornings, we carry more details, filling out the account with the "hows" and "whys" of the legislative branch of student government.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Joanne Hill Scroggs, Julie Ann Wendler, Jerome Melvyn Shapiro, Michael John Turnbull, James LeRoy McMillan Jr., Hector Himmel Henry, Herman Edward Tickel and Julian Willis Bradley Jr.

Duke Game

The hell has been raised or at least heaven has been lowered considerably before the game today. Paint was spread a little too liberally on various public buildings, but major damage to public property or to human beings was nil. Thus, although there was some rowdiness, people were not hurt.

The day of the game can bring animosity to a fever pitch which can result in a riot if either team wins. This does not have to be the case since the victor of the game should be the climax of the excitement. The line is not easy to draw between a healthy rivalry and a riot, but the students of both schools should be responsible enough to keep within bounds and prevent any sort of violence following the game.

TB Vaccine

One cannot praise too highly the doctors who developed the tuberculosis vaccine here at Gravely Sanitorium, and indeed the whole progress of medicine in its goal of saving lives.

In a world seemingly committed to friction, violence, and warfare, the idea of a group of people trying to save lives is refreshing. If men ever come to their senses long enough to realize the predicament that they have placed themselves in by their constant lack of understanding and ambition for ambition's sake, they might behold a glorious world in which the research which goes into TB vaccines and into nuclear development may be used for a peaceful community .

It is rather frightening to think that the work of these men who are trying to save lives through medicine should go down the drain in one glorious deluge of Strontium 90. And it may very well happen. The day may yet come when the world will awaken. It may even now be too late.

Gambling Rule

There has been in the past few weeks an attempt to legislate against gambling uniformly on this campus, and to enforce this legislation. It is curious to note that some of the same people who are so in favor of the abolition of the drinking rule are participating in the crackdown on gambling.

The principles in the gambling rule and the drinking rule are entirely the same—that it should up to the individual to choose whether he wants to drink or gamble and that he should be allowed to do so, provided he does not infringe upon the rights of others. It is not how nor ever has been a right of anyone to enforce his viewpoint as to the evils of gambling on others.

The crackdown is another in a number of incidents which shows the growing maternalism in effect by student government over the rest of the student body. The student body should rebel against any attempts to legislate morality for them.

It is supposed that student government took to crackdown upon gambling at least in part because there are big money games going on and that some students are getting clipped. It is not student governments responsibility to protect the students from themselves. Once they are in college and of college age, they should be responsible enough to have developed a moral code or learned cards well enough to play poker effectively..

Student government should start concerning itself with the excesses which infringe upon others' rights, and deliver itself from morality, for this is something for the individual to develop.

If student government really wanted to protect individuals from going broke, it might do well to invest in some signs which should be placed in front of the doors of experienced card players. The signs—"Beware, Card Shark!"

NUMBER 23 AND THOUGHTS OF YESTERDAY

Is there ever a youngster who hasn't at one time in his life dreamed of being a railroad engineer? If so, I certainly would not have fallen into that category. As a member of the frustrated majority which never fulfills this ambition, I was particularly saddened a few weeks ago by a statement by a railroading expert in Washington that passenger trains would probably fade way by 1970.

Thinking back, I couldn't help but recall that particular driving force that caused my boyhood friends and me to climb out of our beds on a Saturday morning in the middle of winter to see old Number 23 come in from Norfolk. While the train stopped every morning on its journey to Cincinnati, only the freedom of no school on Saturday gave us time to enjoy it.

A quick breakfast and we were off by foot or bicycle to the N & W station. Arriving a few minutes before nine we took our places on the platform, being careful not to interfere in the hustle and bustle of passengers and express carts.

Passengers on a Saturday morning would usually number about six, evenly divided between whites and Negroes. Those with their tickets would be in the waiting rooms gathered on opposite sides of the pot-bellied coal stove which sat in the archway between the white and colored quarters and heated both quite adequately.

By this time last minute express checking had caused the agent to abandon his office, and anyone arriving at the last minute would be more than apt to have to buy his ticket from the conductor.

Over in the express and freight section, the long room was filled to the bursting point with crates and parcels on their way out or awaiting their owners. Outside on the westbound platform two or three big four-wheeled express carts sat piled high with packages to friends and relatives from townspeople and small shipments from local industries and businesses.

Finally, at precisely 9:05, an exuberant steam whistle sounded and the black shiny nose of Number 23 came into sight. The massive engine roared by the station with brakes sparking fire, as the agent hollered for us boys to keep back or run the chance of being hit by a flying loose bolt.

A trainman toward the end of the procession of cars helped passengers into the coaches while we fixed our attention on the front of the train. By now the agent and his Negro helper had pulled empty carts into position by the express cars, ready to receive the steady incoming stream of packages of all shapes and sizes, baskets of oranges and peaches and cartons of chirping baby chicks. When this had been accomplished and outgoing shipments had been loaded on the train, the conductor gave the highball and Number 23 started to glide effortlessly out of town.

As the two brown daycoaches clicked by, we gazed into the faces of the passengers, wondering what it must be like to be traveling as far up the line as Cincinnati or Roanoke.

Soon all was silent again except for the chirping of the chicks and the grunting of the agent and his helper as they pulled and shoved the overloaded carts into the freight room. Whatever our plans for Saturday might have been, we felt we had started the day in the best of fashion.

Number 23 sounded its whistle for the last time years ago. In its place a diesel-electric streamliner pauses at the old station and unceremoniously tosses off a few parcels. Weeks go by sometime with a single local passenger. The agent no longer bothers to put on his black, gold-braided hat which he used to dust off and place cockily on his head a few minutes before the train arrived.

And now from an expert in Washington comes the crowning blow: soon no passenger train at all. It just seems like almost everybody is ganging up on small boys to make their lives as miserable as possible.

On Discrimination

Sidney Dakar

Our age is characterized by a series of desegregation and segregation "purges." In this enlightened age, we are attempting to eradicate with laws the ingrained prejudices of man, a noble, but impossible task. We should step back from the heat of the battle and ask ourselves what we can hope for in the future when we have the integration we are seeking.

There should be a noticeable change in the outward relationships between men, but most of their inner feelings will remain unaffected by laws. We can hope that in the future every man will show a tolerance toward his fellow man. We can hope that there will be no violence to persons or property in the years to come. I believe we can expect very little more.

We can not hope, with any expectancy of fulfillment, that man will accept everyone as his "equal" in the future utopia the dreamers are planning. It is ludicrous to even entertain such dreams. People have never been, are not, and will never be "equal" in many respects. Some are rich, some poor. Some are brilliant, some stupid. Some are kind, some cruel. Some are strong, some weak.

No law will change man's intermost urge for status in society. Status implies various degrees of abilities and characteristics of people. If man did not feel that he was above some people and below others, chaos would result. When a man's status is threatened, his animosity will be aroused toward the person or thing that threatens this status. A great opera star is usually friendly and even helpful to a beginning singer, but this star usually has a secret or open contempt for another equally talented star.

In this fast moving, modern world we are forced, many times without realising it, to make certain generalizations about people and things. We have come to associate various traits with certain groups. Only a dreamer would deny that Negroes, Italians, Frenchman, Chinese, Arabs and Englishmen do not have certain unique traits. To maintain that they did not would be to disregard reality and to deal in fantasy. However, no thoughtful man will deny that many individuals within these groups do not have the traits, good or bad, attributed to the group.

Alas, time does not permit us to examine closely every person with whom we come in contact. We are forced to make generalization when we observe a man's manners, dress, speech and actions. Obviously we will be wrong in some cases, but there is no other way in which we can deal with the vast number of people with whom we meet and still have time for the business of living.

Integration of all races will no doubt come in the future. We can and should force men to tolerate each other. However, we must remember that we can not force men to like each other. Discrimination will remain as long as man has an urge for status and dignity. That is to say, man will always make a distinction as in favor of or against a person or thing. No law will ever or should change this innate nature of man.

"It'll Be Interesting To Find Out What The Other Side Is Like"

Neither Black Nor White . . . Mostly Shades Of Gray

The batallion marched on Fetzer Field. As third platoon, Charlie company rounded the bend ahead and marched under some trees through which the sun filtered down in broken patterns I could see the navy blue of the uniforms change . . . first to the pale blue of Napoleon's legions, then to the olive green of the armies of the Third Reich, then to the crimson that Cornwallis wore.

America has fought seven major wars during its 180 years of independent existence. There has been a war often enough for the young men of each generation to go off and lose their blood and limbs and love for life and life itself.

Sometimes the reasons for our wars have been well-defined; sometimes obscure. Always the basic motivation has been just the desire to go to war. In 1812 we weren't quite sure whether the war would be with England or with France, as long as there would be war. In 1846 it was territorial expansion, unjustified agression, that gave us our reasons. In 1860 the South decided on war when it still held majorities in the Senate and the Supreme Court, and when Lincoln had publicly declared that he didn't intend to for co freedom for the slaves. A generation which had gone for thirty years without the sound of cannon searched eagerly for a battle in the last decade of the 19th Century. They almost succeeded in fighting Britain over a Monroe Doctrine question in 1895, but finally their real opportunity came in 1898. War was declared with Spain even after the Spanish government sent a note agreeing to all the demands the United States had made concerning Cuban independence. With relish the young generation read of the sinking of the Lusitania, the Arabic, and the Sussex and the damning contents of the Zimmerman note. Though no United States property or territory had been attacked, we went to war.

The drum and bugle corps played brassy, banging music that we marched by. With the music we leaned back, held our heads erect, crunched the cinders underfoot in cadence. It creates a feeling of oneness of all those who march with you, gives you some indefinable sense that glory can be attained . . . . I could hear the trumpets at the walls of Jericho, could see the Spartans holding the pass above Thermopylae till the last man had been struck dead.

It must be some driving complex of emotions that makes us want to go to war. Included are personal honor and assertion of manhood, a deification of one's nation which can culminate in such movements as Nazism and Facism, probably, saddism and saddism's close cousin curiosity—to see new weapons used or to see people die. The zeal and persuasiveness of those who want war convinces the few who are unconvinced. Bizarre behavior becomes the norm—Teddy Roosevelt can call President McKinley a "yellow bastard" for trying to avoid war and there is no irate public censure of Roosevelt.

Without difficulty this esprit de guerre, this sanguine quest by rationalization, that universal solvent of values, can be identified with the causes we hold most dear—spreading Christian teachings to the unsaved, offering the gift of democracy to mankind, allowing the world to share in our superior technology and higher standard of living.

The drill team marched, executing snappy commands from the manual of arms, rifle barrels gleaming in the sun and butts clashing dully on the ground. These instruments of war are important. To be assured of safety and of victory a nation must produce the best armaments, regardless of cost . . . . I could see the smoking mouths of the guns aboard the Bon Homme Richard, could hear the V-2 rockets whistling through London's still night air.

Frightening it is to find that the changed economic complexion of the 20th century has dislodged a powerful alliance that had been committed to pacifism in earlier times. This alliance—big business, industry, commerce—was usually slow to ask for war, subverted their warlike desires to a quest for wealth which could be better accumulated in peaceful times.

No longer, though, is war a draining, unstabilizing, economically dangerous pursuit; it has become a prosperity-bringing, expanding, perhaps necessary element of our inflated economy. War and preparation for war seem to have been our only salvation from a visitation of the depression specter. World War II was our deliverance when the specter began to haunt us in 1937 of a repetition of the ills descending on the nation in the earlier part of the decade. Without government demand today for bombs, missiles, planes, and submarines it is doubtful that our automation-elicited over-production could withstand the strain of peacetime demand levels.

I realized as we were dismissed and walked off the field how much a part of man this thing of war has been, how we never have been able to escape it, how we would kill 45,000 at the Battle of Austerlitz, how we would burn alive caves full of the enemy on Iwo Jima.

I wondered if we could ever escape from this obsession, wondered whether the possession of weapons capable of making our species extinct will have any deterrant effect. I walked away and and all I could do was wonder.

Harper's Bizarre

Someday we'll probably get around to writing a column subtitled "Harp's Carps" (see Webster—we did). Which reminds us of an occurrence in our history class recently.

In the course of his lecture, our professor used the world 'antediluvian.' This may not have impressed our classmates, but we personally appreciated it, for we knew what it meant.

That we knew the definition was accidental, for we had only the night before run across the word in the dictionary.
